'In plain language, it means that the international community is being asked to disown its responsibilities towards the world's poor. an overwhelming majority of whom live in Asia'.

'What would then remain of IDA's poverty focus', the Indian delegate asked.

DIFFERING IMPACTS

He said adverse developments in world economy had affected different groups differently. The oil importing countries growth rate 'continue to decline, their terms of trade are at a post-war low, and their external deficits have reached almost unsustainable levels'.

Mr Mukherjee noted, 'We in the developing countries have to tackle these problems ourselves. However, in an interdependent world our efforts alone will not bear fruit without an adequate response from the international community'.

Mr Mukherjee underlined three 'critical and mutually reinforcing elements of a world recovery programme:

—Revival of the growth process in industrial countries,

—Removal of protectionist barriers, and —A rapid step-up in concessional and other flows to developing countries.

The Minister stressed that the role of the fund and the bank in the eighties had to be viewed in the context of this qualitatively new economic and financial environment.

'It is not an environment where problems can be solved by withdrawal from obligations. A crisis demands solutions that go to its root causes'.

Addressing the annual conference U.S. Secretary of Treasury Donald Regan denied that his government had 'de-emphasised' the importance of bank assistance to the poorest countries, but scolded them for spending beyond their means and inviting trouble.

The U.S. official gave no indication that his country would keep its commitment to the International Development Association. Instead he recommended a faith in the 'market mechanism'.

Mr Regan said while governments could sometimes delay the effects of market forces through protectionist measures 'sooner or later the adjustment has to be made'. 'This is the philosophical framework which shapes our attitudes' to the two agencies.

Donors Blamed

Mr Regan's statement came just a few hours after Bank president A W Clausen protested the failure--without blaming it on any quarters--'even to maintain past levels of funding for IDA'.

Citing such successes as the 'Green Revolution' in India, which had been aided by the Bank, Mr Clausen noted that 'IDA is a course, of critical concern to the poorest countries.'

But the World Bank president stressed that 'it ought to be of concern to all the donor nations as well'.

Hinting at the poor nations' vulnerability to social tension Mr Clausen had warned that the consequent civil unrest could 'readily spill over' to the more affluent countries.

Over the past several years, the US has failed to meet its negotiated commitments, and this year some of the other major donors have also threatened to follow suit.

The U.S. contribution for the year ended June 1982 was 700 million dollars--some 400 million dollars less than the 1.1 billion dollars to which it had committed itself.

The IDA on the other hand has no easier job in hand this year. It has to look after a Mexico, reeling under an 80 billion dollar debt and a China joining the ranks of aid seekers.

Uncertain IDA-7

Even as the crisis concerning IDA-6 is being resolved at the current Fund-Bank meetings here, the outlook for any increased level of IDA-7, for which negotiations are due to start by the end of this year, appears not too bright.

The fact is that the U.S. is in no hurry to indicate its potential contribution and the budgetary constraints of many other donor nations are providing a pessimistic setting for the forthcoming discussions.

A senior Canadian official summed up the prospect for IDA-7: "It will be a real triumph of international cooperation if we could have IDA-7 come out at the same level as IDA-6".

The World Bank management had talked of a level of 18 billion dollars for IDA-7 over a three-year period beginning fiscal year 1985, but virtually all donors are believed to feel that it is an ambitious target in the light of the experience in regard to IDA-6.

The Americans had been mentioning a figure of nine billion dollars, with the possibility of going to 12 billion dollars if lending to major prospective borrower--China--is included.

It seems that an amount somewhere between these two figures--15 billion dollars--could be the basis for the coming negotiations.

Japnese Finance Minister Michio Watanabe told a press conference that in spite of serious fiscal difficulties Japan encountered, "we shall try our best so that the amount of IDA-7 in real terms will not be less than IDA-6. (IDA-6 amounted to 12 billion dollars).

There appears to be a growing feeling in some IDA donor countries that India is in a position, and should turn more, to commercial borrowing than going to IDA. This point was recently made during the talks Prime Minister Mrs Gandhi, had in Washington. But she told the Americans that such a stand would mean punishing India for managing its economy well.

[Excerpts]

TORONTO, Sept. 9.

Donors of the World Bank's International Development Association, which disburses concessionary aid to low-income countries, at their meeting yesterday firmed up arrangements for providing IDA fund for the transition year, 1984.

At the meeting, the donor countries other than the U.S. announced they would provide, over and above what they have already paid, resources equivalent to $ 2 billions to enable IDA to continue its programme of assistance without interruption. Including this, a total sum of $ 3.5 billions will be available for disbursement in the fiscal year 1984. The balance of $ 1.5 billions will comprise a sum of $ 1.1 billions, being the backlog of U.S. contribution for IDA-VI, and $ 400 millions representing accruals to IDA from repayments of loans and other cash flows.

Eleven of the donors said they would like to pay directly into the IDA fund, six preferred to pay into a special IDA fund to be designated for 1984 and 14 donors said they would convey their preference in due course. However, the IDA administration was authorised to handle the fund as in the past.

As regards fiscal year 1983, the last year of the sixth replenishment of IDA for all donors except the U.S. which has extended its period of payment to a fourth year, a sum of $ 3.5 billions inclusive of $ 945 millions to be paid by the U.S. will be available for disbursement to the usual IDA claimants including India.

Heavy burden: The heavy financial burden faced by non-oil developing countries in switching from IDA's soft-loan window to the World Bank's commercial loans, was highlighted by the Union Finance Minister, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, citing India's case.

At a meeting with foreign journalists here, Mr. Mukherjee said India had had to borrow $1.3 billions from the World Bank at the commercial rate of 11.6 per cent during 1982 because it was issued only $900 millions from IDA on soft terms as against an anticipated $1.6 billions. By this switch, he said, India would be required to pay $2.2 billions in interest charges alone by 2,000 A.D.

In the discussions at the open session of the Fund and Bank Governors, several Western countries spoke. Among the western countries which lent strong support to increasing official development assistance to developing countries at the annual meeting were France and the European Economic Community. West Germany called for application of strict conditionality to fund loans but lent support for IDA assistance to them.

IDA-VII: On the IDA-VII replenishment expected to commence only in 1985, the Development Committee of the World Bank has directed the Bank to complete negotiations with the donor countries by September 1983 so that legislative approvals could be got in time.

New co-financing mechanisms: No one is prepared to hazard a guess at this stage about the size of IDA VII

On other matters, the development committee took note of the World Bank's efforts to introduce new mechanisms to make co-financing a more attractive vehicle to draw capital flows in the present difficult situation in the capital markets and to attract such capital on longer maturities. At the same time, the committee cautioned the World Bank to see that these efforts did not in any way alter the development character of the bank. Co-financing with private financial institutions should be regarded as a supplement to increased World Bank lending and not as a substitute for it.

Lending for energy development: The committee stressed the importance of World

Bank lending for energy development and urged the executive directors to work on a suitable mechanism for the purpose.

Elected to IMF board: Mr. R. N. Malhotra, Secretary, Economic Affairs in the Government of India, has been elected to the Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund. He replaces Mr. M. Narasimhan, who is shortly taking over as Finance Secretary in New Delhi. He will represent India, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka and Bhutan on the Board. (reports PTI).

The Pakistani Finance Minister, Mr. Gulam Ishaq Khan has been elected the Chairman of the World Bank's Development Committee for a two-year term.

Reserve Bank Governor

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 12 Sep 82 p 7

[Text] TORONTO, Sept 11 (UNI) — India took more loans from private capital markets this year than before, but its borrowings have been within 'safe limits', Reserve Bank Governor I G Patel says.

The country's top bank official was commenting on Thursday on an observation of the International Development Association that excessive reliance on private loans could hurt India's creditworthiness.

In comparison to past, we have no doubt increased our borrowings from private sources', responded Mr Patel when reached for comment. 'But it is within the safe limits.'

He said in the past, India's loans from private sources had generally been of a few hundred million dollars' order, spent mostly on Air India or shipping, which earn foreign exchange.

This year, the country borrowed about a billion dollar from private sources for 'some major projects', including an aluminium plant in Orissa and some oil exploration work, Mr Patel said.

He explained that India's foreign exchange needs are 'very large, indeed', but the country has confined its private borrowings to only what has been felt essential.

Asked if there are plans to increase such borrowings in the coming years, Mr Patel replied the matter was subject to periodic review of such factors as interest rates and soft loan availability.

The association, in a report on its own activities, had noted India's 'impressive' economic performance in recent years, which made the country creditworthy for private borrowings.

On a point of how much IDA soft loans should India get, the report said, 'there is no easy answer...too great a reliance on private capital markets could undermine the creditworthiness it now enjoys.'

U.S. Estrangement Highlighted

[Editorial]

[Text] The discussions held at the annual Fund-Bank meeting in Toronto serve to highlight how deeply the U.S. is now estranged from its partners in the OECD on the critical issues of North-South relations, and the maintenance of international liquidity. As the IMF and the World Bank have been at pains to point out, the world as a whole, and the third world in particular, is facing an unprecedented economic crisis. The genesis of this crisis is to be found in the economic recession in the advanced countries and the prohibitively high interest rates that are crushing the developing countries under a mountain of debt. But while the rest of the OECD wants an immediate doubling of the IMF's lending capacity to enable it to prevent the poorer countries from defaulting on their external payments, and to make up for the dwindling flow of private lending to them, the U.S. alone believes that the IMF's present lending capacity is more than sufficient to meet the needs of the international payments system and is willing only to make marginal changes. The gap in perceptions is underlined by the fact that no less than 12 donor countries have refused to go along with the U.S. decision to cut its contribution to IDA's sixth replenishment by one quarter, and have made their full contribution to it. Most of the others are likely to follow suit.

It is tempting to write off the U.S. opposition to enlarging the role of the IMF and the World Bank as sheer obscurantism. The Reagan administration has, after all, opposed all attempts to start global negotiations and to increase official development assistance to the least developed countries. What is more, it has made plain its hostility to the very notion of combating recession by channelling more petrodollar surpluses to the third world to increase its buying power. But the truth is a little more complex. The U.S. sees the need to increase international liquidity as clearly as anyone else, but wishes to exploit the desperate plight of the developing countries to increase its control over them. Its motives were revealed by its proposal to set up a global emergency fund, to be controlled by the rich nations alone, whose lending would be subject to even stricter conditionality clauses than those applied by the IMF on loans from its extended fund facility. The brazen effrontery of this proposal is breathtaking, for it seeks not only to exclude the bulk of the world from the administration of this fund, including the very countries from which it hopes to raise the money, but to undermine the IMF itself. Fortunately good sense has prevailed and the rest of the donor countries have turned a cold shoulder to the proposal, but it is most unlikely that the U.S. will let matters rest here. On the contrary, it is likely to try and trade off its consent to a modest increase in IMF quotas against the others' consent to the establishment of an emergency fund.

INDIA SATISFIED WITH TORONTO AGREEMENT ON IDA

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 10 Sep 82 p 1

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 9.—The agreement in Toronto on replenishment of the funds of the International Development Association, the World Bank's soft-loan affiliate, is a source of particular satisfaction for India since nearly 40% of the contributions of around $4 billion come to it.

This means nearly $1.8 billion in the next two years in what are virtual grants since the IDA's terms are so soft that they involve no strain in repayment. The IDA levies a mere 0.75% annual service charge and repayment of loans is spread over a 50-year period, with a grace period of 10 years.

Not only will the continued aid enable the country to carry out vital development projects, but will shore up the falling foreign exchange reserves and give the Government a much-needed respite.

For the past few months, the IDA has been approving funds for projects in India with the rider that funds will be committed when they become available. This was because the world financing agency was totally without funds and there was no certainty about how much would be available. In the event, the agreement on IDA funds will greatly help countries such as India at a critical time.

Projects awaiting approval for IDA assistance are in such key areas as energy, power generation, railways, agriculture and irrigation in addition to a host of smaller projects in health and the like. These would have had to be shelved had the agreement not come.

There is still considerable uncertainty over the next replenishment of the IDA and the Government is of the view that work on this should begin immediately to remove doubts arising out of the attitude of countries such as the USA which caused the present crisis. The outcome of the exercises that will now be initiated will, however, not be known for at least another year and possibly two.

NAVY RECEIVES NEW MISSILE-FITTED, SOVIET-BUILT DESTROYER

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 13 Sep 82 p 8

[Text]

NEW DELHI, September 12 (UNI).

A NEW missile-fitted destroyer, the most modern and biggest of its kind in the world, has joined the Indian naval fleet.

The "Kashin" class destroyer built by the Soviet Union is second of its type in the navy, the first being the INS Rajput, commissioned in 1980.

The latest acquisition, christened INS Rana and brought from the Soviet dockyards by an entirely Indian naval crew, has joined the navy's western fleet.

Official sources said the Soviet Union has agreed to give three more destroyers of this class. A fleet of five would provide "effective defence" for India's long coastline and give the navy "a new punch."

These warships are the largest vessels in the world to be propelled exclusively by gas turbines.

The INS Rana is understood to be fitted with four gas turbines, each of 23,500 horse power, and can attain a top speed of 36 to 39 knots an hour.

The destroyer carries four single horizon-range SS-N-LL surface-to-surface missile launchers.

To meet the requirements of the Indian navy the Soviets have replaced the six-barrelled anti-submarine mortars by a structure on which four gatling-type anti-aircraft guns are mounted as a defence against missiles.

PRODUCTION PLANS OF SOVIET-AIDED STEEL UNITS CITED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 13 Sep 82 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, September 12 (UNI).

STEEL plants built under Indo-Soviet collaboration will be contributing about 68 per cent of the total steel being produced in the country, by 1988-89.

The total steel-production capacity in the country by that year is expected to be 20 million tonnes when the capacity of the giant Soviet-aided plant at Visakhapatnam is commissioned.

According to steel experts, the steel sector is a major area of Indo-Soviet collaboration.

This collaboration has helped India attain self-reliance in designing, planning, constructing new steel plants in the country and abroad and undertaking consultancy on their setting up, the experts feel.

The Bhilai steel plant was the first plant to be set up under the Indo-Soviet collaboration in 1955. The plant has already reached a capacity of 2.5 million tonnes and the capacity is expected to increase to four million tonnes.

BOKARO PLANT

The second Indo-Soviet collaboration project at Bokaro was also set up with a capicity of 2.5 million tonnes and is now being expanded to four million tonnes.

According to an expert estimate, the Bhilai plant since its inception has recorded a sales turnover of over Rs. 600 crores.

Negotiations are also underway among experts of both the countries to expand the capacity of the two plants to seven million tonnes and ten million tonnes, respectively.

Meanwhile, preparations are underway to adopt new technological facilities to initially increase the capacity of both the plants to five million tonnes.

Experts observe that while constructing the Bhilai plant, Indian engineers and technicians attained laboratory knowledge of steel-plant making which they applied while constructing the Bokaro plant.

Though 80 per cent of equipment for Bhilai was imported, the same percentage of equipment was provided by indigenous suppliers while constructing the Bokaro plant.

The latest collaboration in steel production will be a 3.4 million-tonne capacity plant at Visakhapatnam incorporating the most sophisticated steel technology from the Soviet Union.

For the Visakhapatnam plant, the Soviet Union had already committed an assistance of Rs. 2,500 crores.

The division list for equipment and machinery for the first stage of the Visakhapatnam plant has already been finalised between the two countries.

Another contract for the supply of equipment worth Rs. 249.33 crores has also been signed between the Soviet Union and Heavy Engineering Corporation, Ranchi, for fabricating equipment for Visakhapatnam.

WATER COOPERATION AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH USSR

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 13 Sep 82 p 1

[Text]

MOSCOW, September 12 (UNI).

INDIA and the Soviet Union today signed a protocol on cooperation in irrigation, water conservation, and some other similar fields.

The protocol was signed here by the Union minister for irrigation, Mr. Kedar Pandey, and the Soviet water conversation minister, Mr. Vasilievyev.

The protocol envisages the sharing of Soviet experience in building earthern dams with explosion blast methods and exchange of technical information in land reclamation and water conservation.

Mr. Pandey, who arrived here on September 5, will leave for Delhi tonight. He came here at the invitation of the Soviet minister.

Mr. Pandey said the Soviet method of building dams with one explosive blast was being studied by Indian experts with great interest.

Such a dam might be constructed on the Birari Khad river in Himachal Pradesh. A preliminary report prepared in this connection was being studied, he added.

The minister said if the experiment proved successful, such dams might be constructed at other places also.

The minister also evinced a keen interest in the way the Soviet Union was engaged in linking various rivers. "We also plan to do so in India by linking the Mahanadi with the Kaveri and some of the Himalayan rivers," he said.

Mr. Pandey hoped that the linking of the peninsular and Himalayan rivers would help in solving the perennial problems of drought and floods in India.

Other subjects which the Indian minister discussed with Soviet specialists cover the exchange of information on rock mechanics for building tunnels, elimination of growth of weeds in canals and underground water resources.

Mr. Pandey said a team of Indian experts would soon visit the Soviet Union to study the way weeds are eliminated in Soviet canals. A special type of fish was being widely used in these canals.

PTI adds: A 25-member advance party of experts left here for Moscow today to prepare the groundwork for the Indo-Soviet joint commission meeting starting on September 15 and the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Soviet visit from September 20.

The external affairs minister, Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao, who is co-chairman of the commission, will leave for Moscow on September 14.

RECORD TRADE DEFICIT REPORTED DESPITE EXPORT RISE

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 13 Sep 82 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 12.—With imports in 1981-82 now placed at Rs 13,446.73 crores and exports at Rs 7,560.35 crores, the trade deficit has been a record Rs 5,886.38 crores. The deficit was Rs 5,813 crores the previous year.

The deficit has been registered despite a 13.3% rise in exports over 1980-81 and is mainly because of a hefty 10% rise in imports—a surprising development considering the low quantity and value of the crude and petroleum products imported.

Crude and petroleum imports in 1981-82 were 20.1 million tons (worth Rs 5,161 crores) compared to 23.5 million tons (worth Rs 5,268 crores) in the previous year.

The deficit is partially caused by the higher units value of the imports, which was an average of Rs 2,568 a ton 15% over the previous year's average.

Imports of items like fertilizers, non-ferrous metals, vegetable oil, rough, precious and semi-precious stones declined in 1981-82. The import figures for the year show a substantial commodity-wise variation.

More iron and steel manufactured metals (12%), synthetic and regenerated fibre (79%), paper and paper board (34%) and chemicals (9%) have been imported this year.

Wheat worth Rs 193 crores was imported. Sugar and cement too were imported.

The exports of several primary and manufactured products showed an improvement over the preceding years.

The products whose exports registered a fairly good increase included tobacco unmanufactured (58%), cashew kernels (20%), rice (53%), oil cakes (11%), marine products (24%), iron ore (13%), mica (58%), leather and leather manufactures (excluding footwear) (11%), chemicals and allied product (54%), gems and jewellery (12%), and machinery and transport equipment (15%).

FOREIGN OFFERS TO BUILD POWER PROJECTS CONSIDERED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 13 Sep 82 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 12.—The Government is considering at least 13 offers by foreign companies in 10 countries to build thermal and hydro-electric stations in India to overcome the acute power shortage in most parts of the country.

The offers are accompanied by financing packages worth roughly Rs 7,000 crores, that contain proposals for raising funds from commercial markets, export credits and aid from the governments of the countries to which the companies belong so that the shortage of internal resources need not be a problem.

So far, the Government has accepted only a British offer to set up a super thermal power station at Rihand by a consortium led by Northern Engineering Industries and indications have been given to Mitsubishi of Japan that it will be awarded a similar contract.

Other offers have come from West Germany, Switzerland, France, Italy, Sweden, Poland, Yugoslavia, Austria and Canada. All are detailed proposals, most of them linked to specific projects, although a few are general and give the option to the Government to choose the site of the proposed plant.

Two offers from the West German firms of Deutsche-Babcock and Aktein-Gesel-Ischaft are for setting up a 2,000 MW thermal station on a turnkey basis and for two 500 MW units at Chandrapura. It has mentioned the possibility of capital aid by the West German and other Governments, buyers and export credits and Eurodollar loans, most of them on easy terms.

Brown Boveri and Company of Switzerland has offered to raise 85% of the financing at low export credit terms for the supply of equipment, erection and commissioning of power projects by using local supply and services.

Two French companies, Alsthom-Atalantigue and Cgre-Alstucm have submitted proposals for a 800 MW thermal plant on a turnkey basis and to build and finance the Naptha-Jhakri project.

Two Italian companies, Ansaldo and Electroconsult have proposed the setting up of a 600 MW power plant with associated coal mines and the implementation of a power project on a turnkey basis, preferably a hydro-electric project. Both have offered to arrange export credits and commercial loans.

Similar terms have been offered by a Swedish firm for a turnkey installation of a pulverized coal-fired 400 MW power station worth around Rs 320 crores.

Long-term credits have been offered for two power stations of 840 MW and 1,800 MW at a total cost of around Rs 690 crores by Elecktrim of Poland. Full financial and technical assistance for development of associated coal mines has also been offered.

Although it has not indicated the price, Ingra of Yugoslavia has offered to supply units for thermal stations up to 300 MW capacity and hydel stations of up to 200 MW capacity. It has said it could arrange 80% of the cost of the equipment imported on credit.

Elin of Austria has offered to build and commission the complete hydel plant at Doyang. Although the price has not been indicated, it says it can arrange 85% of the cost through a long-term loan and the rest through Eurocurrency borrowings.

The Canadian International development agency has identified two hydel projects, the Chamera and the first stage of the Dhauli-Ganga at a total cost of $1,250 million to be financed through soft credits and export credits.

REPORT ON FINANCE MINISTER'S WASHINGTON VISIT

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 12 Sep 82 p 1

[Text]

WASHINGTON, September 11 (UNI).

THE finance minister, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, today completed two days of intensive discussions with the U.S. treasury secretary, Mr. Donald Reagan, the commerce secretary, Mr. Baldridge, key state department officials and representatives of the U.S. industry and commerce, and seemed satisfied with the results of the talks.

During his talks with Mr. Baldridge yesterday, he pointed out that Indo-U.S. trade ought to do better. Though the U.S. was India's largest trading partner, the volume of trade was only $3 billion, of which India's exports were $1.25 billion and imports $1.74 billion.

He underlined the fact that India had approved an average of 500 industrial collaborations a year during the last two years and of these, a 100 each year were with the U.S.

Mr. Mukherjee also conveyed to Mr. Baldridge India's complaint about U.S. restrictions on industrial fasteners and castings. Discussions will continue on this at the official level.

IMF QUOTA

Mr. Mukherjee told a press conference after his meeting with Mr. Reagan today that he got the impression that the U.S. would agree to an increase in IMF quota. It was too early to predict how much that would be and what would be the size of IDA, which was also discussed.

The finance minister emphasised to Mr. Reagan that there should be no differentiation between members and objective criteria should be followed.

This was with reference to the proposal to charge different rates of interest from different members. This, however, is only an idea that has been mooted in a World Bank study and is not formally before governments. Nor is the proposal for charging interest for that matter. At present, there is only a service charge of 0.75 per cent.

Addressing the Indo-U.S. business council in Washington, Mr. Mukherjee pointed out that 75 per cent of manufactures in India were produced by private industry. There was a great deal of talk in the U.S. about government regulation of business in India. A developing country like India must have regulation in order to make the best use of limited capital available.

At a time when the rest of the world was going more and more protectionist, India had liberalised its import policy courageously though she could not continue to do so over a period of time without freer access to her exports in the developed countries' markets.

Mr. Mukherjee said India was pursuing more pragmatic policies with regard to foreign investment. In a 100 per cent export industry, foreign investment, even up to a 100 per cent, could be permitted. Indian companies were also being permitted to borrow from abroad.

CONCERN OVER FALLING EXCHANGE RESERVES REPORTED

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 11 Sep 82 p 9

[Article by J. D. Singh]

[Text]

NEW DELHI, September 10.

A STEEP and steady fall in foreign exchange reserves is causing great concern in the government, faced with declining exports and a rising import bill.

The outlook for exports is far from encouraging in the context of recessionary trends in the Western countries. At the same time, India is obliged to undertake heavier imports and pay more for them because of rising prices abroad.

In the past 17 months, the foreign exchange reserves (excluding gold and special drawing rights) fell by a substantial Rs. 1,166 crores — from Rs. 4,800 crores on April 1, 1981, to Rs. 3,634 crores on August 13, 1982.

If we take into account the drawals from the International Monetary Fund under the special facility totalling five billion SDRs, the fall in reserves becomes even more ominous.

The drawals from the IMF so far total Rs. 1,575 crores — Rs. 950 crores in the first year ended June, 1982, and Rs. 625 crores as the first instalment of the second year in July, 1982. Two further instalments of Rs. 625 crores each will be due in October and December next.

HIGH DRAWDOWN

If we add up the relevant figures, it is clear that the drawdown on the foreign exchange reserves has been as high as Rs. 2,741 crores since April 1, 1981.

This decline in the reserves in the past three years is in sharp contrast with previous experience. From Rs. 438 crores in 1970-71, the reserves rose to Rs. 610 crores in 1974-75 and doubled in each of the following two years to reach a total of Rs. 2,863 crores in 1976-77. In 1978-79, they achieved the record figure of Rs. 5,219 crores.

With a hefty increase in the prices of petroleum and its products and larger imports of industrial raw materials and fertiljsers, India's import bill has touched a new high. Petroleum and its products constitute 50 per cent of the import bill and consume about 75 per cent of our export earnings.

While the value of our imports has gone up, many of our commodities fetch a lower price in the international market today. Our external trade thus continues to be under severe strains, with a mounting trade deficit — Rs. 5,813 crores in 1980-81 and only slightly less in 1981-82.

The adverse trends in the terms of trade have made India's balance of payments position quite precarious.

The likelihood of current account deficits in the coming years, as the World Bank president has cautioned, means that India's investment programme will rely more on external resources than in the 1970s.

With concessional aid flows declining, the task of adjusting India's exchange position has become "at once both more complicated and more pressing."

The fall in the funds available to the International Development Association in 1982 caused a change in the blend of World Bank and IDA funds, with greater reliance having to be put on the costlier World Bank loans. This change has greatly increased the average cost to India of borrowings and will add to its debt-servicing burden.

If India has, in addition, to resort to commercial borrowings at higher rates of interest, its balance of payments position may become even more critical.

The only silver lining in this dark cloud are the invisibles like remittances from Indians abroad, though the future trends even here remain uncertain.

INDO-MALAYSIAN VENTURES RAPPED FOR POOR SHOW

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 11 Sep 82 p 14

[Article by Dilip Mukerjee]

[Text]

KUALA LUMPUR, September 10.

INDIAN joint ventures here have been rapped on the knuckles before but never as sharply as on Wednesday night by the Malaysian minister for trade and industry, Tengku Ahmed Rithauddeen.

The ventures invited the censure by holding a dinner, the first of its kind, at which the minister was the chief guest. He took the opportunity to present a detailed critique of their performance, highlighting that "an inordinate number" of the 34 ventures in production field "appear to be floundering".

He also spoke of "a crisis of confidence" about Indian entrepreneurial capabilities, the reason why the government's industrial development authority was finding it increasingly difficult to find Malaysian investors to team up with Indian firms wanting to come here.

Tengku Rithauddeen's scathing criticism was in substance no different from what his predecessor Dr. Mahathir Mohamad (now prime minister) had said to the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry at a dinner in his honour in New Delhi almost two years ago.

Tengku Rithauddeen suggested, as his predecessor had done, that the Indian business community should undertake an in-depth study of the problems affecting the ailing Indian enterprises and find remedies for them in consultation with the Indian government.

He noted that such a study had been made by an Indian consultant for the United Asian Bank here, which itself was a joint venture. "Perhaps this report should be revived and resubmitted"; he said.

Although he did not mention it, another study was subsequently undertaken by the Indian Investment Centre in New Delhi at the instance of the ministry of commerce. But there is no information here on what conclusions that ministry or others drew from the findings.

Tengku Rithauddeen argued that Malaysia should be India's show window because the number of Indian joint ventures here was the highest in any country. "I would urge all of you to help so that Malaysia can be a model of successful ventures, an inspiration to the future generation of Malaysians and also to the other countries in this region and the world," he said.

He said he felt confident from all that he had seen and heard that "India has the potential to contribute in greater measure to our industrial development".

The minister took his hosts by surprise as was evident from the speeches made by the two Indian speakers — the high commissioner, Mr. Prakash Shah, and, the managing director of the Tata Truck Assembly plant, Mr. B. T. Mody. Neither made any mention of the problems the minister had raised, with Mr. Shah, in fact, confirming that the bulk of the Indian stake in these ventures would continue to be in the form of plant and equipment from India.

This is where the rub lies. For India which itself needs all the capital it can mobilise from abroad, investment in any other form is not feasible. The Malaysian side argues that this leads to two difficulties, one being lack of adequate finance to tide over teething troubles or to pay for the promotion efforts needed to carve out a niche in an open market subject to fierce competition from suppliers around the world.

Secondly, the equipment from India may not be wholly suitable to meet more demanding consumer requirements. "This precludes projects from seeking more updated machinery and know-how from other sources". Tengku Rithauddeen complained. He asked that the choice of plant and equipment be made by the joint venture partners on the basis of international tenders "to dispel any suspicion among Malaysian investors about the quality and suitability of Indian equipment".

If Indian companies could compete successfully to get Malaysian government contracts in international biddings, he saw no reason why Indian companies could not do the same in a joint venture context.

Obviously, India cannot afford to enter into joint ventures with such open-ended commitments to find its share of foreign financing. A possible alternative is a trilateral venture to bring in a partner from an industrial country as the Tatas have successfully done in the case of a palm oil mill.

Conceptually, the same way out has been adopted by the Tata Truck Assembly operation by adding to its range east European trucks to meet Malaysia's growing demand for bigger vehicles India is not geared to make.

The essential point is that the technology needed to succeed in an open market may not always be available from India as the record of a loss-making textile will brings out. Poorly capitalised and unable to met the challenge of quality from Japanese affiliates, its plight brings out a basic change in Malaysian policies in the past decade.

The textile mill started when the emphasis was on import substitution behind high tariff walls, providing Indian entrepreneurs with a congenial and familiar environment. This is no longer the case, and the thrust now is towards internationalising the economy because of the small size of the domestic market.

One consequence of this situation is the importance of vigorous marketing, a field in which Indian companies are handicapped by their resource constraints.

All this notwithstanding, there are more joint ventures in the pipeline with 75 approved until April 1982. As Mr. Mody said, the operating ones employed 7,481 persons directly and now had annual sales of 600 million Malaysian Ringgits (Rs. 7 crores). This contributes, he claimed, to saving or earning Rs. 21 crores in foreign exchange.

Judging from Tengku Rithauddeen's comments that the high incidence of failure among these enterprises might have been due to the fact that "we have not been too selective", it would seem that entrants in future would be subject to stricter scrutiny.

IDEAS ON PARLIAMENTARY REFORM GAINING GROUND

Madras THE HINDU in English 10 Sep 82 p 9

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 9.

After the recent remark of the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, that she was disappointed with the present functioning of Parliament, a number of politicians and constitutional experts with the right connections have started giving serious thought to how best the system could be improved through procedural changes, without going in for any major alterations in the basic structure of the Constitution.

One of the suggestions is that there should be a committee system for discussing legislation in depth before it is debated on the floor of the two Houses. It would enable the Government to curtail both the number and duration of sessions to enable the Ministers to concentrate more on administration.

There are three sessions of Parliament a year at present which last from five to six months, depending on the volume of legislation and the nature of interruption of the daily business through politics of confrontation and excessive preoccupation with exposures of infractions in high places.

The intention is to reduce the total duration of the three sessions to about four months, while the Committees will be sitting for at least eight months in a year for transacting the main parliamentary business without hindrance.

Dignity of Parliament: Another suggestion deals with the desirability of evolving a code of conduct agreed to between the ruling party and the opposition for avoiding noisy scenes that mar the dignity of Parliament and create a free-for-all atmosphere. It is proposed that the party leaders including the Prime Minister should meet once a week in the Speaker's chamber to decide how best the debates should be conducted, giving all parties due opportunity to put forward their viewpoints on various issues without heckling and interruption.

Speaker's role: The Speaker will be requested to take the lead in establishing a convention with the concurrence of the Government and the Opposition that, if any member had some disclosure to make, of any improprieties or had to ventilate a grievance, he should, in the first place write to him. The Speaker's office will refer the complaint to the Minister concerned through the Prime Minister's Secretariat to ascertain facts and communicate them to the member concerned within a prescribed time-limit. If the Minister does not provide a satisfactory explanation and gives the impression of holding back the relevant information, the member would be entitled to raise the issue on the floor of the House with the Speaker's permission.

Dropping Minister: In the event of the Minister concerned still with holding the necessary information, the member will be entitled to demand a reference of the issue to the Privileges Committee. It will be obligatory on the part of the Prime Minister to drop the particular Minister from the Cabinet, if the Committee finds him guilty of denying the relevant information from Parliament.

LARGE ORDER OF PROCESSED FOOD FOR SHIPMENT TO USSR

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 9.--India will export 50,000 tons of processed food and vegetables to the Soviet Union during the current financial year, reports UNI.

Mr P. S. Srinivasan, secretary of the Processed Foods Export Promotion Council, said here that this was the largest order for processed food from a single foreign market and would fetch the country about Rs 45 crores. He said the exports would include jams, juices, pickles, chutneys and other such items.

Mr Srinivasan said: "We have already exported about 6,000 tons and hope to fill the bill within the allotted time".

He said India was exporting processed food to the USA, the U.K., Switzerland, the Federal Republic of Germany and many African countries. "We are also exporting processed food and fresh mutton to a number of West Asian countries", he added.

During 1980-81, the country exported processed food items worth over Rs 175 crores compared to Rs 163 crores during the previous year, registering an increase of more than 7%, he said.

"But during the current financial year, the export target for processed food items is about Rs 320 crores, of which exports worth Rs 58 crores have already taken place", Mr Srinivasan said.

He, however, regretted that the country was still way behind in the export of these items because of the absence of large-scale economically viable business units in the field, limited domestic demand and inadequate profits.

Mr Srinivasan said once the manufacturers were secure in the domestic market, they could bear the risk of increased production and exports would pick up. To assist the dealers, he said, the council has been conducting research from time to time to assess the changing international demand.

TRADE WITH FRG--Bombay, Sept. 11. After unprecedented growth during 1981, Indo-German trade appears to be stagnating at the high level attained during the previous year, according to a press note issued by the Indo-German Chamber of Commerce. India's exports to Germany increased by 2.6 per cent to Rs. 276 crores in the first six months of 1982, while imports from Germany decreased by 2.5 per cent to Rs. 368.3 crores. The decrease in German imports is mainly due to a major decline in items which make a substantial contribution to the total, namely iron and steel with minus 16 per cent and chemical and pharmaceutical products with minus 25.6 per cent. INDO-SOVIET POWER ENGINEERING GROUP--Bombay, September 12: The Indo-Soviet working group on power engineering, set up in 1981, has prepared a 3-year draft programme for co-operation between the two countries which will be discussed and approved at a meeting of the working group in New Delhi shortly, it is learnt. The main task of the group is to co-operate in the construction of power projects in India, in setting up a single power grid system, to organise a centralised service for the operation and repair of power equipment, improve the specialisation of Indian power engineers and to exchange know-how. It will also arrange investigation of the lake Rihand to use its waters for the thermal power stations of the Singrauli district. According to Mr. Pyotr Neporozhny, the USSR minister of electric power development and electrification, a project has been prepared for a mathematical and hydro-thermal modelling of the lake Rihand reservoir. Giving a review of the progress in the implementation of the December 1980 agreement, Mr. Neporozhny has said the work on the Vindhyachal Thermal power plant was progressing satisfactorily. Similarly, in order to increase reliability, reduce accident rate and to modernise their equipment, the Soviet Union has sent teams of power engineers to Patratu, Neyveli, Obra and Harduaganj thermal power stations. SOVIET COAL TECHNOLOGY--Bombay, September 12: Mr. Boris Bratchenko, the Soviet minister for Coal Industry, has said that his country was willing to aid India in building fuel and energy complexes. He noted that the pattern of coal development in India needed to be changed from the designing and building of individual coal enterprises to the creation of fuel and energy complexes, including coal mines, opencast pits, and power stations. The Soviet Union's experience would help India in the creation of such complexes, he said. Soviet organisations were prepared to help technically in sinking the main inclined and two vertical shafts of the Janira mine and in using the Soviet shield system of mining coal beds at the Tipong mine of the Makum deposit, he said. AID TO NIGERIA--Calcutta, Sept 12 (PIT)--India will provide management and technical know-how to Nigeria for the manufacture of cables there. A five-year contract, with a provision for extension was recently signed between Mr B C Okwo, managing director of Benmax Cables, Nigeria, and Mr Rajive Kaul, managing director of National Insulated Cable Company of India Limited (NICOO). Besides manufacturing of power cables, Benmax would be conducting diversification and marketing research studies in close co-operation with its Indian counterpart. NICOO would also be responsible for drawing up a feasibility report for the new cable project in Nigeria. Plant and machinery worth Rs 30 lakhs was expected to be exported shortly from India to Nigeria for the project, Mr Kaul said. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 13 Sep 82 p 7]

INDO-AFGHAN TRADE TALKS--New Delhi, Sept. 7.--Trade and economic relations between India and Afghanistan were discussed here today when a three-member Afghan trade delegation led by Mr G. H. Bayat, president of the Foreign Trade Department, called on Mr Abid Hussain, Commerce Secretary. Mr Hussain urged the Afghan delegation to increase imports from India, particularly non-traditional goods. [Text] [Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 8 Sep 82 p 9]

AID TO NEPAL--Kathmandu, September 10 (UNI-DPA): India will provide Nepal 10,000 tonnes of rice as urgent foodgrain assistance. The announcement here today said 5,000 tonnes would be made available in October and the rest in November. Nepal, normally a rice-exporting country, is facing a massive food shortage as a result of delayed rains. It exported over five-lakh tonnes of rice to India from the previous harvest. Nepal is expected to receive over 40,000 tonnes of international food aid. It has also asked the United States, West Germany, Britain and France for help. MANEKA GANDHI PARTY--New Delhi, September 9: Mrs. Maneka Gandhi's new political party will not be formed this year. Indications are that plans for the proposal party may not be ready until early next year. Referring to news reports about her party following her press conference last month, Mrs. Maneka Gandhi said she had been inaccurately reported about the party being formed in mid-October. According to her, scrutiny of enrolment and other matters would begin in mid-October and time would be needed to formulate the party constitution, its manifesto and other details. EXPORTS TO ASEAN DOWN; COMMON MARKET IDEA VIEWED

[Text] Jakarta, 9 Oct (ANTARA/OANA)—Indonesian exports to the four other ASEAN member countries totaled U.S.$2,233 million in 1979, rising to U.S.$2,759 million in 1980, only to drop to U.S.$2,683 million in 1981 because of the world recession.

Data obtained by ANTARA from the Ministry of Trade and Cooperatives showed that of the ASEAN countries, Singapore continued to be Indonesia's chief market, followed by the Philippines, Malaysia and Thailand.

In 1973 and 1974 Thailand used to top the Philippines in terms of Indonesian exports, but increased Indonesian oil exports to the Philippines pushed Thailand down to fourth place in the years 1975 to 1981.

Exports to Singapore in 1979 totaled U.S.$1,964 million, rising to U.S.$2,484 million in 1980, but dropping back to U.S.$2,177 million in 1981.

The exports were composed of oil and natural gas to a large extent, making up some 49.5 percent of exports in 1979, 55.2 percent in 1980 and 55.7 percent in 1981.

The oil and natural gas exports to Singapore amounted to U.S.$1,214 million (55.7 percent) in 1981, with non-energy exports accounting for U.S.$964 million (44.3 percent).

Commodities exported by Indonesia to Singapore outside oil and natural gas included rubber, timber, electronic goods, coffee, rattan and textiles.

Indonesian exports to the Philippines in 1980 totaled U.S.$181 million, rising to U.S.$411 million in 1981, due largely to an increase in oil and natural gas from U.S.$169 million in 1980 to U.S.$379 million in 1981.

Indonesian oil and natural gas exports to the Philippines formed the bulk (90-97 percent) of all exports to that country in the last five years.

Indonesian exports to Malaysia totalled U.S.$66.2 million in 1979, dropping to U.S.$59.9 million in 1980 and U.S.$59.7 million in 1981.

Indonesian exports to Malaysia in 1981 were composed of non-oil and non-gas commodities, including timber, rubber, tin, electronic goods and coffee.

Exports to Thailand stood at U.S.$37.5 million in 1979, going down to U.S.$34.7 million in 1980 and rising slightly to U.S.$35 million in 1981. The chief export commodity to Thailand in 1981 was timber valued at U.S.$26.4 million or 75.5 percent of the value of all exports.

Indonesia's balance of trade with other ASEAN countries as a whole was in favour of Indonesia to the tune of U.S.$980.7 million in 1981, mainly accounted for by Singapore (U.S.$934 million), followed by Malaysia (U.S.$158 million) and the Philippines (U.S.$0.1 million), with Thailand giving a U.S.$111 million deficit for Indonesia.

On the idea of an ASEAN Common Market proposed recently by Philippine Minister of Agriculture Arturo Tanco, the official spokesman of the Ministry of Trade and Cooperatives, Syukri Alimuddin, said Indonesia is now studying the proposal.

He noted that such a common market would be intended to face non-ASEAN countries, because for expanding trade within ASEAN there already is an ASEAN preferential tariff arrangement (PTA).

Indonesia under the PTA has issued tariff concessions amounting to up to 60 percent for various commodities. But on the other hand, Singapore has yet to make concessions from its part, because its tariff rate has kept on standing at zero percent, so that the PTA actually does not affect its trading, Alimuddin said.

SUBROTO ON NATIONAL GAS EXPORTS, ENERGY SITUATION

BK140915 Jakarta OANA in English 0734 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Jakarta, 14 Oct (ANTARA/OANA)--Indonesia will double its LNG (liquefied natural gas) exports to Japan from an annual 7.5 million tons at present to 14 million tons annually starting from 1984, Minister of Mines and Energy Subroto said here Wednesday.

At a meeting with nine ASEAN journalists touring ASEAN countries as winners of Mobil Oil awards, the minister said Indonesia is also set to export LNG to other countries besides Japan, namely South Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan and Singapore.

The minister said Indonesia has big natural gas reserves estimated at 30 trillion standard cubic feet, excluding gas reserves in the Natuna region.

The reserves are to be found in North Sumatera, South Sumatera, the Java Sea, East Kalimantan and in the Natuna waters.

Under an ASEAN cooperation scheme, Indonesia also plans to export natural gas to Singapore, for which an outline was presented by Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew when he visited here recently.

But further details about required quantities and prices still have to be negotiated, the minister said.

Indonesia also plans to supply NGL (natural gas liquid) to the Philippines, which has been buying LPG (liquefied petroleum gas) from Indonesia, while LNG exports to Thailand are expected to be started in 1986.

The minister at the meeting also gave an outline of the energy and mining situation in Indonesia.

He said Indonesia has been established to have 40 hydrocarbon curves containing a total of 100 billion barrels in oil reserves. Besides, there are also geothermal, hydro and non-conventional power resources with large potentials.

But until now the energy consumption pattern in Indonesia is still based for 80 percent on oil, and to reduce this dependence on oil the government has embarked upon an energy diversification program by making increased use of hydro-electricity, geothermal, solar and other power sources.

It is expected that by 1990 the role of oil in the energy picture will be reduced to 60 percent, he said.

The Mobil Oil awardees have been touring ASEAN countries since October, arriving October 12 in Jakarta for a tour of Indonesia until October 16 to end the tour.

While in Indonesia, they will, besides Subroto, meet Minister of Research and Technology Dr B. J. Habibie, Director General of Energy Prof Dr Samaun Samadikun and the director of the ASEAN Confederation of Journalists, Subagyo.

They will also visit the natural gas field and the LNG plant in Arun, Aceh (North Sumatera). Indonesia is represented in the group by A.J. Muaya of ANTARA and Jacob Rebong of the SUARA KARYA newspaper.

PERTAMINE CHIEF ON OIL CONTRACT WITH CALTEX

BK090939 Jakarta OANA in English 0914 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] Jakarta, 9 Oct (ANTARA/OANA)--The oil company PT Caltex Pacific Indonesia has to accept a production-sharing contract on modified post-1977 conditions if it still wants to operate in Indonesia, Pertamina President Director Judo Jumbono stated here Friday.

There is no sense in applying pre-1977 conditions when the production-sharing was not yet 85:15. Even if Caltex accepts the 85-15 ratio, it would still have to adhere to the so-called three-tier system, Judo Sumbono told newsmen.

He explained that the 85-15 ratio applies only to Pertamina contractors producing under 150,000 barrels daily. For production levels above 150,000 barrels up to 250,000 barrels daily the ratio shall be 90:10 and for production, levels above 250,000 barrels daily 95:5.

The Pertamina chief said until now no single Pertamina contractor working on production-sharing agreements has reached a production level of 150,000 barrels daily, the highest level having been 110,000 barrels daily so far.

Caltex, which has a production level of over 500,000 barrels daily, until November 1983 will still be subject to the standing working contract.

The three-tier system is a modification of the 1977 conditions and is referred to by Pertamina as post-77.

In reply to press questions, Judo Sumbono said the chief condition on which there is no further bargaining between Caltex and Pertamina is for it to accept the production-sharing contract. Other matters are still open for negotiation, he said.

Judo Sumbono said the Caltex management has in writing stated agreement to the basic conditions put forward by Pertamina.

He said Caltex has further agreed to place Indonesians in high positions at the company, to use home produced components in its activities in Indonesia, and in response to Pertamina appeal, to invest part of its profit in the non-oil sector in Indonesia, Judo Sumbono said.

Also in reply to a question the Pertamina chief said it could be possible for Caltex to feel that it had not yet received notification about the amendments to the 1977 conditions. Such a stance is quite to be expected as in business everybody wants to make the highest possible profit. But Pertamina keeps firm to the existing conditions, he said.

Turning to Caltex oilwells already in existence by the year 1980 Judo Sumbono said these wells are no more eligible for a production-sharing arrangement with Caltex if Caltex wants to continue activities in Indonesia.

He explained by saying the agreement signed with Caltex in 1971 was based on the consideration that Caltex would have to make big investments in trying to raise production beyond 500,000 barrels daily. On the basis of oil prices at that time, it was calculated that the company's investments would not be returned before 1983.

It was for this reason that Caltex then demanded as guarantee that it be allowed to continue operations beyond 1983 to have its investments returned, he said.

But we all know that since 1977 up to 1980 the world oil price rose many times over the price prevailing when the accord was signed in 1971. The price increases have resulted in their investments in the decades of the 1970s having been returned three times over, he said.

'NONCOMMERCIAL' OIL WELLS--Jakarta, 9 Oct (ANTARA/OANA)--Pertamina will no longer give permit to its foreign oil contractors to exploit oil wells in Indonesia which it considers "non-commercial." A Pertamina official said Friday the exploitation of such wells would give no benefit at all to Indonesia. An oil well is considered non-commercial if on the basis of Pertamina's calculations it will yield only enough oil to cover the exploitation cost (without profit to share between the foreign contractor and Pertamina). The official pointed out to the Salawati well in Irian Jaya whose production he said had been enough only to pay back the money which had been invested by the contractor without any share of profit for the Government of Indonesia. The same situation applied to the Sembakung well which was discovered by Arco. Pertamina considers it non-commercial and has to be returned by that company to Pertamina after that company has recovered the amount of money it had invested for exploration. CAPITAL INVESTMENTS INCREASE--Ujungpandang, 12 Oct (ANTARA/OANA)--Domestic and foreign capital investments in Indonesia increased 57.9 percent, despite the world economic recession. This was stated by head of the Investment Board (BKPM) Suhartoyo in his written address at the opening of an investment upgrading course for regional investment board officials of Sulawesi, Maluku ane East Timor here Monday. He said that in order to maintain the present momentum of the national development it would be necessary to further increase business activities, such as through capital investments, both domestic and foreign. The BKPM chief said the efforts of the government have achieved considerable progress, especially in encouraging private capital to play a bigger role in the development of business, boosting production, and other such activities. He disclosed that domestic investments up to the end of the third quarter of 1982 increased 78.2 percent compared to those in 1981, while foreign investments were also up by 6.7 percent in the same period. The increase in investments, he added, "strengthened our conviction that Indonesia's economy has resilience in face of the world recession." AGRICULTURAL REPORTAGE FOR 4-10 OCTOBER

BK111245 [Editorial Report] Monitored Kampuchean media have reported the following agricultural developments for the reporting period 4-10 October:

Battambang: Phnom Penh SPK in French at 0401 GMT on 5 October reports that 268,490 hectares of rice, or 96 percent of plan, had been cultivated by the province. Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian at 0430 GMT on 6 October notes that in Battambang Province's Phnum Srok District 13,900 hectares out of the targeted 14,650 hectares of rice had been planted so far.

Kandal: SPK at 0419 GMT on 4 October says Kandal Province expects to grow 17,550 hectares of IR-36 rice, or half of the planned area, during the coming dry season. The provincial authorities had trained 170 cadres in the new rice-growing technique and had made available 375 tons of IR-36 seeds, 1,400 tons of chemical fertilizer and 50 waterpumps. SPK also notes that by mid-September, 39,840 hectares of rice had been planted. Intensive culture had been carried out on 10,090 hectares of land. The area for subsidiary crops is 10,940 hectares and that for industrial crops is 1,440 hectares. The latter will be brought to 10,780 hectares during the coming dry season, the news agency says, adding that Kandal now has 64,820 head of oxen--an increase of 500 head if compared with last year--46,960 pigs and 493,000 fowls.

Kompong Cham: SPK at 0401 GMT 5 October reports that 121,400 head of oxen, 37,000 buffaloes and 14,350 pigs had been vaccinated against contageous diseases. It notes that by October, Cheung Prey District had planted 23,570 hectares of rice, fulfilling 95 percent of its plan. Phnom Penh Radio at 0430 GMT on 5 October reports that Chamka Leu District had by mid-September transplanted nearly 6,400 hectares of rice.

Kompong Chhnang: SPK at 1426 GMT on 8 October notes that by mid-September, 44,260 hectares of rice, or 5 percent above plan, had been grown, including 4,620 hectares of high-yielding local strains and IR-36 variety. The province had also planted 3,220 hectares of subsidiary crops such as corn, soybean and manioc, and 460 hectares of industrial crops. Some 10,240 hectares of fallow land had been reclaimed, the news agency reports. There are 57,520 head of cattle, 10,860 pigs and 141,488 fowls in this province. The provincial veterinary service had vaccinated more than 64,760 head of oxen and 3,800 pigs against contageous maladies. The province hauled 11,560 tons of fish, or 9,000 tons above plan. It repaired 26,550 meters of irrigation ditches and built 302,000 [figure as received] meters of field embankments. The province expects to plant 6,200 [figure as received] hectares of rice, 5,500 hectares of subsidiary crops and 1,100 hectares of industrial crops, plans to catch 11,000 tons of fish and hopes to produce 2,000 tons of palm sugar during the coming dry season. Phnom Penh Radio at 0430 GMT on 5 October reports that Baribo District had planted 5,400 hectares of rice by mid-September. At 1300 GMT on 7 October the radio reports that the province had reclaimed 11,140 hectares of fallow riceland out of the targeted 11,500 hectares. At 0430 GMT on 9 October the radio adds that Baribo District had planted over 7,200 hectares of various types of rice by the end of the third quarter or 150 hectares more than planned. In Rolea P'ier District, the radio notes at 1100 GMT on 10 October, 11,200 hectares of rice had been transplanted during the rainy season and nearly 300 hectares of subsidiary crops had been planted.

Kompong Som City: SPK at 0401 GMT on 4 October reports that 14,500 hectares of rice--2,000 hectares above plan--had been cultivated, 200 hectares of subsidiary crops had been grown and 2,000 hectares of land had been cleared. There are 2,650 head of oxen, 4,590 hectares of buffaloes, 13,490 pigs and 70,000 fowls. The fishermen of Kompong Som hauled in 300 tons of fish and 45 tons of shrimp.

Takeo: SPK at 0403 GMT on 6 October says this province had cultivated 198,270 hectares of rice, or 80 percent of plan. The area planted with IR-36 rice variety had reached 1,460 hectares. The province had also planted 7,210 hectares of subsidiary crops. The veterinary service had vaccinated 50,000 head of oxen and 2,680 pigs against contageous diseases. Takeo now has 90,900 pigs and 138,000 head of cattle. The provincial agricultural service had provided the population with 520 tons of IR-36 seeds, 490 tons of floating rice seeds, 1,260 tons of chemical fertilizer, 5,120 liters of insecticide, 400 kg of rat poison and 230 sprayers. Thanks to the waterpumps of the Ministry of Agriculture and provincial agricultural service, 2,350 hectares of rice had been saved from drought, according to SPK. Takeo plans to grow 35,000 hectares of rice during the forthcoming dry season, the same SPK report says, adding the province has caught about 500 tons of fish so far.

ITALIAN AMITY GROUP FETED--Phnom Penh, 11 Oct (SPK)--Kong Korm, deputy foreign minister, today received in Phnom Penh the delegation of the Italy-Vietnam Friendship Committee led by Pietro Pastorino, general secretary of the General Chamber of Labor and chairman of the Italy-Vietnam Friendship

Committee of Genoa Province. After speaking about progress achieved in all fields in Kampuchea since the overthrow of the genocidal Pol Pot regime on 7 January 1979, Kong Korm laid stress on the traditions of struggle of the Kampuchean people who aspire to live independently, peacefully and democratically. He denounced the maneuvers of the Beijing expansionists in collusion with the U.S. imperialists and their reactionary lackeys to undermine the rebirth of the Kampuchean people. The "tripartite coalition government of Democratic Kampuchea," he affirmed, was brought to life by the Chinese expansionists and the U.S. imperialists to dupe public opinion, denigrate the rebirth of Kampuchea and push the Kampuchean people into a new disaster. The situation in Kampuchea is irreversible and the Kampuchean revolution is progressing with every passing day, Kong Korm concluded. Pietro Pastorino expressed his joy to see with his own eyes the progress in Kampuchea and the heroic struggle of its people. He expressed his profound gratitude to the PRK Government which facilitated his visit. [Text] [BK120640 Phnom Penh SPK in French 0421 GMT 12 Oct 82]

PHOUMI VONGVICHIT ATTENDS PHOTO EXHIBITION ON USSR

BK081612 Vientiane KPL in English 0900 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] Vientiane, 8 Oct (KPL)--The Laos-USSR Friendship Association in co-operation with the Soviet Embassy to Laos, on October 7 inaugurated at the exhibition hall of the Ministry of Culture a photo exhibition on the political and economic life of the Soviet Union. The occasion is to mark the 60th founding anniversary of the Soviet Union, the 5th anniversary of the adoption of the new constitution of the USSR and the 22d anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Laos and the Soviet Union.

Among those present at the opening were Phoumi Vongvichit, member of the Political Bureau of the LPRP CC, vice-chairman of the Council of Ministers, Sisana Sisan, member of the LPRP CC and minister of culture, Khamsouk Vongvichit, vice-president of the Laos-USSR Friendship Association and vice-chairman of the Lao Committee for Defence of the World Peace, other members of the government and high-ranking officials from various ministries.

Vladimir Sobchenko, the Soviet ambassador, other members of the diplomatic corps and representatives of various international organizations to Laos were also on hand.

Addressing the participants, Sisana Sisan recalled that after the success of the October revolution, under the leadership of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union headed by the great Vladimir Il'ich Lenin, the Soviet people have founded the Soviet Union, the first socialist and proletarian state in the world. During the past 60 years of their history, the Soviet people of all nationalities have united firmly for the safeguard of the nation and the construction of the technical bases of socialism and then of communism. On the important initiative of Leonid Brezhnev, general secretary of the CPSU, president of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet a new constitution was adopted thus enhancing the rights of the Soviet people. He said in conclusion that with the precious assistance of the Soviet Union and other fraternal socialist countries, Laos was now liberated from neocolonialism and engaged in the building of socialism thus joining the socialist community. The speaker stressed that at the recent meeting between Kaysone Phomvihan, general secretary of the LPRP CC, chairman of the Council of Ministers and Lenid Brezhnev, the Soviet side had reiterated the unswerving principles of the Soviet party, government and people which will continue to assist the LPDR.

Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Sobchenko pointed to the great successes of the implementation of the new constitution in the Soviet Union, and stressed on the great achievement in socialist construction. He expressed thanks to the party, and government as well as the Laos-USSR Friendship Association over the cooperation in organizing the exhibition. He wished for the further tightening of the great friendship relations, fraternal solidarity and all-round cooperation between the two countries and wished the Lao people brilliant successes in the execution of the resolutions of the 3d party congress for the prosperity of the Lao people of all nationalities.

SALES PROMOTIONS ABROAD TO BE BOOSTED IN 1983

HK071331 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 7 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] Trade and Industry Minister Roberto V. Ongpin reported a quadrupling of sales promotions abroad in 1983 to boost the export of products of small Filipino producers.

Ongpin said this is part of the massive campaign he recently ordered launched to look for foreign buyers for products of small Filipino businessmen.

Ongpin said the Ministry of Trade and Industry [MTI] will increase its foreign selling missions and its participation in international trade fairs from 18 to 57 in 1983.

From 14, the number of MTI's participation in international trade fairs will be increased to 37, he said. MTI will also send observation teams to four other international trade fairs.

Of the 57 trade fairs MTI will participate in 1983, 18 are in Europe, 11 in North America and 12 in Asia, Middle East, Africa and Oceania which include Australia, New Zealand and other republics in the Pacific Basin.

The 1983 MTI promotional strategy, Ongpin said, will focus on garments in 10 trade fairs, furniture in five, gifts and houseware in seven, fresh and processed foods in three, footwear and leather goods in eight, and general products lines in eight.

He said MTI will send 16 foreign selling missions in 1983, a jump from four this year. The selling missions will go hand in hand with the participation in international fairs.

Ongpin said five selling missions will be sent to Europe, five to the Americas and six to Asia, Middle East, Oceania and Africa.

Onpin said the Philippines' participation in international trade fairs will be given emphasis next year because they are essential for direct market test and saleability of products.

VER ANNOUNCES VILLAGE ARMS CACHE CONFISCATION

HK070950 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 6 Oct 82 p 1, 11

[Text] Gen Fabian C. Ver, armed forces chief of staff, said yesterday an arms cache containing Garand M1 and AK47 rifles and ammunition was found by government troopers last Saturday in a remote village in Oriental Mindoro.

The cache was found by men of the 269th PC Company, the San Teodoro Integrated National Police, the National Bureau of Investigation, the Military Intelligence Group and member of the Civilian Home Defense Force in Tanac, Lumang Bayan, San Teodor, Oriental Mindoro.

Ver said the teams found 28 long and 13 short magazines for AK47 rifles, four magazines for Thompson sub-machinegun, one grease gun container, one cleaning rod, and 320 carbine bullets.

No one was arrested during the operation but soldiers continued to search for more firearms and ammunition hidden in the area.

The PC was tipped off about the presence of the firearms in the vicinity. A search team was immediately launched.

Philippine marines confiscated nine Garands, one carbine, and one M16 rifle during a search of unlicensed firearms in Basilan last September 30.

Meanwhile, a commander of the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) and 22 of his followers surrendered to PC authorities in Barrira, Maguindanao, over the weekend.

Commander Aberin Sorosong alias Commander Eddie turned in seven Garands, seven carbines, one M16 and one FAL rifles, one homemade grenade launcher, and three other homemade firearms.

ENRILE RELEASES PHILIPPINES CP LEADERS LIST

OW071435 Hong Kong AFP in English 1344 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Text] Manila, 7 Oct (AFP)--A total of 12 top leaders of the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP) remain active in the field and have some 1.9 million pesos (220,000 U.S. dollars) reward money on their heads, the Defense Ministry said today.

Minister Juan Ponce Enrile declassified and released the rankings list of the CPP showing of the total 18 leaders three are now in custody, two are in China and one had been killed.

Heading the list as chairman of the Central Committee is Rodolfo Salas, who has 250,000 pesos (29,000 U.S. dollars) on his head. He is chairman of the Military Commission, member of the Politburo, and member of the Executive Committee.

Juanito Rivera is the next-in-command in all positions held by Salas and commands prize-money of 200,000 pesos (23,000 dollars).

Secretariat head is Rafael Baylosis (200,000 pesos) followed by Ignacio Capigsan, member of the central and executive committees (175,000 pesos--20,000 dollars).

Killed last month was Edgar Jopson, highest ranking communist on Mindanao Island and carrying a prize of 125,000 pesos (15,000 dollars).

Captured was fifth-ranking Isagani Serrano, member of the central and executive committees (150,000 pesos--18,000 dollars) who was implicated in the alleged conspiracy to take over the government last month. Captured last January was Central Committee member and seventh-ranking Noel Etabag with a reward for his capture of 150,000 pesos.

Also in custody is former development Academy of Philippines vice dean and Registrat Horacio Morales, Jr, once recipient of the prestigious outstanding young man award (100,000 pesos--12,000 dollars). He is ranked number 15.

Two members of the Central Committee, ranked 13th and 14th by the ministry, are now in China--Santiago Sta Romana and Ericson Baculinao. Both carry a 125,000 pesos reward (15,000 dollars) on their heads.

Following are the rest of the rankings as released by Mr Enrile:

Sixth--Benito Tiamzon, Central Committee and eastern central Philippines secretary (150,000 pesos).

Eighth--Sotero Llamas, Central Committee and Bicol region secretary.

Ninth--Romulo Kintanar, Central Committee and deputy secretary for Mindanao (150,000 pesos).

10th--Prudencio Calubid, Executive Committee and National Commission on Education and Propaganda secretary.

12th--Former journalist Antonio Zumel, Central Committee and editor of CPP organ ANG BAYAN (125,000 pesos).

16th--Ola Aguilar, head of so-called middle forces (100,000 pesos--12,000 dollars).

17th--Josefino Corpuz, secretary of Central-Eastern Luzon Committee (100,000 pesos).

18th--Roberto Tacbad, secretary Western-Central Luzon Committee (100,000 pesos).

BRIEFS

POLICE CASES SHIFTED TO MILITARY COURTS--Cases filed against policemen, firemen and jail guards will now be investigated and tried by military court. This is provided in the presidential decree No 850 issued by President Marcos last Monday but released by Malacanang only yesterday. In the decree President Marcos noted that the law integrated the police units and firemen under the operational control of the constabulary. This places them under the jurisdiction of military court. Only cases involving civilians can be investigated by the (?Tanas Baiyan) and tried by the (?Sandigin Baiyan). The military court takes over if the civilian waives his right to trial by a civilian court. [Text] [HK080459 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 7 Oct 82]

'WHITE PAPER' ON NEW CPT SECRETARY GENERAL

BK280241 Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 28 Sep 82 p 5

[Text] Internal Security Operation Command (ISOC) yesterday issued a "white paper" to expose the man who was reported to have been made the secretary general of the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT).

The "white paper," titled "A True Story Behind Prasit Taphianthong: A Man Accused of Being Secretary General of the CPT", was issued during a press conference at the Kittichachon auditorium of the Chunlachomklao Royal Military Academy to report on the government's performance in fighting against communist insurgency over the past six months.

Prasit was reported to have been appointed the secretary general of the CPT during its last congress and up till now his real identity is still a big question mark. Some authorities said "Prasit" is only the name of the collective leadership of the party while others claim he is non-existent.

The white paper of ISOC may shed some light on his identity and his activities in the outlawed party.

Prasit Taphianthong, known by his nom de guerre of "Comrade Hung" of "Uncle Sin", is a native of the central plains but his exact birthplace is still a mystery.

Prasit is said to be dark complected, slightly cross-eyed and now in his 50's. A lean man standing about 155-160 centimetres, Prasit is known for his egoism and a tendency to dominate his colleagues. Despite his high self-esteem, Prasit is said to have good human relations.

Because of his long years in the jungle, Prasit is reportedly suffering from several diseases--one of them an ulcer which has been bothering him for quite sometime. Cholesterol is also another serious disease facing Prasit whose mental instability once landed him in the hospital.

The three diseases have hampered Prasit's work. During the past year, Prasit has been in charge of information and propaganda and was operating the clandestine communist radio station before it closed down.

He is also responsible for all information work within the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT). He censors all articles and reports circulating within the party. Apart from his regular duties, Prasit travels overseas once in a while.

Prasit is inclined to air his views or engage in theoretical discussions on revolution. People who have met Prasit tend to be impressed by his hospitality. But for the past three or four years, Prasit has become rather moody and easily loses his temper even over minor things. The changes in his character are blamed partly on the three illnesses which are troubling him. Besides problems with his health, Prasit also seems to have an unhappy family life. He tends to lord over his wife and is not often on good terms with her.

Normally, Prasit does not stay with his wife. His wife, Mrs Prathum, works outside CPT headquarters and returns only once a year to stay for five or six days with him before leaving again.

Prasit himself is not absolutely loyal to his wife and is said to have tried courting other women. Mrs Prathum is physically weak and Prasit had developed a tendency of being easily impressed by the beauty of women.

Prasit has two daughters, one 14 and the other 13. Both are described as pretty and innocent. They were sent to China when they were around two years old. That is one of the reasons why they can hardly speak Thai.

Because of his romantic relations with women under his supervision, Prasit's credibility in the eye of his colleagues is rather low.

For this reason, Prasit hardly commands any respect from either colleagues or subordinates in the headquarters of the CPT.

As far as his relations with other party leaders is concerned, Prasit has tried to refrain from having any open conflicts with them. Conflicts do exist but Prasit tends to forget them once they have been discussed. Unlike other party leaders, Prasit has avoided being caught in the factionalism that plagues the party.

Prasit has always been a man of action, well known for his eloquence. He often gets into arguments with other party leaders, such as Prasong (Song) Nopphakun. Prasong, also a Politburo member, suffers from a mental disorder too but his condition seems to be more serious than that of Prasit's.

Prasong has no specific responsibility within the party. Generally, nobody takes notice of Prasong because of his mental condition.

To some other CPT leaders, Prasit appears to be humble and at the same time aggressive in his speaking manner. But to his subordinates, Prasit is particularly offensive. There have been times when Prasit has felt humiliated by those subordinates who have been brave enough to respond to his uninvited comments or criticisms.

There were several other weaknesses which have served to undermine his credibility even further. Many believe Prasit is a coward. His cowardice is said to be evident particularly during an emergency. When the headquarters came under attack from government forces, Prasit became hysterical. Shaking, Prasit immediately told his bodyguards to pack up his belongings and find an escape route. Sometimes his cowardice goes to the extreme of being ridiculous.

Compared with Prasit, Prasong is a courageous man.

As far as his contribution to the party is concerned, Prasit has done nothing that could be considered outstanding. But then again, he has done nothing seriously wrong either. He is an easy-going type of man who has no ambitions and is a danger to no one.

Prasit is trusted by the rest of the party officials although he lacks leadership. It was a surprise when Prasit, who has nothing a leader should have, was made secretary general of the CPT.

His promotion can be explained by the fact that Prasit is not ambitious and gets along with everybody. Under the present circumstances, the CPT certainly must find it difficult to completely trust anyone--whether it be Wirat [Angkhathawon], Udom [Sisuwan] or Thong [Chamsi]. These people are comrades in arms who are ready to kill their friends.

Taking everything into account, Prasit was, therefore, the best choice to become the new secretary general. Besides, Prasit is a Thai and that fact suits the present situation in which there is a demand for a more nationalistic revolutionary movement instead of a foreign-dominated one.

With Prasit on top, there is also some optimism that he might be able to reduce the degree of conflicts within the pro-China party.

The choice of Prasit might also be designed to drown criticisms that the party is in the hands of pro-Chinese communist leaders. And since Prasit is not a well-known person, his background would be known only to people close to him. He is comparatively younger than the rest of the party's top men.

Prasit is not an avid reader as most communist leaders are. He reads only when there is something interesting or when he feels like doing so.

Unlike Prasit, Damri Ruangsutham (a former Politburo member now on trial in Bangkok) is addicted to reading. He reads whenever he gets the chance.

But Prasit is known for his impressive choice of words. He knows how to hurt people with his eloquence. Though Damri has read a lot, he often finds it difficult to express himself. Prasit is hardly ever seen with a book, while Damri often is, wherever he goes.

RESERVE MILITIA FORCES TO AUGMENT REGULARS

Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 29 Aug 82 p 5

[Article by Sonchai Nokeplub]

[Text]

KILLING two birds with one stone. That is what the so-called "Reserve Militia for National Security" project is supposed to yield when it fully takes shape, hopefully within the next five years.

The name may sound unfamiliar, but the project's wheel of action has already started rolling towards the establishment of the force which in effect will give the country powerful military backing in time of emergency and provide a better life for former conscripts discharged after two years in active military service.

The plan, besides reflecting an ingenious idea of making better use of these discharged soldiers, indicates that the Government is moving in the right direction — toward introducing welfare for a group of people who once served as the country's defence force.

As is generally known, the majority of these conscripts are from poor families and are the lowest paid in the Armed Forces. The Reserve Militia project under which various economic and agricultural training programmes are provided, if successfully implemented, will be the most suitable reward the Government can give in exchange for their loyal services.

Col Vichit Harnsakul — chief of taff of the First Army Region's 11th Division, said the reservist force will be formed from the very basics — at the village level — by informing former conscripts of the broad outlines of the project and asking them to become members.

This will be carried out by working groups at district and provincial level, he said.

The project, approved by the Cabinet after years of planning, has been designed to coincide with the Fifth Five-Year Development Plan and it is hoped it will be fully operational within the same period of time.

The Cabinet, in approving the project has appointed a national committee chaired by Army Commander-in-Chief Gen Prayuth Charumanee to oversee the establishment of the force.

National Security Council Secretary General Sqn Ldr Prasong Soonsiri has been named chairman of the political affairs sub-committee; Under-secretary of State for Agriculture and Cooperatives, Dr Thalerng Thamrongnavasavat chairman of the economic sub-committee; Under-secretary of State for Education Dr Boonsom Martin, chairman of the psychological sub-committee; and Deputy Army Commander-in-Chief Gen Sakti Boontharakul, chairman of the military committee.

Programmes

At regional level, the commanding general of each of the four Army regions were assigned to take charge of the project in the provinces in their respective areas.

As explained by Col Vichai, the training courses put into the programmes for the reserve force will not concentrate on weapons, but will stress how to upgrade their post-military professional skills in order to enable them to lead a better life.

This involves economic and agricultural training as well as the provision of the government's bank credit to help form farm cooperatives among the reservists and their relatives.

"It's not only the reservists who are welcome to join the project, but also their relatives who could apply as extraordinary members of the programme," Col Vichai explained.

After being formed, leaders and assistants in political, economic, psychological and military fields at the village level would be appointed to help village headmen of their respective areas.

Leaders from various villages would then be chosen to be the reservists' chief at tambon level with their main job to help kamnan in the four fields. Under the same structure, district and provincial commanders of the reservists and their assistants in the four mentioned fields would also be appointed to help with district officers and provincial governors respectively, Col Vichai explained.

"From this you will see that we are now trying to recruit a group of well-desciplined people to form an axis to lead other people, namely their relatives and friends, to develop the country," he said.

Col Vichai said most of the reservists are poor and many of them are unemployed, but they will represent a big labour force if officials could gather them into an organised group.

On the military front, Col Vichai said in the face of the current tension in Kampuchea it was not known when and to what extent Thailand would come under outside aggression.

This has prompted the need for an establishment of reserve divisions in the four Army regions — for example the 11th Division in case of the First Army Region — to carry out the work in gathering reservists in their respective areas to form army divisions if neccessity calls.

The Reserve Militia for National Security project is a supporting platform for the reserve divisions as it helps organise discharged conscripts — more than 500,000 alone in the First Army Region area — to stay in united groups in their native home towns, according to Col Vichai.

From the number of reservists throughout the country, the Armed Forces would be able to increase their strength by hundreds of divisions in time of emergency, he said.

The Reserve Militia, as explained by Col Vichai, will represent a strong military backing and give bargaining power against any country coming on an aggressive course against Thailand.

"Of course, we have no desire to go into any battle, but to prevent this we must have enough military strength to make our enemy realise the potential outcome if they decide to go to war with us," Col Vichai said.

But how can the Reserve Militia assert its role when there have already been several power groups established by the Government to counter untoward attempts against national security?

Col Vichai explained: "We have village scouts and village volunteers as different forms of power groups. They are capable of demonstrating their united force against internal aggression toward the nation, the religion and the monarchy, but when it comes to aggression of outside forces against the national security they are limited."

Capability

The Reserve Militia has higher capability than the village scouts and village volunteers. They are ready to be organised into an army and have been accustomed to all kind of war weapons when compared to the village volunteers who are equipped with only shotguns.

Col Vichai said the militia force would need little training as they are familiar with the military system.

"Many may laugh if I say that we hope that we could get the Reserve Militia force in combat readiness within three days."

Col Vichai said whether this was possible depends on arms stock and support from allies.

He said Thailand is the front gate of ASEAN. If individual members of the community want to safeguard their own stability, they must support their front gate first.

Col Vichai added that the Reserve Militia for National Security has been projected to be fully in shape by 1986, but its success is still dependent on vital bodies: the working groups at the district and provincial level which are now launching the campaign to persuade ex-conscripts to join the programme.

CHINA NOW HAS MORE FREEDOM

Bangkok BANGKOK POST in English 15 Sep 82 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

CHINA's new constitution abolishes the post of Communist Party chairman and vice chairman, while keeping that of general secretary of the Party. Chinese constitution planner and politburo member Hu Qiaomu says this is to avoid concentrating too much power in the hands of one individual. Mr Hu, who should know, said that a man who was both chairman and secretary general of the Party could be a despot, and what Mr Hu wants is what he calls "a truly collective, democratic leadership."

Just how democratic the Communist Party of China was, is and will be is a matter for debate, much of which would have to be tongue-in-cheek. What Mr Hu means, of course, is that Mao Tse-tung was a despot and the present rulers of China recognise this and are bound not to let another Mao take charge of the Party, government and country. Since the man once known as the great helmsman died in 1976, the Chinese have begun to admit that Mao's contribution to his nation and the world was something less than they once thought.

Mao gathered all-pervasive power for a number of reasons, among which were his personal magnetism and his ego. He gathered most of his grass-roots power by his dynamic leadership of a revolution which succeeded in toppling the nationalist government in 1949. There is more than a little suspicion that his constant urgings to perpetual revolution — the hundred flowers campaign, the Great Leap Forward and other silliness — was specifically to enable him to hold onto the power he had.

The most prominent Chinese Communist in the recent past has been Deng Xiaoping, who has officially retired to the "second line" of leadership. In fact, he holds more power this week than he did before the recent Party congress, with four Party posts and one state position, as head of the united front organisation which Peking calls the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference.

But Deng is sharing power on both the government and Party sides of Chinese political life. Indeed, China's new rules appear to present less chance of a new Mao, a new tyrant than at any time during the last six years in the world's most populous nation. This can only be considered good news. The one-man dictatorship of Mao's China left the entire nation, and its neighbours, at the whim of a single man.

From that whim came a personality cult, an injurious xenophobia, years of crippling internal strife. In Thailand, it gave us the "people's war" of the Communist Party of Thailand. Such decisions as those will be unlikely to be made in the future, for the spreading of power provides an automatic system of checks and balances.

BORDER PROBLEMS COULD HURT ASEAN UNITY GMT

[Article by Kittiphong na-Ranong]

[Text] THE unity and cooperation of ASEAN are now put to the test by a resurrection of the suspicion between Thailand and Malaysia over the problems caused by insurgents along their border.

Although the communist-hunting brought Thailand and Malaysia together, it has simultaneously caused tension along the border because each side suspects its insurgents are supported by the other.

A series of obstacles has arisen since the border agreements first mooted by the British as early as 1949. Border operations which were born of these agreements have long been hampered by Thai restraint over the limiting of "hot pursuit" and the stationing of Malaysian troops in Thailand. This provoked Malaysia into believing that Thailand was not sincere in wishing to crush the Communist Party of Malaya while we suspected Malaysia of being lenient with Muslim separatists in our southern provinces.

It was the fall of the Saigon regime that made us more amenable to forgetting, at least temporarily, our long-held suspicion that some Malaysian politicians were fostering ambitions on our territory by supporting Muslim separatists. As a result, the government of Tanin Kraivixien allowed Malaysian troops to enter Thai territory, and the briefly-suspended border operations were resumed.

Distrust, however, was revived after the Thai-Malaysian General Border Committee meeting in Kuala Lumpur late last month. Lt-Gen Harn Leenanond, commanding general of the Fourth Army Region, bluntly criticised Malaysia for avoiding mention of the terrorist problem in the South which he believed to be related to the problem of the CPM guerrillas. He went as far as to say of the Malaysians: "They have forgotten that some of their people and some parties are backing the terrorist bandits as well."

Supreme Commander Gen Saiyud Kerdphol and Interior Minister Gen Sitthi Jirarote followed suit in both admitting that they were dissatisfied with the outcome of the General Border Committee meeting. Gen Saiyud reiterated that cooperation with Malaysia should not be limited to action against the CPM guerrillas, but should also cover the problems of banditry and crime which plague our southernmost provinces and threaten our peace and security.

This time, the disapproval of border operations is not simply the outcry of patriotic citizens or of student activists as in the past, but it is being voiced by the high-ranking officers and the government minister who have direct responsibility for dealing with the problems of the South. Thus, despite the fact that expressions of dissatisfaction have not officially come from the Government, they represent, to some extent, the country's objections to the course of cooperation with Malaysia. Of course, distrust between our two countries has also contributed to the argument.

ASEAN leaders have generally acknowledged the differences among the five countries but they have somehow managed to control them and avoided talking about them publicly. However, such an attitude can never be the right answer to the problems, which continue to exist, their roots left untouched for fear that the association as a whole might be ruined.

This has, paradoxically, produced another dilemma: a regional organisation cannot function as effectively as it is supposed to if its components do not cooperate on the basis of sincerity and trust. As a result, the achievements of cooperation between the ASEAN countries have generally been lessened by bilateral problems hanging over the five members.

Observers of the workings of ASEAN cannot deny that the organisation achieved very little in terms of cooperation and suffered greatly from public airings of its differences until the sudden changes of regimes in Indochina several years ago. It was these changes which brought the five ASEAN members closer together in political and diplomatic terms: cooperation became necessary to cope with the perceived threat from our communist neighbours. This means that it was — and still is — the anxiety about external forces that hold us together and has forced us to put aside our bilateral differences, at least temporarily.

Although the external threat in the form of the Vietnamese invasion and occupation of Kampuchea has brought ASEAN members closer together than ever before, it has probably not done much to enhance their mutual understanding.

The revival of differences between Thailand and Malaysia is a case in point. It should be considered as a significant warning that ASEAN members should not give less attention to their bilateral problems merely for the sake of maintaining unity in the face of external threats. Should the present circumstances that have glued the ASEAN members together come to an end, the five members might find their organisation being undone by the forces exerted from within by their bilateral long-suspended problems.

In spite of the fact that no one can have a cake and eat it too, ASEAN leaders should at least try their best to work out their differences before any change occurs in external circumstances, which might cost them the regional organisation which they and their predecessors have spent 15 years building.

In the meantime they should bear in mind that the roots of the chronic problems among them have to be dealt with properly and thoroughly so that the sincerity and trust which are the fundamental basis of cooperation can eventually be established.

Without such a regional grouping as ASEAN, who knows what would have happened to the non-communist Southeast Asian countries following the invasion of Kampuchea by the aggressive and powerful Vietnam? So there can be no doubt that ASEAN is worth preserving by every possible means before things get out of hand.

'MUSER' GROUP SAID BE GREATER THREAT THAN SHANS

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 30 Aug 82 p 6

[Article by Pipat Lertkittisuk]

[Text]

MAE AI, Chiang Mai – Local Thai authorities here view leftwing Muser group of Ei Bi as posing a greater threat than the Shan rebels led by narcotics kingpin Khun Sa, who has ousted the communist hilltribesmen from Doi Lang and is strengthening his powers at the new base to resume heroin production on the Thai-Burmese border here.

The threat from the Ei Bi's force to Thailand is greater as it is a close ally of the Burmese Communist Party (BCP) while the Shan United Army (SUA) concentrates on producing heroin only, said a high-ranking official here who asked not to be identified.

Security officials in this border district also agreed to the 'theory', saying Khun Sa's men appeared less hostile to Thai officials than the communist hilltribesmen.

However, Kamnan Saeng Sunan told The Nation in Tambon Thaton here that Khun Sa was less hostile to Thai officials because he needed their 'cooperation' for transporting his heroin via Thai soil to foreign markets.

"Unlike Khun Sa who could offer bribery to Thai officials, Ei Bi's group intends to seize power from the central government and is not involved in the production of heroin," said Kamnan Saeng, who has been familiar with various minority groups on the border. Kamnan Saeng is a former commander in the Shan State Progressive Party (SSPP).

Kamnan Saeng also called on the Thai authorities to pay more attention to their campaigns against narcotics production as a threat to human beings as a whole.

"We stand a chance of defeating the communists, but it is almost impossible to defeat drug addiction. Take the Vietnam War as an example, the United States was aware of the fact that up to 70 per cent of its soldiers in Vietnam were drug addicts and curable only when the troops were withdrawn from the Indochinese country," he said.

Kamnan Saeng related that Doi Lang was originally occupied by Muser hilltribesmen led by Phya Ja-er and Ei Bi who are cousins.

Phya Ja-er's group, the most influential one which commands about 150 armed fighters on Doi Lang, only about 12 kms north of this border district, had lived at peace with Ei Bi's group, the second biggest, for years until he recently felt that the influence of his cousin had begun to outgrow his, Kamnan Saeng said.

The conflicts between the two hilltribesmen group could be traced back to 1976 when Ei Bi and his followers returned to the rugged terrain after having undergone ideological courses with the BCP for five years, according to the Kamnan.

He said that Phya Ja-er's diminishing influence was based on the protection fees he obtained from drug kingpins who set up heroin refinery plants on the mountain. The protection fees collected for ten years by Phya Ja-er amounted to hundreds of thousand baht annually, the kamnan said.

However, his influence started to erode when his cousin started to spread the leftwing ideology among the Muser hilltribesmen and attract Phya Ja-er's followers to the other faction.

The two groups began to camp separately about two years ago, according to the kamnan.

In June, Burmese forces attacked the strongholds on Doi Lang, prompting the two groups to desert the mountain. While Ei Bi's group fled northwards to Kok River, Phya Ja-er and his followers escaped the attack southwards to Mae Sao.

When the Burmese troops withdrew from Doi Lang, Phya Ja-er, convinced of his diminishing influence, approached Khun Sa for cooperation to bar the leftwing Muser group from returning to the mountain, Kamnan Saeng said.

"Actually, Khun Sa had earlier wrote letters to Phya Ja-er, offering help to oust Ei Bi's group, but Phya Ja-er decided to take the offer only in June or July," the kamnan said.

He said that Phya Ja-er's force returned to Doi Lang on July 8 and was joined by Khun Sa's fighters from his stronghold on Doi Laem two days later.

The leftwing Muser hilltribesmen thus found that their stronghold had been captured when they arrived there in early this month, the kamnan added.

Ei Bi's force later crossed the border to seek assistance and support from Muser hilltribesmen on Thai soil here in its fight for Doi Lang, prompting Khun Sa's Shan fighters to attack the villages on Thai soil and reduced them to ashes, Kamnan Saeng disclosed.

He said that about 500 Muser villagers were rendered homeless as a result of the Shan assault which concentrated on villages nearby Huay Sala village.

The incident has irked the minority hilltribesmen and significantly weakened Phya Ja-er's popularity among them, said Kamnan Saeng who added that the Muser leader had once denied his involvement in the pillaging of the villages with a local newspaper.

Other minority groups were also dissatisfied with Phya Ja-er as his force had earlier expelled a group of Wa hilltribesmen led by Maha Sang southwards to Doi Pahompok.

"All minority groups here have now no more confidence in Phya Ja-er. He is almost isolated. I have heard that he has also begun to develop conflicts with the SUA of Khun Sa," he related.

Meanwhile, Ei Bi formed alliance with a leftwing Wa group of Chang Ter Wen, who commands a small army of fighters, and rallied his force in attempts to strike back at Khun Sa's force on Doi Lang, according to the kamnan.

He said that Ei Bi had rallied about 500 fighters at Muang Sad but his force still could not match with the SUA which commands about 1,000 soldiers. The SUA's influence is prevalent along the Thai-Burmese border from the areas opposite Mae Hong Son to Mae Chan District in Chiang Rai, according to the kamnan.

"So, the prospect of Ei Bi restoring his influence on Doi Lang which is his economic base is very dim," he commented.

However, some Muser hilltribesmen here said that they believed Ei Bi, who was rallying his forces from his strongholds on the Chinese-Burmese border, would have to attack Doi Lang to recapture it as the terrain was a significant economic zone for BCP.

'YOUNG TURK' POLICE OFFICERS REINSTATED

Bangkok THE NATION REVIEW in English 15 Sep 82 p 2

[Text]

THREE of the police officers involved in the abortivecoup last year were yesterday reappointed to active posts.

The appointments were made in a second round of annual reshuffle of the Police Department endorsed by the Cabinet yesterday.

The three are Pol Maj Gen Sa-nguan Klongchai who was appointed Commander of the Forestry Police Division, Pol Maj Gen Bancha Netinant as Commander of the Criminal Records Division and Pol Maj Gen Charn Rattanatham as a commander attached to the Police Education Bureau.

An informed source also said that another two police officers involved in the abortive coup are also expected to be given active posts soon. They are Pol Col Thirachai Riencharoen and Pol Col Thawat Saensena who will be made commander of the Marine Police Zone One and a lecturer of Police Cadet School respectively.

Their nominations were agreed during a meeting of the Police Commission chaired by Interior Minister Gen Sitthi Chirarochana yesterday, the source said.

The Police Commission yesterday also reportedly approved the appointment of Pol Col Sutham Savettanant as commander of Metropolitan Police 16. Pol Col Sutham was transferred out of Bangkok in connection with the raid on Hotel 28 where a number of girls were forced into prostitution early this year.

Other appointments of senior policemen approved by the Cabinet yesterday:

- Pol Maj Gen Vathi Sunthornying, commander of Thonburi Metropolitan Police, as commander of Bangkok South Metropolitan Police
- Pol Maj Gen Manas Krutchaiyant, commander attached to the Police Education Bureau, as commander of Provincial Police Zone Three.
- Pol Col Vichien Wattanakul, deputy commander of Bangkok South Metropolitan Police, as commander of Thonburi Metropolitan Police.
- Pol Col Prachum Sathapitanont, deputy commander of Scientific Crime Detection Division, as commander
- Pol Col Thavee Pongprasarn, deputy commander of Police Registration Division, as commander.
- Pol Col Phadej Thongchamni, deputy commander of Crime Suppression Division, as commander of Railway Police Division

BRIEFS

LAO REFUGEE ACTIVITY NOTED--Nong Khai--Since the beginning of this month about 165 Laotians have crossed the Mekong River into Thailand, provincial authorities said yesterday. Officials said the refugees, who entered Thailand through various points of this northeastern province, have been sent to a camp in Nakhon Phanom Province. Meanwhile, authorities said 30 more refugees in the Nong Khai refugee camp have agreed to move, leaving behind 15 more who refuse to comply with government evacuation orders. Authorities, who earlier set yesterday as the deadline, said the 15 will be allowed to stay but they would not receive any food supplies. ERSHAD, OTHERS LAUD NEW BENGALI ISLAMIC ENCYCLOPEDIA

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 18 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Excerpts] The Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad, has emphasised the need for projecting dependable and documentary information about the contributions made by the Muslims in the fields of knowledge and science, reports BSS.

The CMLA said that the remarkable contributions made by the Muslim scholars and scientists for centuries in the fields of politics, social science, economics, arts, culture, literature, architecture and particularly for the revival of moral values were fundamental in the one hand and varied and comprehensive on the other.

In a message on the occasion of the publication ceremony of Shorter Encyclopaedia of Islam in Bengali on Friday General Ershad said that the history of the world civilisation and knowledge was enriched by the Muslim scholars and scientists. Today, time has come when we should project their achievements to the confused human society, he added.

The CMLA described the publication of the encyclopaedia as a bold step and an example of progress in the field of publication in Bangladesh and expressed the confidence that it would encourage the people of the country to dedicate themselves in the pursuit of knowledge.

General Ershad lauded the initiative taken by the Islamic Foundation and the Islamic Solidarity Fund for publishing the encyclopaedia and hoped that they would continue their cooperation to fulfil the demand of the knowledge seekers and to enrich further the treasure of knowledge of the human society.

Launching Ceremony

A Bengali "Shorter Encyclopaedia of Islam", first of its kind for 120 million Bengali speaking Muslims, was formally launched on Friday amid much enthusiasm at the Engineers Institute auditorium.

Education and Religious Affairs Minister Dr. Majeed Khan, who was the chief guest at the launching function, termed the publication of the encyclopaedia as the memorable event for the Muslim-majority Bangladesh. He said that it was the beginning of a new trend of integration of Islamic tenets and thoughts in the life, culture and education of this country.

Background

The need for compilation of an Islamic encyclopaedia in Bengali had been felt for a long time. The Bangla Academy in 1958 decided to undertake Bengali translation of shorter encyclopaedia of Islam published from Lyden. A nine-member subcommittee was constituted for this purpose with Moulana Abdullahel Kaafi Al-Qurashi as its Chairman. It was reconstituted in 1962 with Dr. Mahmud Hossain, the then Vice-Chancellor of Dacca University as its Chairman. The committee was again reconstituted in 1963 with Dr. Syed Moazzem Hossain, former Vice-Chairman of Dacca University as its Chairman. The reconstituted committee had 16 members including Dr. Serajul Haque, Dr. A. B. M. Habibullah, Dr. Mofizullah Kabir and Syed Ali Ahsan. Dr. Muhammad Shahidullah was the Editor-in-Charge of the Bengali Islamic Encyclopaedia.

691 Articles

After working for eight and a half years the sub-committee completed its task in 1967. The manuscript prepared by it contained 691 articles including Bengali translation of 508 articles of Shorter Encyclopaedia of Islam, revised translation of 111 articles from the same and 37 articles translated from Urdu Encyclopaedia of Islam and 35 original articles.

The Shorter Encyclopaedia of Islam in Bengali was published with the financial assistance from Islamic Solidarity Fund and Government of Bangladesh. A lump sum grant of the Government of Iraq was also provided to the Islamic Foundation for publication of the encyclopaedia.

Complete Book Soon

Dr. Majeed Khan said that in the absence of a Bengali encyclopaedia we had to depend and quote the international scholars most of whom did not belong to our religion, our religious heritage and traditions". He said that the publication of the Bengali Encyclopaedia of Islam would now "help us in knowing ourselves through the eyes of our scholars".

The Education Minister hoped that a complete encyclopaedia in 20 volumes would be completed soon. The Islamic Foundation had already taken up a project of compiling a bigger encyclopaedia of Islam running into 20 volumes which had been included in the Second Five-Year Plan of the country.

ERSHAD MESSAGE TO UNITED NATIONS CONDEMNS ISRAEL

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 21 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] The Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad has sent a message to the UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar conveying Bangladesh's deepest anguish at the latest Israeli savagery in West Beirut reports BSS.

In his message the CMLA said "We in Bangladesh along with the people of all peace-loving nations have been stunned by the appalling act of inhuman massacre of a large number of innocent and unarmed Palestinian men, women and children in shelter in the camps in West Beirut".

This General Ershad said constituted the most monstrous of the continuing acts of atrocities perpetrated against the Palestinian and Lebanese people. "While conveying Bangladesh's deepest anguish at such a savagery we urge Your Excellency to use your good offices in ensuring immediate measures towards ending the Israeli occupation of West Beirut and withdrawal of her forces forthwith from Lebanon in pursuant to the U.N. and Security Council resolutions".

Bangladesh the CMLA said also urged urgent adoption of such other measures as were necessary to ensure the security and safety of the Palestinians and the Lebanese people. "We assure your excellency of our fullest support in your efforts" he added.

ERSHAD OPENS REGIONAL HEALTH MINISTERS' MEET

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 22 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad inaugurated the second meeting of the Health Ministers of WHO South-East Asia region on Tuesday stressing the need for exchanging information and sharing the experiences to translate the regional cooperation on health into "concrete programmes of activity."

Wishing the success of the meeting the CMLA said that health was an "important investment in human capital" and he hoped that the Dacca conference would be able to identify fruitful areas of cooperation on health among the member states of the South-East Asia region. He observed that health was important not only as a social objective of giving a better quality of life to the people but also as an economic objective of obtaining a productive manpower. He assured the visiting Health Ministers of his government's eagerness and readiness to contribute its utmost to the process of regional cooperation for building a healthy and happy society.

Reiterating his government's firm commitment to the goal of "health for all by the year 2000" the CMLA said that as a preliminary step the Government intended to provide minimum primary health care facilities to everyone especially to those living in the rural areas. He said that the priorities had been realigned accordingly and programmes had been taken to build up a physical infrastructure, train adequate health manpower and develop a system for delivery of essential drugs, equipment and supplies to thana health complexes and family welfare centres. These units he added were designed to play key role in the integrated delivery of curative,preventive and family health needs in the rural areas.

The CMLA appreciated the help and assistance Bangladesh received from the UN agencies including WHO and other international organisations in the health sector. He however said that the available resources fell far short of our needs and emphasised the need for further regional and international cooperation for ensuring minimum primary health care for the majority of the population.

The CMLA said that Bangladesh was now engaged in restructuring its goals and priorities and rationalising the national resources. This had prompted he added to lay the infrastructure of a society based on equity and fair-play where the goal is to gradually reduce the gap between the rich and the poor. "We cannot allow a situation to continue where the bulk of the population living in villages remains deprived of the basic health needs" he declared.

Overemphasising the need for family planning and population control programme the CMLA said that a high rate of population growth imposed on our resources and existing facilities. He disclosed that a two-year emergency plan for population control and family planning was being formulated by his government.

In his address of welcome Health Minister Major General M. Shamsul Huq who is also the Chairman of the second Health Ministers meeting of WHO South-East Asia Region hoped that the Dacca meeting would be able to take stock of the health situation of the respective countries and be also to formulate policies for effective cooperation and take joint efforts for giving minimum basis health care to all the people.

Addressing the meeting the Regional Director of WHO South-East Asia Region Dr. U Ko Ko thanked the Government of Bangladesh for hosting the second meeting of the Health Ministers of the WHO South-East Asia Region. He believed that the goal of "health for all by the year 2000" could be achieved only if the political leaders perceive and pursue a unity of purpose not only nationally but also regionally and internationally.

The inaugural session of the meeting was attended by six Health Ministers from the six countries out of the 12-member WHO South-East Asia Region and the rest nations are represented by high-level officials. Mr. Siddiqur Rahman, Secretary, Ministry of Health, also addressed the meeting as the Chairman of the Steering Committee of the 35th session of the WHO Region Commit- concluded in Dacca on Monday. ERSHAD SPEAKS AT SUBMARINE CHASER COMMISSIONING

[Text] The Chief Martial Law Administrator, Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad said in Dacca on Friday that the nation must have a strong navy to ensure free movement within its maritime boundary to maintain the process of economic progress of the people, reports BSS.

Speaking at the commissioning ceremony of a submarine chaser of Bangladesh Navy--BNS Durjoy--the CMLA said in view of the country's long coastal belt and geographic and economic reasons an efficient Navy is a necessity.

General Ershad, who is also Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, said that the addition of this new ship to the Navy would enable the naval force to play yet a stronger role in guarding the maritime boundary and the sovereignty of the country as a whole.

He said that the navy had been protecting the sovereignty of the maritime boundary on one hand and helping the economy to grow on the other. "I am watching with pride that our brave sailors who have been safeguarding our maritime area with strong determination and undaunted courage have earned respect and love from their fellow countrymen," he added.

The CMLA pointed out that the maritime area of the country had great potentials from the economic point of view which he observed was equally precious like that of the main land. We must exploit the marine resources to make the country's overall economy more dynamic, he added.

General Ershad said that the members of the armed forces were determined to perform the responsibilities reposed in them by the people. He said that every citizen--military and civilian--should work shoulder to shoulder for the materialisation of the dream of building a new Bangladesh. "Inshallah, we shall be able to emancipate the people working with patriotism, sincerity, honesty, efficiency, faith and strong determination."

The CMLA expressed the hope that the submarine chaser--BNS Durjoy--would further strengthen the bond of cooperation between Bangladesh and China. He conveyed his sincere thanks to the people and the government of China for extending their hands of cooperation and friendship.

Earlier, speaking on the occasion, the DCMLA and Chief of Naval Staff Rear Admiral M. A. Khan said that the members of the Bangladesh Navy were pledge-bound to make any sacrifices for unity, integrity and progress of the country in the days to come as they had set up example of highest sense of dedication and discipline in discharging their duties in the past.

He called upon the naval personnel to take appropriate care and make best use of the ships and other equipment which were acquired with the hard earned money of the people. Availability of armaments is not the last word for attaining efficiency of an armed force, rather proper utilisation of the resources in hand in right time can bring success.

Admiral Khan urged the members of the Navy to come forward with bold steps and newer zeal along with members of other forces and the people to build a new Bangladesh at the call given by the Chief Martial Law Administrator, Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad.

The DCMLA recalled the praiseworthy participation of the navy in preserving and exploiting the marine resources and said, our naval officers and personnel have been performing the responsibility reposed in them to take the country on the road to progress and prosperity.

On his arrival at the BIWTA terminal at Sadarghat, the CMLA was received by Rear Admiral M. A. Khan.

General Ershad was then presented a guard of honour by a smart contingent of ship's company.

The Chief of the Naval Staff read out the commissioning "forman" of BNS Durjoy. A prayer followed for the overall development of the country.

The CMLA inspected the ship and went round its different sections.

The commanding officer of the ship presented General Ershad with a crest of the ship.

The CMLA later also presented a crest of Bangladesh Army to the ship's company while the Chief of Naval Staff presented him with a model of the ship.

The ceremony was attended, among others by the members of the Council of Ministers, Ambassador of the People's Republic of China to Bangladesh and high civil and military officials.

WRITER EXAMINES SLOW TREND IN FOREIGN TRADE SECTOR

Dacca HOLIDAY in English 12 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Jaglul Alam]

[Text] Due to a sluggish trend in the economy, the projected target in import and export during the first two months of the current fiscal year could not be achieved.

Taking into account that 2955 crore takas of import and 1550 crore takas of export are the government's target in 1982-83, the country would have earned an export revenue of 258.33 crore takas and import commodities worth 492.52 crore takas during July-August 1982. The total export during the same time however stood at 181.19 crore takas and total import at only 61.91 crore takas.

The achievement during those two months was 70.12 percent and 12.55 percent in terms of export and import respectively compared to the target set for the period.

It was also expected that during the period 125 crore takas of foreign exchange would be utilized under the wage earners' scheme (WES), but the letters of credit opened during the period on WES amounted to only 61.8 crore takas or less than 50 percent.

Import of both commercial items and industrial raw materials during the first two months of the current fiscal year fell because of acute shortage of foreign exchange components in the government's fund.

It is learnt that during the period no letter of credit was opened on cash license since the government could not provide the importers with foreign exchange against the licenses of traders.

At the same time no trade on barter was initiated by the traders during the period under review since the traders were not assured of foreign exchange to be paid on down payment even at the rate of 10 percent of the total imported consignment as provisioned under the barter system.

During the period under review import on deferred payment system was also negligible. It is learnt that foreign exporters are now demanding over 20 percent interest on trade under deferred payment while the government during the announcement of import policy for the year declared that no traders would be allowed to pay more than 18 percent on interest for their consignments imported on deferred payment.

The quantity of import also fell due to a slow trend in the international markets of the country. It is felt by traders' representatives that a majority of the consumers are now suffering from poor income and they are consequently losing their buying capacity (HOLIDAY, September 5).

According to a source, commodities worth over 60 crore takas imported last year under open general license and WES have been lying in Chittagong port since the importers are reluctant to take delivery of their goods.

Many of those commodities were imported under emergency allotments issued by the previous government, it is gathered.

The bulk of the consignments imported during the first two months of the current fiscal period under wage earner's scheme included commercial items like edible oil, salt, cotton, textiles, cement, transportation vehicles, while only a negligible portion of the total consignment was raw material for the industrial sector.

It may be recalled that last year commodities worth over 600 crore takas were imported under WES and government had set a raised target for WES at 750 crore takas for 1982-83.

Crisis in the export sector is prevailing due to fall in the export price of jute goods. During the first two months of the current fiscal year jute goods of over 50 thousand long tons worth 50.15 crore takas were exported from Bangladesh as against 91.59 crore takas of export earning from jute goods during the corresponding period of the previous year.

In terms of volume however, there has been an increase in jute goods export.

Fall in the export price of jute goods is attributed to the prevailing recession in the global economy.

Last year government set the target of jute goods export at 534 crore takas. But due to different reasons the country earned only 568 crore takas and incurred a loss of over 66 crore takas.

This year the target is to earn 690 crore takas from jute goods export and the expected target for the period under review was 115 crore takas.

Falling Trade

Besides jute products, export of raw jute, leather and tea also deteriorated in terms of money during the first month of the current fiscal year compared to the export of the same items during the corresponding period of the previous year.

In July 1981 raw jute worth 8.12 crore takas was exported from Bangladesh; it came down to 7.70 crore takas during July, 1982. In July '81 leather amounting to 15.02 crore takas was exported; it decreased by 70 percent in July '82 when leather worth 4.65 crore takas was exported.

Similarly during the same period export of tea in terms of money also fell by almost 35 lakh takas.

However, during the same time export of frozen food and naptha registered an improvement. In July 1981 frozen food worth 4.81 crore takas was exported. In July 1982 the earning increased by 9.10 crore takas to 13.91 crore takas.

During July 1982, naptha worth 5.95 crore takas was exported while during the corresponding period of last year not even a single consignment of naptha was exported.

/Last week a meeting between the Ministry of Commerce and controlling authorities of exports and imports was held in which the overall trading situation of the country was discussed.

/In the meeting the vice-chairman of the Export Promotion Bureau pointed out that due to fall in import, the export sector is also being affected.

/He said that the sea-going vessels which bring the imported commodities are generally chartered for exporting items abroad. But since import has considerably decreased crisis is also prevailing in the export sector because the exporters are not getting enough space for exporting their consignments./ [in boldface]

He also said that at one stage the Bangladesh Shipping Corporation, which lends its sea-going vessels to foreign parties on charter, was requested by the export promotion authorities to release its ships for exporting goods from Bangladesh.

But the BSC declined on the ground that during their return voyage the ships would have no consignments since import into the country has fallen.

Instead the BSC suggested that it would allow its ships for export provided the exporters chartered the vessels both ways.

Funds Released

Recently the government released a small amount of foreign exchange for opening letters of credit under cash licenses. It is learnt that another fund will shortly be released for importing goods under the barter system.

A spokesman in the office of the controller of export and import said that after releasing the funds the import sector is likely to get some momentum and it can help the present situation both in the import and export sectors.

A spokesman of the Dacca Chamber of Commerce said that recently an amount of 273 crore takas of untaxed money has been declared in which over 3.70 crore takas were in foreign exchange. He said that even if a portion of this amount is invested in the trading sectors of the country it could bring improvement to the country's economy.

'INADEQUATE SUPPORT' TO DISINVESTED INDUSTRIES NOTED

Dacca HOLIDAY in English 12 Sep 82 p 3

[Article by Jaglul Alam]

[Text] Although the government had disinvested about 96 industries some six years back, most of those industries which include tea gardens, drum metal factories, aluminium factories, rubber processing factories, tanneries etc. are facing great problems on account of financial constraints and inadequate support of the government.

Originally it was decided that the buyers of the industries would pay the price of their respective industries in nine years. But later on it was finalized that they should pay the outstanding amounts within three years in the case of developed industries and four years in the case of less developed industries.

However, in each case a period of one year was allowed as grace period for the repayment of outstanding debts.

The buyers of those industries demanded withdrawal of penal interests in case of failure of repayment of debts in time. But the government imposed a penal interest at the rate of seven percent counting from 1976.

Meanwhile many of the owners have already closed the operation of the industries due to acute shortage of running capital. It is learnt that many of the buyers in 1976 were assured that they would receive substantial amounts of bank loans for their industries but later the assurances were broken.

It is learnt that announcement on disinvestment of 10 tea gardens was made in 1976 but due to the lengthy official formalities those tea gardens are yet to be transferred to the buyers. Most of the tea gardens have their problems of litigation, boundary disputes and other constraints for which the handover process could not be done in time.

It is gathered that some days back the ministry of industry requested the district administrators of the respective tea garden areas to expedite the handover process but no action has yet been taken by them in this regard.

Last week the representatives of the buyers of the disinvested industries held a meeting with the minister for industries for the redressal of their long outstanding problems. It is learnt that the meeting did not yield any fruitful result.

A representative of the owners of the disinvested industries said that they would hold their annual general meeting on 17 September at Dacca to find out and determine their next course of action.

PAPER REPORTS 99 PERCENT COMMODITY AID UNUSED

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 21 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Alamgir Hossain]

[Text] Precious foreign aid remains stuck up at the External Resources Division (ERD). Every year 99 per cent of the new commodity aid is not being utilized. But it has become a regular phenomenon for top official to make foreign trips almost daily.

Only because of widespread agitation over the rise in food price ninety per cent of food aid given for a year is utilized in the year. Sometimes the utilization of food aid crosses the allocation of a year requiring a portion of future allocation or a portion from other sectors.

On the other hand the project and commodity aid are lying unutilized for years together as the utilization of project and commodity aid is painstaking.

Pending utilisation the remaining portion of the commodity and project aid received in the yester years cannot be utilized totally even in the twelve months of the next year. And hence the question of utilizing the aid received against new commitment hardly arises. Unutilized at all it is one or two per cent in the case of project aid and to 20 to 22 per cent in the case of commodity aid.

Failure of the concerned quarters to intensify the development activities of the country through utilization of the project and commodity aids has compelled them to admit at last that the unusual delay in undertaking a project gives rise to acute problem to the flow of foreign aid.

The projects are not prepared in due time. If prepared it is done so haphazardly, that its consideration quite naturally runs into snags and the process of approving the project becomes unbearably dilatory.

Consequently, when the projects are submitted after preparation the eagerness of the doners to provide aid evaporates. Instead of detecting the reason of this critical situation in the mentality and inability of the officials entrusted with the responsibility of utilizing the foreign aid the ERD has attributed it in a book to the delay in forming the project committee, selecting and appointing people, acquiring land and approving the projects.

It has been admitted in the book that even if slight revision is required for the project it cannot be done instantly. This situation arises as the issues of of budget allocation, appointment of employees and expenditures including their salary are associated with the revision of the pro: ject papers.

Despite identification of these uneasy and acute problems no step is taken in the subsequent budget to solve them.

Thus the unutilised loans in the pipeline in the beginning of July 1981 amounted to 312.51 crore dollars. This include 6 crore dollars food aid, 36 crore dollars commodity aid and 270 crore dollars project aid. In the fiscal year 1980-81 only 25 per cent of the project aid and a mere 2 per cent of the fresh committed project aid was available. The per centage of actual utilisation of the project aid was almost the same every year. The project assistance could not be utilised because of certain problems which are beyond imagination. But the ERD described this rate of utilisation of project aid as most satisfactory.

About 93 per cent of the project aid amounting to 42 crore dollars accumulated in the pipeline by 1980-81 was utilised. Only 23 per cent of the fresh committed amount was utilised. The ERD felt that the entire amount should have been utilised. Utilisation of the assistance provided by IDA, ADB, West Germany and Netherlands who are the major donors. The commitment of fresh aid is usually based on the performance of utilisation.

In fact utilisation of commodity aid is hampered because of delay in procuring the goods and commodities. Besides, authorities find it difficult to finance the local currency.

All these factors contributed to the accumulation of 328 crore dollars assistance in the pipeline during the current year when there is a fresh commitment of 131 crore dollars The relevant authorities are moving around in search of aid while 459 crore dollars are lying untilised.

PAPER GIVES DETAILS OF NEW JAPANESE LOANS

[Text] Bangladesh will receive approximately Taka 229.17 crore (27.50 billion yen) as commodity and project loan from Japan during the current fiscal year under an exchange of note signed between the two countries in Dacca on Monday says BSS.

The loans will be available for utilisation after signing of formal loan agreements in Tokyo between the Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund (OECF) of Japan and the Government of Bangladesh soon.

Of the total amount Taka 150 crore will be treated as commodity loan and the rest 79.17 crore as project loan.

Both the loans are repayable in 30 years including a grace period of 10 years and bear an interest rate of 1.25 per cent per annum.

The exchange of note was signed by Mr. Shafiul Alam, Additional Secretary of External Resources Division and Mr. Toru Iwanami, Charge D'affaires of Embassy of Japan on behalf of Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund (OECF).

The commodity loan, which is united and has to be disbursed within two years from the date of signing of loan agreement will be utilised for procurement of wide variety of items like industrial raw materials and spares, equipment and machinery, chemical fertilizer, cement and raw cotton.

The major portion of the commodity loan will be allocated to different agencies for procurement of the items under the current import policy and the balance for meeting the foreign exchange requirement of the development projects under the annual development programme.

Of the Taka 79.17 crore project loan, Taka 33.33 crore will be allocated for Kaptai-hydro electric power plant extension project (4th and 5th units), Taka 29.16 crore for Chittagong urea fertilizer project and the remaining Taka 16.66 crore has been earmarked for Bakhrabad Gas System Ltd. for meeting the cost over-run of the gas field development project.

Aid to Power Plant

Another AFP report from Tokyo says: The Japanese Government has decided to extend 27500 million yen (1.4 million dollars) in loans to Bangladesh and 4100 million yen Zimbabwe officials said today.

Bangladesh will use the loan for power plant and other projects while Zimbabwe will use the credit to finance a road expansion project the officials said.

MINISTER ANNOUNCES FOUR-TIER NATIONAL EDUCATION POLICY

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 24 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Education and Religious Affairs Minister Dr A. Majeed Khan, said in Dacca on Thursday that the New National Educational Policy for 1982-87 was designed to achieve high rate of literacy and ensure employment, reports BSS.

Announcing the new policy at a Press conference the Minister explained the salient features of the New Education Policy and said that the Government had given emphasis on achieving high rate of literacy since it constituted the basic foundation for all development activities. Secondly, the Government was keen to introduce a system of education which could be "immediately cashed in employment" he said adding the present system had failed to sustain the aspirations of our youth.

Dr Khan stated that under the new system there would be four tiers of education namely basic, preparatory, secondary and higher. The first three stages of education would comprise 12 years, the basic being from class one to five, the preparatory from six to eight and secondary from nine to eleven.

The introduction of Arabic as a compulsory subject would start from class one. This had been done "keeping the religious and cultural aspects of life of the people and our international needs in view", he added.

The Education Minister noted that the educational policy had been framed on the basis of review and examinations of almost all the education commission reports prepared since 1947 and more particularly since the liberation. "It has also its antecedent history, success and failures of the past and views of the cross-section of the people", he said.

He said the basic consideration for formulating the new education policy was guided by the fact that the highest percentage of unemployment in the higher educated section had been posing a serious problem to education. In this connection he said that approximately 40 per cent of the youth having education over the stage of 12 years was not unemployed. The nation can not afford to go through an exercise of education without the scope of employment, he said.

Dr Khan said that the second consideration for the new Education Policy was the slow rate of literacy in the country. The average literacy rate had remained more or less static during the last 20 years.

He told the Press conference that the rate of literacy in our country was 18 per cent in 1961 and according to census report of 1981 the rate of literacy now stood at about 22 per cent. Giving statistics, he stated that 30 million people out of total 46 million in our country were illiterate in 1961 and in 1981 only 20 million people out of 90 million are literate. The implications and weight of illiteracy would bring down all efforts for development, he said.

The third consideration was that the content of our education has so far remained aimless and directionless. The very objectives and scope of knowledge at the primary and secondary stages had remained very confusing. Although 4 or 5 years of basic education formed the mainstay for the majority of our people. With that view of realism one has to think about the content of our education, he stressed.

Dr. Khan pointed out that for every two thousand people one primary school would be set up. The preparatory level of three years from class six to eight he said was aimed at developing in the learners civic and other responsibilities.

The Minister said that the drop out at the end of preparatory would be catered through a large number of vocational and trade schools to be established new in addition to the existing 47 vocational schools.

He said one hundred secondary schools were brought under community school projects with provision for training in 20 modular courses covering five trades, two for women and three for men. Three hundred more such schools would be taken under the project by 1985 he pointed out.

Dr. Khan said that fifty technical and at least 20 nurses higher secondary courses would be introduced in the country by 1983.

Dr. Khan told a questioner that Tk. 600 crore would be spent for technical education under the new policy. He said the Government would supply free dress to the children of class II from January next year. This he added would be done to encourage the education at the primary level.

The Minister said the new policy had kept the door open for higher education to those who wanted to have it after acquiring practical experience in their respective lines.

Replying to a question he said that the fundamental difference between the previous education policy and the new one was that in the past direct steps were not taken for implementation of policies even if those were ideal.

SAUDI $100 MILLION GRANT REPORTED UNUTILIZED

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 22 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Hassan Abul Quashem]

[Text] Over 100 million dollar Saudi grant lies unutilised for over a year due to local currency shortage.

The Saudi grant was disbursed in September last to 10 government agencies but nearly all of it remains unutilised although government has been making frantic efforts to organise finances for meeting its massive developmental budget shortage.

An economic expert told New Nation the capacity of the economy to absorb foreign aid has considerably declined following the inability of internal resource generation in recent years. The confidence of the donors has been eroded as the recipient country could not even utilize the disbursed amount of foreign currency component along with the local currency.

Due to this local currency shortage different government agencies failed to utilise their shares of foreign aid against the Saudi grant of 100 million dollar which was disbursed in September last year.

A special request was made by the then President of the country to the Saudi government during the last foreign exchange crisis in October just before the Presidential election. The amount was, however, raised to 150 million dollar after the visit of the then President, to Saudi kingdom.

Since then the concerned authority has allocated the disbursed fund among ten government agencies on priority basis. These agencies, even after the elapse of nearly a year, could not marshal the strength to utilise this. Only 14 million dollar of that grant has been utilised by them so far.

The agencies which received allocation are—Bangladesh Shilpa Bank (BSB), Bangladesh Shilpa Rin Sangstha (BSRS), Bangladesh Power Development Board (BPDB), Bangladesh Agricultural Development Corporation (BADC), Bangladesh Food and Sugar Industries Corporation, Bangladesh Steel and Engineering Corporation, Bangladesh Textile Mills Corporation, Bangladesh Krishi Bank, Bangladesh Jute Mills Corporation and Chief Controller of Imports and Exports.

Out of the total allocated fund most of the agencies failed to utilise their past shares and sought extension of time for opening letters of credit.

The BSB and BSRS which were given a total 17 million dollar utilised only half their funds as they are not in a position to provide local currency component of the project cost. Whereas Bangladesh Jute Mills Corporation had surrendered their total allocated foreign exchange to the allocating authority because of absence of avenues to utilise the aid. Rather, according to the BJMC, they requested to keep their funds in the next financial year.

BTMC, which was given an allocation of 3 million dollar that remained unutilised, subsequently requested the authority to extend the date of opening the letters of credit.

Meanwhile, another 50 million dollar of Saudi grant has been disbursed in August last. External Resources Division of the Ministry of Finance and Planning has become worried about the slow pace of the utilisation of the Saudi grant. The Saudi government expressed doubt regarding the gradual erosion of the capacity of utilising foreign aid by Bangladesh.

PROCEDURES FOR RETURN OF TEXTILE, JUTE MILLS NOTED

[Text] The government has finally decided to return the shares of jute and textile mills to the Bangladeshi owners and worked out certain principles for the transfer of shares. A notification asking the Bangladeshi shareholders of jute and textile mills to submit the relevant documents in support of their claims will be issued today.

This was announced by Mr. Shafiul Azam, Minister for Commerce and Industries at a Press conference at Shilpa Bhavan on Tuesday. Elaborating the process of transfer of shares to the Bangladeshi owners, he said that the government will ask the former Bangladeshi shareholders to return the compensation money they received earlier from the government on account of nationalisation.

Bangladeshi owners having more than 51 per cent shares in jute and textile mills will be offered the rest shares to be taken over by them. For the additional shares, the Bangladeshi owners will have to pay the price at the rate to be decided by a competent authority. The price will be revalued according to the market price. To enable the Bangladeshi owners to acquire the additional shares at the revaluated price the government has decided to allow them 10 per cent down payment. The balance shall have to be paid within five years in instalment.

Mr. Shafiul Azam said that in case of Bangladeshi shareholders with less than 51 per cent shares, the government will ask them to acquire at first 51 per cent shares. The additional shares shall have to be purchased at revalued price. In such cases, the shareholders will be asked to pay 51 per cent of cost of additional shares immediately. The Balance shall have to be paid within 12 months from the date of transfer.

All assets and liabilities of the jute and textile mills, the Industries Minister said shall be borne by the new companies. The government, he said, however, made liberal policy in this regard. The government will give them substantial period to repay the liabilities. For the jute mills, the government will allow them a 12-year period with two years' moratorium to repay the liabilities or loans and for the carpet backing mills the period will be 15 years with two years' moratorium.

For the textile mills, the period of repayment of loans will be six to nine years with two years' moratorium.

Replying to a question the Commerce and Industries Minister said that the new companies will not be allowed to terminate the service of the staff within one year of the transfer. He hoped that there will not be any large scale dismissal.

The government will form an interim board of directors for each company to facilitate the return of shares. After the transfer of shares, the government has taken a decision to coordinate sale of jute goods of all the jute mills. In foreign market, a pricing committee he said will be formed to supervise, ensure and monitor the foreign price. Bangladesh Jute Mills Corporation will act as the agents. No owner will be allowed to sell the jute goods below the price fixed by the pricing committee.

(n) "rules" means rules made under this ordinance.

(2) In case of any doubt or dispute arising otherwise than in the course of any proceedings as to whether a person is an emigrant within the meaning of this ordinance, the question shall be determined by the Government and such determination shall be final.

[Text] The following is the remaining portion of the text of Emigration Ordinance, 1982 issued by the Ministry of Law and Land Reforms on September 6:

3. Appointment of Registrar of Emigrants. (1) the Government may appoint a person to be a Registrar of Emigrants and define the area to which the authority of a Registrar so appointed shall extend.

(2) Every Registrar shall be a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

4. Duties and functions of the Registrar.--Every Registrar shall, in addition to the duties assigned to him by or under this Ordinance, perform such functions as may be assigned to him by the Government.

5. Agents in foreign countries.--The Government may, for the purpose of safeguarding the interest of emigrants and promoting overseas employment, appoint persons to be agents in any place outside Bangladesh and may define their powers and duties.

6. Delegation of certain authority.--The Government may authorise any authority subordinate to it to--

(a) promote emigration of citizens,

(b) contract and regulate such emigration, and

(c) look after the interest and welfare of emigrants at home and abroad.

7. Regulation for emigration. (1) Emigration for overseas employment shall not be lawful from any port or place except from such ports or places as the Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, declare to be ports or places from which such emigration is lawful.

(2) No person shall, unless he possesses a valid demand, recruit or attempt to recruit any citizen for overseas employment except in accordance with the provisions of this Ordinance and the rules made thereunder.

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, emigration of a citizen shall be lawful, if he is in possession of valid travel documents with registration endorsement under sub-section (4) of section 11 and--

(a) he is in possession of a letter of appointment or a work permit from a foreign employer, or an employment or emigration visa from a foreign Government, or

(b) he has been selected for emigration by a foreign employer through an organisation or authority or by a recruiting agent, recognised by the Government in this behalf or under an agreement or treaty between the Government and a foreign Government.

8. Power to prohibit emigration of workers.--(1) if the Government, having regard to the occupation, profession, vocation or qualification of any person or class of persons is satisfied that emigration of such person or class of persons is not in the public interest, it may, by order, prohibit the emigration of such person or class of persons and thereupon the departure of such person or class of persons otherwise than in accordance with such order shall not be lawful.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of sub-section (1), where the Government has reason to believe that sufficient grounds exist for prohibiting emigration of any person or any class of persons to any country, it may, by notification of the official gazette, declare that emigration of such person or class of persons to that country shall cease to be lawful from a date specified in the notification; and from that date such emigration to that country shall accordingly cease to be lawful.

9. Prohibition of advertisement, etc--(1) No person or organisation shall, except with the prior permission of the Government or any authority designated, recruit or attempt to recruit a citizen for overseas employment or issue an advertisement or publish any material or hold any interview or examination for such recruitment for the purpose of emigration.

(2) No newspaper shall publish any advertisement for employment abroad unless it is satisfied that the same is intended to be issued with the Government approval or clearance.

10. Grant of Licence.--(1) Whoever desires to engage, or to recruit or to assist, any person to emigrate shall apply to the Government, for licence at such time and in such manner, and shall, with his application, furnish such information and documents and pay such security and fee as may be prescribed.

(2) On receiving an application under sub-section (1), the Government may, after such enquiry regarding the character, antecedents and solvency of the applicant as it may consider necessary, grant the licence applied for on such terms and conditions, if any, as may be prescribed, or reject the application for licence.

(3) The decision of the Government under sub-section (2) shall be final and shall not be questioned in any court of law.

(4) A licence under this section may be issued in favour of a citizen or in favour of a corporation, company, partnership firm or any other entity, if--

(a) in the case of corporation or company, at least sixty per cent of the stock of the corporation or the company, and

(b) in the case of a partnership firm or any other entity, at least sixty per cent of the capital or proprietory right of the firm or the entity, is owned or controlled by Bangladeshi citizens.

11. Appearance of emigrants before the Registrar, etc.--(1) Before any person departs from Bangladesh, the person by whom he has been engaged or assisted shall appear in person or by his duly authorised agent before the Registrar and furnish such information regarding terms of his engagement or contract, and such other matters concerning his selection as may be prescribed.

(2) If the person departing from Bangladesh is directly appointed or recruited by a foreign Government or organisation or agency or by other foreign employers, such person shall furnish required information to the Registrar.

(3) If the Registrar is satisfied that the terms of agreement under which a person has been engaged or assisted are in conformity with the terms on the basis of which the licence to recruit was granted, he shall register in a book to be kept for the purpose such particulars concerning the person engaged or assisted and his dependents, if any, and the person engaging or assisting him in such form as may be prescribed.

(4) Registration of persons departing Bangladesh shall be endorsed on their passports by the Registrar.

12. Registration of emigrants residing abroad:--An emigrant residing abroad and who has not been registered under this Ordinance shall get himself registered with such Labour Attache or in his absence with any such other officer as may be specified by the Government in this behalf and such registration shall be reported to the Registrar.

13. Non-transferability of licence or authority--(2) No licence shall be used directly or indirectly by any person other than the person in whose favour it was issued or at any place other than the place mentioned in the licence nor shall the licence be transferred, conveyed or assigned to any person or entity.

(2) No transfer of the business address or designation of any agent or representative mentioned in the licence shall be made without prior approval of the government.

[Text] The following is the remaining part of the text of Emigration Ordinance, 1982 issued by the Ministry of Law and Land Reforms, on September 6:

14. Cancellation, suspension, forfeiture of security, etc.--(1) If, at any time during the pendency of a licence, the Government is satisfied, after making such enquiry as it may deem necessary, that the licencee has been guilty of misconduct or that his conduct or performance as a licencee has been unsatisfactory or that he has violated any of the provisions of this Ordinance or the rules made thereunder or the prescribed Code of Conduct, it may, after giving the licencee an opportunity of being heard, by order in writing, cancel the licence or suspend it for a period to be specified in the order and may also forfeit the security furnished by him under section 10 in full or in part.

(2) The security money forfeited under sub-section (1) may be--

(a) paid to an affected person, or

(b) utilised for repatriating of any stranded person in foreign country or for such other purpose as the Government may deem appropriate in the public interest.

(3) On expiry of the period for which the licence is granted or on the intimation by the licencee that he does not intend to continue to act as a recruiting agent and on being satisfied that no ground for forfeiting the security in whole or in part exists, the Government may order the refund of the security or part thereof to the person by whom it was furnished or to his authorised representative.

15. Power to withdraw licence.--Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in this Ordinance, if, at any time, the Government is satisfied that it is necessary in the public interest to discontinue the practice of granting licence to recruiting agents, it may, by notification in the official Gazette, withdraw all licences granted under section 10.

16. Decision under sections 14 and 15 to be final.--The decisions of the Government under sections 14 and 15 shall be final and shall not be questioned in any court of law.

17. Inspection, etc. to ensure compliance with the provisions of the Ordinance.--The Government may, for the enforcement of the provisions of this Ordinance and the rules made thereunder, appoint such officers as it may deem fit and an officer so appointed may

(a) enter into any office or premise maintained or used by any person or entity in connection with the recruitment of emigrants for overseas employment;

(b) require and enforce the production of any books of accounts and records maintained by such person or entity and inspect such books of accounts and records; and

(c) examine such person or entity and obtain from him or it statement in writing in this behalf.

18. Power to search and detain vessels.--All the powers for the time being conferred by law on officers of customs with regard to the searching and detention of vessels may be exercised for the prevention of offences under this Ordinance by any such officer or by any officer authorised by the Government in this behalf.

19. Power to make rules.--(1) The Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Ordinance.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:

(a) powers and duties of officers appointed by the Government under the Ordinance;

(b) the licensing, supervision and control of persons engaged in recruiting persons for overseas employment or causing or assisting persons to emigrate and in the conveyance and accommodation of emigrants, and the prohibition of unlicensed persons from being so engaged;

(c) the establishment, supervision and regulation of any place of accommodation provided for emigrants and for their medical care while resident there;

(d) the forms to be maintained and the returns to be submitted by persons licensed in accordance with the rules made under clause (b);

(e) the manner of inspection of premises, books of accounts and records of any person or entity connected with recruitment of emigrants for overseas employment;

(f) the information to be furnished by recruiting agents to emigrants and the language in which such information is to be furnished;

(g) appearance of emigrants before the Registrar and furnishing information under section 12;

(h) fees to be paid by a recruiting agent to the Registrar for each emigrant departing Bangladesh;

(i) setting up training, orientation and briefing centres to guide and advise intending emigrants and their dependents proceeding abroad;

(j) recall and repatriation, in the public interest, of an emigrant;

(k) measures to be adopted for the welfare of emigrants and their dependents;

(l) disposal of complaints against recruiting agents;

(m) formation of an association of recruiting agents and framing of Code of Conduct to be observed by recruiting agents;

(n) service charge to be paid to a recruiting agent;

(o) depositing of fees and securities by a recruiting agent;

(p) procedure for sending of emigrants by persons possessing secured contract or sub-contract for the purpose;

(q) the security, well-being and protection of emigrants; and

(r) fees receivable from persons recruited and going abroad for employment.

20. Unlawful emigration.--(1) Whoever, except in conformity with the provisions of this Ordinance and the rules made thereunder, emigrates or attempts to emigrate or departs or attempts to depart shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year simple imprisonment or with fine not exceeding Taka five thousand or with both.

(2) whoever, except in conformity with the provisions of this ordinance or the rules made thereunder:

(a) makes or attempts to make any agreement with any person purporting to bind that person, or any other person to emigrate or

25. Recovery of expenditure for repatriation etc: (2) The amount of expenditure, if any incurred by the Government for repatriation to Bangladesh of a person who is convicted of an offence punishable under sub-section (1) of section 20 or section 24, shall be recoverable from such person in accordance with the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913 (Ben. Act III of 1913).

(2) The Government may recover the amount involved in an offence under section 21 in accordance with the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1923 (Ben. Act III of 1913) and the amount so recovered shall be paid to the person who had paid it.

26. Special courts--(1) The Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, establish as many special courts as it considers necessary for trial of offences under this Ordinance and, where it establishes more than one special court, shall specify in the notification the headquarters of each special court and the territorial limits within which it shall exercise jurisdiction under this Ordinance.

(2) A special court shall consist of a person who is the Chairman of a labour Court established under the Industrial Relations Ordinance, 1969 (XXIII of 1969).

(3) A special court shall take cognizance of, and have jurisdiction to try, an offence punishable under this Ordinance only upon a complaint in writing made by such person as the Government may, by a general or special order, authorise in this behalf.

(4) A special court trying an offence under this Ordinance shall try such offence summarily and in trying such offences, such special court shall follow the procedure laid down in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act V of 1898), for summary trial.

27. Indemnity.--No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Government, Registrar or any person for anything in good faith done or intended to be done under this Ordinance.

28. Ordinance not to apply to certain persons.--This Ordinance shall apply to the departure of a person--

(a) who is not a citizen of Bangladesh, or

(b) who is in the service of the Republic or of a local authority and is proceeding on duty, or on training, or leave, or for employment with any international organisation, with the permission of the Government, or

(c) who is engaged as a member of the crew on board a foreigngoing vessel, or

(d) who is a dependent of a citizen already resident or employed in a foreign country and is on a temporary visit to Bangladesh.

29. Repeal and sayings.--(1) The Emigration Act, 1922 (VII of 1922), shall stand repealed in relation to any provision in respect of which this Ordinance comes into force.

PRELIMINARY ESTIMATES ON SYLHET WELL REPORTED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 19 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] BEANIBAZAR (Sylhet), Sept. 18:--Gas and petroleum products worth over Taka 70 crore can be harnessed annually at the initial stage from Beanibazar well at Sylhet, according to a preliminary estimate. The final production testing of the well, now being carried out, is expected to be completed within a couple of days.

The Deputy Chief Martial Law Administrator and Minister for Energy, Air Vice-Marshal Sultan Mahmud who visited the site of oil exploration at Beanibazar on Saturday told newsmen that the preliminary seismic study of the drilling site has revealed a reserve of nearly 1.1 trillion cubic feet of gas. The ratio of condensate (oil in crude form) is 20 barrels for each million cubic feet of gas. The DCMLA said that though condensate is extracted in other gas fields also the ratio is quite low in those places and as such not commercially viable for extraction. But the ratio of condensate present in Beanibazar well is comparatively quite high and thus feasible for commercial extraction, the DCMLA addou.

The ratio of exploitation of condensate would be 800 barrels subject to the extraction of 40 million cubic feet of gas a day. Experts at the drilling site told DCMLA that condensate accounts for 80 per cent of petroleum, 15 per cent kerosene and five per cent by product. The net recovery of petroleum as such would be 640 barrels or roughly 28 thousand gallons per day. While the recovery of kerosene from the well will be around 120 barrels a day. The estimated price of the gas, petroleum and kerosene at this rate of exploitation would be around Taka 20 lakh each day.

Of the total estimated reserve at the Beanibazar well the extractable quantity will be around 0.8 trillion cubic feet and under the rated exploitation the reserve would be able to feed the country for 60 years or more.

Talking to newsmen the DCMLA said that the government is determined to exploit untapped natural resources that exist within the high pressure zone where Beanibazar well is also located. The government will seek financial assistance from World Bank and International Monetary Fund (IMF) for further exploration of oil and gas at Sylhet. The potential of oil and gas reserve at Beanibazar is considered very high but the exploration has been suspended due to lack of fund. But soon it would be taken at national level the DCMLA added

The cost for further exploration and commercial extraction of oil and gas would involve over 60 million U.S. dollars, the DCMLA pointed out. At the moment further exploration is not possible in the absence of firm commitment of fund by the donor agencies. More drilling work at potential sites in Sylhet would be carried out as soon as adequate fund is made available.

Addressing the personnel representing various agencies connected with the exploration at Beanibazar well the DCMLA thanked them for their efforts and expressed determination to translate into reality what they have accomplished.

It may be recalled that the work on Beanibazar well under Multi-Well Development Programme (MDP) financed by West German grant began in November 1980 and was completed in May last year. The Beanibazar well has a depth of more than thirteen thousand feet and the oil and gas were found between the upper strata at 10,756 feet and lower strata at 11,354 feet. The pressure at the site was found to be more than four thousand and a temperature of 170 degrees. The total estimated cost of the Beanibazar well is around 13 million U.S. dollars.

STEADY RISE IN EXPORTS TO GULF STATES NOTED

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 19 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Matiur Rahman]

[Text] Bangladesh made a steady mark, though lately, in her trade with the six Gulf states bringing the total export earning to the tune of Taka 25 crore in last one decade.

But the import bills mainly for crude and partly for refined oil from the Gulf states cost Bangladesh over Taka 2480 crore during the decade beginning in 1973.

The bilateral trade separately with the six Gulf states--Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates (UAE), Kuwait, Qatar, Oman and Bahrain--remained highly imbalanced in all these years because of the crude import. The situation was substantially eased by either loans or grants provided to Bangladesh.

The Gulf states mainly Saudi Arabia, UAE and Kuwait provided the loans and grants amounting to over Taka 541 crore during the decade for the import of crude and refined oil.

There was remarkable improvement in export in 1981-82 when the earning was over Taka 10 crore from the Gulf states over the previous year 1980-81 when the export earning was about Taka four crore only.

The bilateral trade got a boost in the later part of the decade when the export earning started rising from a morbid stage that was prevailing in the early years of Bangladesh's independence.

The total earning from the Gulf states in 1973-74 was about Taka 20 lakh only with no export to Oman and Bahrain. In 1973-74, Saudi Arabia imported Bangladesh commodities worth Taka 5,20,000; Kuwait Taka 8 lakh; UAE Taka 6 lakh 50,000 and Qatar Taka one lakh only.

Though Bangladesh has bright prospect of marketing a number of her commodities in the Gulf states, she exports at present mainly perishable commodities like fish (fresh and salted), shrimps and prawns, vegetables besides some traditional items like jute and jute goods.

Saudi Arabia alone imported shrimps and prawns worth about Taka two crore in 1981-82. Similarly, UAE, Qatar and Oman imported shrimps and prawns, fish, both fresh and salted, as major items from Bangladesh during the year.

While Kuwait imported jute manufactures like hessians as main item besides handicrafts, electrical goods and rubber goods worth Taka 1 crore 78 lakh. Most of the Gulf states import 'atar' and 'agar bati' worth of several lakhs of taka from Bangladesh every year.

Bilateral trade with the Gulf states started increasing both ways from the later part of the seventies and became diversified.

According to official sources, there are tremendous demands of Bangladesh commodities mostly non-traditional items like printed materials and packages, rubber goods, electrical goods, wires and cables, handicrafts, ready-made garments, textiles besides vegetables, fish, shrimps and prawns in the Gulf markets. There is good demand of jute goods like carpets and others, export volume of which can easily be increased.

Despite the prospect of good markets, Bangladesh failed to cope with the demand and the traders, who are "very much keen" to export an increased volume of commodities face a number of problems particularly at home.

The exporters particularly of perishable commodities face serious problems in dispatching their goods to the Gulf states by air due to highly irregular flight of the national airline--Biman. If it can maintain regular schedule, the export volume will go up as Biman flies to a number of spots in the Gulf states like Dubai, Doha, Bahrain, Jeddah etc, an exporter told this correspondent.

"Usually we collect quality products whatever they are after a good search at home to get a good price. But what is the use if we can't send them in time to our buyers because of the delay in flight and the goods get perished in the midway," he lamented.

Similarly, the Shipping Corporation often could not provide required space, some time not at all, for the exportable commodities and the goods remained dumped for days together causing damage to the goods.

According to the exporters, neither the Foreign Trade Division nor the Export Promotion Bureau comes to their help with information and action though they put up spectacular advertisements with a call to boost the export.

Besides Bangladesh, there are other neighbouring countries--Pakistan, India, Sri Lanka who are equally competitors of the markets in the Gulf states. "If we are not conscious and particular, they will come and capture the market," one of the exporters said.

LITTLE SUCCESS IN NEW INDUSTRIAL POLICY SEEN

[Article by Musleh A. Tarek]

[Text] The liberal facilities provided by the government under the new industrial policy for the potential private investors particularly in the form of specific time limit for processing, sanctioning, and disbursement of loans by the loan giving agencies have not geared up much till now.

Bangladesh Shilpa Bank (BSB) and Bangladesh Shilpa Rin Shangstha (BSRS), the two main institutional sources for industrial finance, are suffering from resource constraints making it difficult on their part to undertake new operations on a meaningful scale.

Meanwhile, the number of fresh applications from investors with the loan giving agencies has recorded a sharp decrease. This reflects both the prevailing state of slump in industrial investments as well as the continuing constraints in fresh credit sanctioning capacity of loan giving agencies because of paucity of funds.

It is learnt that the donor countries and agencies have taken a hard attitude to reduce the amount of their loan proportionately. The IDA, the main source of project aid for the two financing institutions has recently slowed down its loan disbursement.

The Asian Development Bank (ADB) is reluctant to disburse its committed fund because of irregularities in the utilization of foreign exchange allocations and anomalies in project appraisal and fund disbursement procedure of financial bodies.

It is learnt that the ADB, which is advancing considerable amount of foreign currency loan for industrial development has asked the BSB and the BSRS to submit list of the projects approved by them against ADB loan.

It has also asked the loan giving institutions of Bangladesh to give specifications of machinery, names of suppliers with price and justification for selection of the machinery along with necessary procurement certificate prior to the actual withdrawal of funds from the Asian Development Bank.

It may be mentioned here that as against 434 applications in 1980-81 only 34 applications were received by BSRS from industrial investors in 1981-82. The BSRS only sanctioned Tk. 10 97 crore as fresh loans in 1981-82 as against Tk. 164.74 crore in 1980-81. [as published] Although loan disbursement by BSRS totalled Tk. 32.87 crore during 1981-82 as against Tk. 58.21 in 1980-81.

But it is learnt that both BSRS and BSB sanctioned loan for a number of industrial projects on a priority basis in the last two months of the current fiscal year and a number of industrial projects just before the beginning of the current fiscal year. But still now none of these have received requisite money because of the financial bodies' exhausted fund position.

According to an official estimate, the two financial institutions alone require Tk. 264 crore to finance their approved projects. The BSRS requires Tk. 154 crore while the requirement of the BSB has been calculated at Tk. 110 crore.

It is learnt that one of the main causes of resource constraints of BSRS and BSB is unsatisfactory recovery of loans. According to a reliable source, a huge amount of loans allocated to different sectors has not yet been recovered.

DAMAGES CAUSED BY FLOODS, DROUGHT REVIEWED

Dacca HOLIDAY in English 19 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Jaglul Alam]

[Text] A flash flood which claimed 13 human lives, covered over 30 thousand acres of land, made lakhs of people homeless and affected the seasonal crops including broadcast and transplanted aman, aus, sweet potato, jute, winter crops etc. in areas in Rajshahi, Kushtia, Jessore and Pabna is now receding.

On the other hand an unexpected drought which hit a huge area in Khulna, Dinajpur, Rangpur and parts of Jessore and Rajshahi affected aman seedlings and aus plants together with summer pulses, is also showing signs of improvement with the coming of casual and light rainfall throughout the country last week.

Though drought and flood are on their way out, those have already wrought irreparable losses upon both crops and people.

According to an official flood damage report prepared by the Directorate of Agriculture during the latter part of the last week, B. aman in 2020 acres, T. aman in 3000 acres, aus in 600 acres, pulses in 3000 acres and vegetables and jute in over 1000 acres were completely damaged while crops on 3000 acres were damaged partially in five thanas of Rajshahi, two thanas of Kushtia, and three thanas of Pabna alone.

The complete reports on Chapai Nawabganj of Rajshahi, the worst hit area, and seven more thanas of the same district, eight thanas of Jessore and nine thanas of Pabna are yet to reach the authorities.

According to a report published in newspapers, there was an official estimation of the flood control room at Rajshahi stating that crops over 16 thousand acres of land were damaged and seven thousand homes were inundated affecting over 37 thousand people in Chapai Nawabganj alone.

The government's conservative estimate of total damage in Chapai Nawabganj was over two crore takas in terms of money. Unofficial sources claim that eight people in that area were killed and about 75 thousand people were rendered homeless in the same area and crops and properties worth over seven crore takas were damaged.

According to an expert of the Bangladesh Agriculture Research Council at Dacca, even if the flood and drought affect foodgrains on 30 thousand acres of land, as per the official estimate, these will result in loss of 10 lakh maunds of foodgrain at the rate of 10 maunds of foodgrains per bigha on average.

He also opined that people of the affected areas would again find it difficult to go on supplementary yield because many of them have lost their cattleheads, ploughing instruments, etc.

Obaidullah Khan, Minister for Agriculture, when interviewed by HOLIDAY last week, agreed that drought and floods claimed a number of lives and damaged crops over considerable areas particularly in some northern Bangladesh districts.

He said that the full damage report on flood and drought was yet to be completed and added that the situation was improving gradually.

He remarked that in many cases B. aman which was suffering from inadequate water following drought had benefitted due to the flood water. Further information in this respect will be known as soon as the flood recedes completely, he said.

He added that meanwhile local officers had been asked to prepare a draft rehabilitation program for relief of the affected farmers.

Mr. Khan said that the flood and drought caused damage but it will not be difficult to overcome the effects. In the meantime, 350 tubewells have been installed at Dinajpur, pumps are being distributed free, and about 2500 wells have been excavated by the agricultural field workers to fight the drought, he said.

The Agriculture Minister stated that the impact due to damaged aman crops in some areas could be countered by aus and summer pulses and in the remaining places wheat could be cultivated.

To check the adverse situation the government has already sanctioned a seed grant of 15 lakh takas for the affected farmers and the seeds for winter crops in sufficient quantum have also been distributed to them, he explained.

Food Front

A. G. Mahmood, the Minister for Food, Relief and Rehabilitation, when interviewed by HOLIDAY said that the food problem, a shortage to the tune of over 23 lakh tons, was inherited from the previous regime but the present government was lucky enough in tackling it.

He said that earlier a target was set to produce 155.50 lakh tons of foodgrains during the present fiscal year and after the recent devastation by flood and drought, a revised target of foodgrain production was set at 151 lakh tons.

He said that taking substraction at the rate of 10 percent on seed, feed and handling, about 135.90 lakh tons of foodgrains would be available from internal sources, while the country requires about 148.60 lakh tons of foodgrains for the present year.

It may be pointed out that production and procurement of aus, so far reported, was not satisfactory. In place of the targetted 30 lakh tons of aus 18 lakh tons were produced. As a result, the procurement target set for aus was also unsatisfactory. In place of 30 thousand tons' procurement target for aus 3000 tons have so far been procured by the government.

The Food Minister said that the target for aus procurement could not be achieved because the farmers did not sell their aus paddy apprehending an imaginary foodgrain crisis and also because they received a higher price for their crops in the open market.

Mr Mahmood explained that the farmers are not under compulsion to sell their crops to the government. "We try to give them a price support and they are at liberty to sell their products at any place they like," he explained.

He said that to face the foodgrain shortage of over 12.70 lakh tons, arrangements have already been made to procure about 14.90 lakh tons from external sources.

Out of this, one lakh tons have already been procured on cash purchase and tender has been floated for another two lakh tons, he said.

He added that about 11.30 lakh tons of foodgrains would reach the country by December this year.

"The prospect of the next aman crop, the major one, will come to our knowledge by the latter part of November and we have sufficient food in hand to run to the end of January. In this situation even if the prospect of aman becomes bleak because of drought, flood or similar natural calamities, we shall have enough time to fight the gap collecting foodgrains from external sources," he said.

He said that over 50 percent of foodgrains presently in the government's hand have been stored at thana level warehouses to reach them to the people within the shortest possible time. The administration has been decentralized to keep easy connection with the people's problem, he said.

The Food and Relief Minister said that meanwhile 38 thousand tons of foodgrains have been distributed through test relief program, 76 thousand tons have been sanctioned for open market sale, and 77 thousand tons have so far been distributed under the modified ration scheme.

Another 18000 tons of foodgrains have been distributed to distressed mothers and children in the vulnerable group feeding program. He said that relief on the same scale has again been sanctioned for next month.

To generate income among the village population 95 lakh tons of foodgrains have been sanctioned under the Food for Works scheme in which 77 lakh tons have already been utilized.

He said, "We have decided to run the Food for Works program under the supervision of the local administrative bodies posted at the thana level under the new scheme to eliminate distribution anomalies."

FERTILIZER PRODUCTION, USE SINCE 1972 REVIEWED

The sale of fertilizers by BADC increased by 27 times since its inception in 1961-62. The use of fertilizers shot up to 8 29 lakh tons in the last fiscal year from only 31,000 tons in 1961-62. However, the highest sale of fertilizers was 8.75 lakh tons in 1980-81 and the production of rice that year was 136,62,075 tons.

A close study of BADC records shows that the Corporation could never achieve its target of sale of fertilizers. In 1981-82 the BADC target was 9.80 lakh tons but it could sell 8.29 lakh tons during the year achieving 85 per cent of its target.

During the current fiscal year the BADC fixed its target at 10.25 lakh tons of fertilizers but in the first two months (July and August) it had sold 76000 tons (36 per cent less than its monthly target). The sale of fertilizers this year is less than the corresponding two months in 1981-82 (95000 tons) and 1980-81 (one lakh tons).

This sudden fall in the use of fertilizers this year is due to increase in sale price, decline in the purchasing power of consumers, drought, flood and heavy rainfall. In the new Budget the price of urea and DAP was increased to Taka 148 per maund from Taka 132 per maund and the price of TSP has been fixed at Taka 110 per maund from Taka 95.

The requirement of chemical fertilizers this year is estimated at 14 lakh tons. The opening stock of fertilizers of BADC as on 7.7.82 was 4.38 lakh tons and the local production from the four fertilizer factories has been estimated at 7 85 lakh tons and the import target is about 2.75 lakh tons. The production target in Ghorasal factory this year is 2.60 lakh tons, in Zia Fertilizer Factory 2.40 lakh tons, in Fenchuganj Factory 90,000 tons and in TSP factory 95,000 tons.

But the local production fell much below the target due to closures of Zia and Ghorasal factories leading to fertilizers crisis during October and November last year. The Zia Fertilizer Factory failed to keep its production target in 1981-82, the first year of its production. It produced only 63000 tons against its revised production target of 93000 tons of Urea. This year also the factory remained closed for sometime and in the month of July it supplied only 1600 tons to BADC against its target of 20000 tons.

A target for export of fertilizers set at one lakh tons of urea this year.

PAPER REPORTS POOR OUTLOOK FOR FOOD CROPS

Dacca HOLIDAY in English 19 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Hossain Khasru]

[Text] Substantial crop damage during the last Aus season and uncertain prospects of the coming Aman may now result in another agricultural setback for the country during the current year.

Unless efforts for recovery are effectively stepped up through elaborate and well-coordinated arrangements for delivery of agri-inputs and credits at the farmers' level in time and also in adequate quantum during the next rabi crop, actual food production will in all probability fall much short of the target, earlier fixed at 155 lakh tons.

The aus production loss this year was recorded at the highest levels in five northern districts--Dinajpur, Rajshahi, Rangpur, Jessore and Kuhstia.

The drought prevailing during the season for transplanting the seedlings has also made the prospects for aman uncertain this year. Following the drought came the flood which also caused extensive damage to the paddy making the natural conditions for aman production more unfavorable this year.

According to the agriculture officials, about 30 percent of the total aman acreage could not be brought under cultivation till the close of the first week of August.

In the wake of the recent flood, the government announced an agricultural rehabilitation program with an initial investment outlay of ten crore takas for distribution of 35,000 maunds of aman seeds and seedlings over an area of three lakh acres to recoup the losses in the seven flood-affected districts of the country.

The actual implementation of this program is yet to be assessed. Experts however feel that the rehabilitation program has been inadequate.

Major Thrust

Quite obviously, a major thrust has to be placed now on boosting farm production during the next rabi crop in order to keep the gap between food production target and actual production performance narrow as far as possible during the current year.

It may be recalled that the mid-term food production strategy covering the year, 1982-83, envisaged the extension of irrigation coverage by 24 percent over the last year's level to 72 lakh acres, distribution of 10.5 lakh tons of fertilizer, and disbursements of about Tk. 800 crore as agricultural credits to the farmers.

Monitoring and review of performance with regard to the implementation of the mid-term food production strategy will now be needed to be made on a regular basis particularly during the course of the rabi season owing to the fact that recent performance for delivery of inputs and credits, as all available information suggests, has not been up to the mark.

As Nature has played foul with production performance during the aus and aman seasons this year, the operational efficiency of human management factors as much as institutional arrangements will have to be improved to a large extent to reach agri-inputs and credits to the farmers well in time in adequate quantum particularly during the next rabi season as the higher input prices under the impact of new policy decisions of the government would otherwise tend to act as a disincentive to sustain an accelerated productive drive at the growers' level.

More often than not, inefficiency and errors in human management factors had caused the nation to drag the burden of an average annual import bill of one thousand crore takas on food account alone as successive programs with all pompous promises for boosting food production and attaining autarky faltered for one reason or other till recent times.

/It is worth mentioning here that the question of raising food production has a critical bearing upon the economy's overall growth process as approximately forty percent of the country's GDP is derived from crops of which three-fourths comes from rice alone.

/Any shortfall in reaching the target this year coming after last year's setback in the agricultural sector is bound to have shocking effects beyond the acceptable limit of absorptive capacity for a poor agrarian economy like that of Bangladesh's./ [in boldface]

RICE COST INCREASE--Price of medium quality rice recorded an increase of over 36 per cent while those of some essentials declined marginally, over the year, according to an official handout yesterday. Kerosene price shot up by 43 per cent and writing paper by 7 per cent while sugar price declined by 15 per cent. It said the government has already taken steps to increase supply of rice. Kerosene price increased by Tk 10 per gallon due to increase in import value and other costs. Giving comparative price of 19 essential items of September 7 of last year and this year the handout said the government has noticed that an impression is being sought to be created that prices of essential items have been going up due to imposition or enhancement of duties and taxes in the recent budget. But the comparative prices will show that prices of most essential items remained stable, within reasonable level of market fluctuation. Prices of a number of items, on the other hand, have come down, the handout added. [Excerpt] [Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 11 Sep 82 pp 1, 8]

GANDHI VISIT TO USSR DESCRIBED AS 'FRUITFUL'

BK081710 Delhi INDIAN EXPRESS in English 28 Sep 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Back from Moscow"]

[Text] The prime minister has returned home after a fruitful visit to the Soviet Union. The joint declaration simultaneously released in New Delhi and Moscow adds little to what had been already spelt out earlier in public statements and briefings. However it does emphasise strong and continuing bonds of friendship and a deeper understanding by each country of the other's point of view, despite some differences as on Afghanistan, and a consolidation of economic relations.

Disarmament is a hoary topic which has figured in earlier communiques too. The proposals for general and nuclear disarmament endorsed by the two sides on this occasion specify a freeze on the production and deployment of nuclear weapons, a convention on non-use of nuclear weapons, the prohibition and elimination of chemical weapons, and a prohibition on the development of new weapons of mass destruction. These items have been on the superpowers' agenda and before UN disarmament fora. Mr Brezhnev obviously had in mind India's soon-to-be-assumed role as chairman of the nonaligned conference from next year and was possibly seeking a commitment on a package that the West might however think contentious since the Soviet Union is regarded by it as having a lead in nuclear and conventional weapons in critical areas as presently deployed. India and the nonaligned world generally might also be attracted by the Soviet proposition that funds released by disarmament should be channelled towards augmenting assistance to the developing nations. Welcome as these propositions are, they cannot be delinked from the realities of the global balance of power. The same is true of the proposition that the Indian Ocean should be a zone of peace. How precisely this can be achieved is a task for the proposed UN conference on the Indian Ocean which is to be held next year.

With regard to Indo-Soviet relations, Mrs Gandhi erred in discussing with the Soviet leadership the alleged role of the Communist Party of India against her government in league with "rightist" elements such as the Bharatiya Janata Party. The prime minister has stated on her return to Delhi that there was no question of her "complaining" to anybody in Moscow as this is purely an internal matter and that she merely surveyed the scene in India for the benefit of her Soviet hosts just as they made a presentation of their perceptions and concerns to her. Be that as it may, the prime minister was ill-advised to have broached the topic. The two sides agreed to work towards a significant increase in mutual trade, even a doubling, over the next 4 years. While this is to be welcomed it would appear necessary to review whether the rupee trade arrangement requires any modification so that the country's balance of payments is not upset for lack of foreign exchange earnings on exports to the Soviet Union or on account of any switch trade by that country. On the whole, however, the visit, as expected, has cemented old ties and opened up new avenues for further cooperation.

EDITORIAL NOTES DISTRICT, PROVINCE RESPONSIBILITIES IN ECONOMIC PLANNING

['Editorial': Improve the Relationship between the Central and Local Economy]

[Text] The central and local economies are all part of the same framework. Therefore, improvement in the central and local economies is useful for the expansion of the entire national economic base.

An important problem in correcting the relationships between the central and local economies according to the policy of the party and the government is to concentrate in building the district economy effectively. Each district should focus on its special economic and geographical aspects in order to plan agricultural and forestry production bases to expand occupational akills in handicrafts, small-scale industry, household products, and materials construction industry, and to ensure self-sufficiency in the food supply. Meanwhile, household products production must be encouraged and improved to respond to the needs of the people and to contribute to the government.

The provincial level must become the strategic headquarters in all aspects by setting up agricultural and forestry settlements, machinery and electric power bases construction equipment and household goods production, food supplies, etc. When they succeed in being self-sufficient in terms of food supplies, [they should] fulfill the needs for household goods. Localities exchange [goods] with the center and different provinces, and engage in exporting. Meanwhile, different provinces should have plans to encourage and train different types of management cadres on the district and base levels to improve their ability in production and production control systematically and efficiently.

The central echelon sections are responsible for the management of economic bases which are useful keys for the entire nation. These are new cooperation projects with foreign countries and continue the exporting of strategic goods such as coffee cardamom, wood products, mineral ores, etc. Big cities like Vientiane Capital must effectively increase the construction and management in many aspects in order to make the cities the central symbol of politics, the economy, and the new society, and to steadily strengthen the relationship between the cities and rural areas with workers and farmers.

These are the main aspects of the plan concerning the improvement of the central and local economy of our party and government. The cadres and the people who are responsible for this work should study it thoroughly and implement it correctly in order to correct economic problems in each district and province in our country, to become united, and to have division of work, production plans, and exchange among themselves in order to make our large rural areas plentiful sources for food supplies, household goods, and goods for export. This is to respond appropriately to the needs of the people of all nationalities and to contribute to the government.

COLUMNIST LINKS MAOISTS, DENG, U.S. LEADERSHIP

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 24 Aug 82 pp 2,4

['Talking Together' Column: "Tricks Cannot Change Political Reality"]

[Text] Last year Chinese leaders carried out a foreign policy of cooperating with the imperialists and the reactionaries to resist the socialist world, and revolutionary and peace-loving forces. These politics have been sharply assailed by communist party leaders, workers, those who are interested in the joyous expansion of the revolutionary world, and those who are interested in strengthening peace and building up friendship among peoples of all nationalities.

The attendees who joined the meeting of communist party delegates and workers of eastern Mediterranean countries and the countries in the east close to the Middle East and the Red Sea in Athens in September 1981 saw the U.S. policy as being aimed at their allies to carry out the reactionary U.S. policy, and to block the easing of tensions. According to the statement that was accepted by the meeting, a special danger arises from Chinese leaders whose policy is anti-Soviet and who support the aggressive, warmongering policy of the Pentagon and NATO. They continue to be enemies of Vietnam and other countries. They have done great damage to the rights and national interests of the Chinese people and Chinese workers, and have weakened the international revolutionary movement. They have also weakened the movement towards peace and social advancement.

Beijing's policy favors imperialism and endangers peace and happiness of people. The speeches of the delegates of the Communist Party in Canada, Ireland and the U.S. Communist Party at the conference in Montreal in November 1981 condemned this. Speaking of the United States' anti-revolutionary strategy in general, Le Duan, the secretary general of the Communist Party of Vietnam's central committee in his speech to the Fifth Congress of the VCP 3 April 1982 said that for this purpose the U.S. has a new ally, the reactionary group of Chinese leaders. The collaboration between the imperialist leaders and the Chinese expansionists has created an international situation with special characteristics. Playing "the China card" by the U.S. leaders and the U.S.-China cooperation is a threat to world peace, security, and stability, and is a particularly strong threat to nations in Asia.

Why are the former anti-imperialists in the communist movement for the victory of the Chinese revolution now standing on the opposite side? Mao Zedong and his followers in the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party, the organizers of the revolutionary regime of the petit-bourgeois, have shown a sudden change following the victories and various set-backs. He favored the leftist, but he did not follow the revolutionary opinions all the way to the right by standing on nationalism and claiming to be a great power. They set a goal to make China a great country and master of the world. [The actions] they carried out to achieve these goals were different depending on the historical era.

Not long after the announcement of the establishment of the People's Republic of China in 1949, the Chinese leaders announced that the Chinese revolutionary lesson was spreading to revolutionary movements in many countries in Asia and Oceania. They asked the communist parties of India, Indonesia, Japan, and other countries to follow the "path of China," and the path of the Chinese military struggle by setting up liberated regions in the rural areas, and encircling the towns, etc. In doing this they did not consider the geographical, historical, economic, social, and political aspects of those countries, which are different from the Chinese situation. They also insulted the special characteristics and revolutionary tradition and the lessons and communist ideology of those countries. At the end of the 50's and the beginning of the 60's Mao Zedong set a path for China not just to control some communist parties but all of the communist movement. In the Communist Party and worker congress in Moscow in 1957 Mao Zedong called for a declaration of nuclear world war. He though that if half of the world's population died, there would be another half left. He included the imperialists among those who would all die. Then there would be only socialist countries left in the world, and within only half a century the number of people would increase by more than half.

Mao hoped that an attack between the two power would occur. The fight between the USSR and the American imperialists would weaken both countries, and as a result China would be able to control the world.

Many other communist leaders refused to accept the Chinese Communist party leader's ambition of leadership in the communist movement, and refused to accept the Chinese slogan. When he realized that communists all over the world were resisting Beijing's expansionst policy, the Chinese leader fought against the international Communist movement. In the mid-sixties the Chinese Communist Party leaders started to set up Chinese political groups, thinking to use these movements to expand Mao's political ideology within the international area which was the anti-Communist movement. However, the idea of hoping to set up "international Maoism" has disappeared.

What was exciting about Beijing's propaganda in foreign policy was its selfishness and many mistakes. Beijing's invasion of Vietnam, and the open collaboration between the Chinese and American imperialists and other reactionaries has made members who once believed in "Mao Thought" give up on Maoism.

Maoist groups outside China today are faced with a great many crises. When Mao Zedong was still alive there were more than 100 groups in many different countries, and now there are only somewhat more than 20 groups left. Moreover, these groups have stopped their movements and have refused to follow Beijing's path. Though it is very clear that there is no future for the "Maoist movement," the Chinese Communist Party leaders still hope for Maoist circles in foreign countries. A strange incident clearly occurred in the beginning of 1979 after the Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping returned from his visit to the U.S. It was not just an accident that after the visit China invaded socialist Vietnam. There was collaboration between Beijing and the U.S. leaders in the "punishment" and in Anti-Sovietism. Assistance was given by Beijing and Washington to the Afghan counterrevolutionary resistance and other reactionaries who are in the imperialists' network. These activities included preparations for the visit, and the visit to China of E. Berlinguer and S. Carrillo in 1980. Finally, there is the relationship between the Chinese Communist Party and the Communist parties of Italy and Spain. The emulation in setting up such an incident has caused a foreign affairs observer to question whether there is a true relationship between the political collaboration with the imperialists by Beijing and the imperialists' goal to use Beijing as a "Trojan horse" in the revolutionary movement. This idea was published in the Spanish newspaper CAMBIO 16 in December 1980. Based on the testimony of L. Wolf, a former U.S. CIA agent, the CIA forced the communist Party in Spain to be pro-Chinese. Therefore, the CIA sent its people to the Communist Party in Spain.

The statement of the agent in Washington made people aware and proved that the U.S. leaders [sabotaged] the revolutionary forces by using China. For example, (Pillsbury), a U.S. senate staff member, said it would be beneficial for the U.S. if China told them who was who in the revolutionary movement in foreign countries.

The imperialist consider the division of work important. For example, their work is to attack the outside revolutionary movement by creating factions and quarrels, and Beijing accepts this role. Moreover, they boast that they are useful to the imperialists. The Chinese newspaper BANYUE TAN said that today the U.S., Western Europe, and Japan need the Chinese forces.

By getting involved with some communist parties, the Communist Party leaders; goals are to ease the conflict between the world communist movement and the pro-imperialist Chinese policy, and to pull the Communist movement together. The hope is to pull some parts of the movement into a group called the "anti-Soviet expansion project," based on the Chinese leaders' goals in this project. The group includes China, the imperialists, reactionary regimes, and some leftists.

VIENTIANE GOVERNOR ASSESSES DEVELOPMENTS, BLASTS U.S. ON UPRISING ANNIVERSARY

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 23 Aug 82 p 2

[Interview with Mr Phao Phimphachan Chairman of the Provincial Administrative Committee of Vientiane Capital on the Occasion of the Seventh Anniversary for the Seizing of Power; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] When 23 August is mentioned I and the people of all nationalities and ages are all very proud of this historic day for Laos, especially in Vientiane Capital.

Continuing the brave heritage of Laos, 23 August 1975 in Vientiane Capital marks the anniversary of the uprising to completely sieze power from the old administration of alien imperalists, reactionary traitors, and the Vientiane puppets to give to our Lao people. August 23 opened a new and most important era. It was a power seizure of the entire country and the announcement of the establishment of the Lao People's Democratic Republic on 2 December 1975. Everyone well knows that Vientiane in the old regime was the last nest of the running dogs, the reactionary henchmen, and the rightists in Laos. Therefore, the seizing of power from the extreme rightist reactionaries in Vientiane was a most difficult, complex, and urgent problem; however, with the intelligent and capable leadership of the LPRP, the overthrow of the old regime and the seizing of the administrative power of Vientiane succeeded without any bloodshed or damage to the people's property. Plainly speaking, there was not a single gunshot. This incident caught the interest of most of the world, and we ourselves are most proud of the important victory for Lao history.

After the nation was completely liberated, Vientiane Capital as well as other places over the entire country established the administration of workers and has been well improved since that time. Extra attention has been paid to national defense and security work to maintain order within the capital, to improve the economy, culture, and society, and to steadily raise the standard of living of the cadres and the people. In national defense and security work, even though the American imperialists were defeated in the war of aggression, they have not yet stopped playing their tricks aimed at destroying our new regime. The American imperialists collude with expansionist China and have cooperated with the reactionaries in the area. They sent spies and looters in to keep on destroying the peace and happiness of the people. Another thing that they use psychological warfare to sabotage political, economic, social, and cultural aspects. We all along with the people within Vientiane Capital have worked to promptly destroy and suppress all of their tricks. This results in peace and security all over Vientiane Capital. Our Third Party Congress was 100 percent safe, we have limited and corrected social evils within the capital city, and have made the security work become the work of all the people.

Economic aspects. Vientiane Capital is the political, economic, and cultural center. Therefore, the economic problem has been very well paid attention to, for example, the improvement and building up of industrial, handicraft, and agricultural areas. In Vientiane right after the liberation different factories all stopped their production. A number of capitalists, the owners of the factories, fled the country and left their factories broken down and deserted. Thus the party and government controlled and revived them. Up to now many industrial and handicraft factories are operating effectively at their normal levels and send out products to the people. Meanwhile, additional factories are being built, for example, the Vientiane-Hanoi Friendship Brick and Tile Factory, 70 percent of whose foundation has been completed. In agricultural work they attentively set up an experimental area for production. In Hatsaifong District electric pumps were installed in many places, an irrigation system was set up, and the people were encouraged to produce normally. For example, planting and animal raising for the government, collective groups, the people and the cadres have been steadily expanded. Domestic animals have been increased every year. At the present time all over Vientiane Capital there are 37 agricultural co-ops. Meanwhile, trade work such as State trade and collective trade has been steadily improved and expanded. Up to now, Vientiane is considered self-sufficient in food supplies, and the standard of living of the people has been raised one step higher.

On the occasion of the implementation of the Third Party Congress, and the carrying out of the first Five Year Plan of the government and of Vientiane Capital, Vientiane Capital attentively struggled in carrying out its own plan to the expected level, and to make the plenum of the Third Party Congress become reality. For example, it paid good attention to public security work, corrected social evils, had a better control on district regulations than before, limited and wiped out what was left over from the old society, resisted the enemies' psychological warfare, organized and led production and pushed strongly agricultural production, pushed forward industrial and trade production, normalized the standard of living of the people, effectively organized and controlled food supplies for buying and selling, solved the traffic transportation on time, encouraged exports to maintain stability in the market, encouraged education, public health, and culture, and related this work to the base construction work and led them on to endless progress.

PUBLIC SECURITY SERVICE REGIMENT DECORATES PERSONNEL FOR PARTY CONGRESS WORK

[Article]

[Text] On the afternoon of 17 August 1982 the Ministry of Interior held a commendation and decoration ceremony for public security service cadres, and combatants, in political work for Public Security Service Regiment 53 and who had outstanding achievements in the work of protection during the Third Congress of the LPRP.

The honored guests who attended the ceremony were Colonel Soutchai Thammasit, cadre organization department chief, and representatives of each regiment subordinate to the Ministry along with hundreds of cadres and combatants of Public Security Service Regiment 53.

Among the cadres and combatants who received medals and commendations this time, one unit of Public Security Service Regiment 53 received the independence medal second class. Five sections received medals and commendations as follows. One comrade received the independence medal second class; 3 comrades received the independence medal third class; 14 cadres received the labor medal second class; 31 comrades received the labor medal third class; 30 comrades received labor medals, 27 comrades received commendations from the government, and 44 comrades received commendations from the Ministry of Interior.

After the medals and commendations, Colonel Soutchai Thammasit gave a speech in which first of all he wholeheartedly congratulated and praised the recent success and victory of the cadres and combatants of the Ministry of Interior. At the same time he pointed out the tricks of our enemies, the Beijing expansionists, the imperialists and their henchmen, and the reactionaries who want to destroy us. He also asked all cadres and combatants to increase their patriotism and their love for socialism, internal and international solidarity, and to be ready always to fight against all the destructive movements of the enemy. He asked everyone to work to emulate in order to successfully and victoriously implement the resolutions of the Third Party Congress in the actual work of individuals.

OFFICER COMPLAINS OF UNEQUAL TREATMENT FOR OVERSEAS RETURNEES, RANK STRUCTURE

['Conversation with the Editor' Column: They Complete Their Study but [they Are Not Appointed to Ranks Equivalent to Their Educational Level]

[Text] [Question] To the editor. First of all I don't understand one thing. What I agree with is the party and government's plan for sending students to study abroad every year. However, what I do not agree with is that when some students complete their studies at the high and mid-level they are not [given] ranks equivalent to their level. For example, a military academy student went to study in Vietnam as a 1st lieutenant. When he came back he was equivalent to a sergeant or corporal. Why is this so? Will this not hurt his morale?

I hope you can clear it up for me. Please forgive me if there are any grammatical mistakes. Phonsavat, International T.M. [Expansion unknown], Vattay.

[Answer] To Comrade Phonsavat. First of all, forgive be [but] I want to tell you that your written Lao is not correct in spelling and in grammar. Thus, you need to practice and restudy. I could mention quite a lot, e.g., the phrases you wrote (10 ek, 10 tho, san soung, san kang, sap son) and many others. They are all wrong. However, I am able to guess what you wanted to write was (sergeant, corporal, high-level, mid-level, assigned). So that is why I want you to restudy, especially writing the Lao alphabet, to have correct spelling. Your phrases have all been corrected, and I hope you are satisfied with them.

I would like to discuss your question in two parts.

1. At whatever level a student finishes his study abroad as well as within the country he will be given rank at that level. This has been carried out for a long time, and I have not yet seen anything like you mentioned. There might be some cases such as mid-level graduates who have not yet been given rank because they need to have on-the-job experience for a period of time first. It could be like this. It used to be that some high-level graduates could not even do low-level work. In speaking this way I do not mean to insult the diploma or high-level graduate at all. The examinations on the actual work after students have graduated at any level is possible. The reason for this is to know the quality and ability of that student and whether he really is at the high-level curriculum. This is the examination that has been carried out. However, it has never happened that the Ministry of Education made the rank equivalent right after graduation, as you wrote. That is only an old story that is brought up in a general way without careful thought.

2. You mentioned something about [someone] who graduated as a 1st lieutenant from a military academy. Is this true? I really doubt that for military academies in countries such as Vietnam as well as in other places that I know, that when one graduates from them with good grades he will receive a rank of 2nd lieutenant. Those who graduate with an average grade will be sub-lieutenants and the lower grades will be master sergeants (the former rank) or sergeant as in our country today. You should check it out to be sure, and we can discuss it again, or you were especially good at your study and made 1st lieutenant right after graduation. I really doubt that.

POSSIBLE SHIFT OF CAPITAL TO KEO-OUDOM DISCUSSED, DISTRICTS NOTED

['Conversation with the Editor' Column: "How Many Cities Are There in Vientiane Capital and in Vientiane Province?"]

[Text] [Question] To the editor. I have an interesting problem that I often used to discuss with my friends, and no one has been able to clear this problem up for me.

1. I have heard that Vientiane Province and Vientiane Capital have divided themselves into two separate sections. Is this true or are they still combined as province-capital as before?

2. If they really were separated, how many districts are there in Vientiane Province and in Vientiane Capital? What are they? Where will the Provincial seat for Vientiane Province be located? I hope you can clear this up for me. Thank you. Viangmani, 13 August 1982.

[Answer] Dear Comrade Viangmani. First of all I would like to thank you for your letter. I would like to discuss it as follows.

1. It should not be just a rumor but it was officially announced that the former province-capital has now been divided into 2 separate divisions which are called

--Vientiane Capital or the Capital of Vientiane
--Vientiane Province.

2. Vientiane Capital consists of 7 towns: 1. Chanthabouli; 2. Sikottabong; 3. Saisettha; 4. Sisattanak; 5. Hatsaifong; 6. Saithani; and 7. Nasaithong. Vientiane Province consists of 9 towns: 1. Phon Hong; 2. Keo-Oudom; 3. Vang Vieng; 4. Kasi; 5. Saisanasomboun; 6. Thoulakom; 7. Hom District; 8. Paksan; and 9. Pheung Branch-District.

As for Vientiane Province's seat, it is now located in Vientiane Capital (in the former Vientiane Trade Section). If you wish you can contact them directly. As for Vientiane Capital, it is located at the same place (Dalasamout School).

As for the future [seat] of Vientiane Province, it might be located in Keo-Oudom District. This [information] is based on the plan only. I myself think Keo-Oudom District is the best location for it. I think if hotels and recreation areas are built there I am sure that the people of the capital will stay over night there regularly. If you don't believe me, just try to build beaches at Nam Ngeum Reservoir with convenient hotels and good roads. I believe Vientiane Province will have a fairly good income from tourists because the Nam Ngeum Reservoir is no different from a small sea.

CHAMPASSAK ASSISTS PRK PROVINCE IN REPAIR WORK

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 26 Aug 82 pp 1, 3

[Article: "Champassak Assists Stung Treng Province in Shop Repairs"]

[Text] On the afternoon of 12 August, in Stung Treng Province in the People's Republic of Kampuchea, a ceremony was held to transfer a trade outlet that was repaired by Champassak Province.

This is a two-story building with 7 rooms, 25.4 meters wide and 26.4 meters long, that Champassak engineers and workers have been repairing from 5 June 1981 until 22 July 1982. A total of 661,146 kip worth of repairs was made.

In the ceremony Mr Thong-In Thammakot, assistant secretary of the provincial party committee and the chairman of the provincial administrative committee of Champassak, and Mr Khamphan Thivong, assistant secretary of the provincial party committee and the chairman of the provincial administrative committee of Stung Treng Province, took turns giving official speeches for giving and accepting this building in the presence of invited guests on both sides. The chairmen of both provinces referred to the brave fighting heritage and the glorious victory which the people of the two nations, Laos and Kampuchea, achieved in the protection and construction of their own countries in the past. They especially pointed out the special and solid friendship, solidarity, and cooperation in all aspects that steadily grows between the people of Champassak and Stung Treng Provinces.

On the visit and transfer of the trade outlet that was completely repaired to Stung Treng Province, representatives of Champassak Province also participated in additional discussions with Stung Treng Province involving cooperation concerning the economy, education, culture, and other aspects in order to steadily and endlessly strengthen the relationship between the two provinces and the people of the two nations Laos and Kampuchea.

NEW VIENTIANE DISTRICT POPULATION--Bolikhan District's population is 55,299 persons and 8991 families. This includes 8,191 agricultural families under 15 cantons; 11 cantons primarily engage in wet rice paddy production. This district is subordinate to Vientiane Province and is located in the middle of many [rivers], e.g., the Nam Kading, Nam Son, Nam Ngiab, Houai Thavai, Houai Ching, and Houai Mang. Each river flows to the Megong River all year round. The area is lowland that is easily flooded by water from the Mekong or the other rivers mentioned. The ricefields in all of Bolikhan total 6,341 hectares, and 1,646 hectares of swidden ricefields. Because the ricefield area is smaller than the number of families in the population, each year the district farmers' important responsibility is to expand their ricefield area. PHONG SALY DISTRICT POPULATION, COOPERATIVES--Mai District is subordinate to Phong Saly Province. It adjoins Samphan and Khoua Districts on the north, Luang Prabang Province on the south, and Lai Chau Province (Vietnam) on the east. It is a fertile district that has plentiful natural resources. There are wide ranges of beautiful mountains, cliffs, and forests that alternate with marshes and streams. Presently in all of Mai District there are 11 cantons, 108 villages, 2,589 families, and 2,532 houses. Its total population is 16,189 people, including 8,261 women. There has been a change in rice farming from privately owned , scattered holdings to cooperative units within their district. All over Mai District, co-ops now total 29 units, 10 units of highland rice farming and wet rice farming, and 28 units of highland rice farming co-ops. Based on the report of the district committee for Mai District, there are 672-13 hectares of completely planted ricefields over the entire district. They harvest almost 2 tons per hectare on the average each year and since the co-ops have been set up none of these co-ops has had a rice shortage. HAQ INTERVIEWED BY 'XINHUA' CORRESPONDENT

BK161020 Karachi Domestic Service in English 1700 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] President Mohammad Ziaul Haq has described Pakistan's relations with China as model relationship. In an interview with XINHUA and Radio Beijing correspondents in Rawalpindi on the eve of his forthcoming visit to China, he said the two countries have the most friendly relations and these are relations which could be the envy of any country.

The president said China is a bigger partner and Pakistan is a smaller partner. China has been able to allow us to maintain a relationship on an equal level of fraternity and freedom.

Speaking highly of the principles of peaceful co-existence, China has followed in the international relations, he said China has set an example for the larger country. The People's Republic of China has never interfered in the internal affairs of any country, especially of the smaller ones. He said we are proud of being China's neighbor.

Referring to Pakistan's stand on Afghanistan issue, the President said that the problem should be solved politically. He pointed out that the UN resolution can form the basis for the solution of this problem and a successful conclusion can be achieved.

Referring to the indirect talks on Afghanistan in Geneva, the President emphasized that he will not compromise on the four principles which we have followed all along. These are: that the foreign troops must withdraw from Afghanistan, Afghanistan's status as a nonaligned Islamic country must be restored, refugees must return with honor and dignity to their homes and it should be left to the people of Afghanistan to choose the type of government they want.

Exactly on the same principles, he said: We support the stand of noninterference in Kampuchea. We believe outside interference is not in the interest of international peace.

On the situation in the Middle East, he said unless the people of Palestine are allowed to have a homeland of their own and UN resolutions are implemented by the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the occupied homeland, there could be no solution to the Middle East problem.

Referring to the Iran-Iraq crisis, the President said both sides should find a peaceful solution to this problem. We hope that not in the too distant future the ceasefire and solution will be found.

He said Pakistan has followed the five basic principles of peaceful co-existence which China has also advocated. We have followed the principles of non-interference in anybody's internal affairs. We have also followed the principle of cordial relations and relationship on mutual respect and understanding, irrespective of the size and people of the country or the form of government they may have.

Speaking about the achievements in the economic reconstruction, he said the backbone of the country's economy rests on agriculture. The agricultural production has increased by 4 percent while the national economy as a whole registered a growth rate of 6 percent. Such economic improvement has been the result of hard work of the people.

The President said he is looking forward to meeting with the Chinese leaders and exchanging views with them on international issues and bilateral matters during his forthcoming visit to China.

In conclusion, the President conveyed good wishes from the people and government of Pakistan and his own self for the prosperity and progress of the great people of China. He said: We wish and pray that China will continue to progress and play the role that China deserves to play in international field.

HAQ REAFFIRMS SOLID FRIENDSHIP WITH CHINA

[Text] President Mohammad Ziaul Haq has said that it is the endeavor of both Pakistan and China that all peace-loving forces should be strengthened and there should be such a system in which countries--big or small, powerful or weak--could live in peace according to their way of life. He was speaking at a banquet given in his honor in Beijing this evening by Chinese Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang. He said it is gratifying that Pakistan and China are working shoulder to shoulder for preservation of peace and the elimination of war. Like China, Pakistan has no aggressive designs against any one or to trample the life of others. We only want that the internationally recognized principles should be adhered to and every country should have the right to live in peace with honor and dignity.

The president said we greatly value friendship with China and feel proud that it has grown with the passage of time. Despite changes in the region and at the international level, their friendship had not only withstood the test of time but had become enviable for the entire world. President Mohammad Ziaul Haq said it was imperative to remove all causes of conflict wherever they exist so that peace is strengthened. He said Pakistan looks with admiration about China's efforts to improve its relations with India and itself desires a tension-free relationship with its eastern neighbors. In this connection, Pakistan had taken the initiative and made the offer of a no-war pact to India to promote mutual confidence. We are determined, he said, to take forward this process so that it could lead to the signing of such a pact as well as improvement in bilateral relations.

The president strongly condemned the Israeli aggression against the Palestinians in Lebanon and reiterated Pakistan's stand that lasting peace in the Middle East could only be achieved by respecting the national independence and territorial integrity, the [word indistinct] by Israel of all occupied Arab territories including al-Qods and the right of the Palestinians to set up their own independent state.

The president said Pakistan supports the eight-point program adopted at the third Arab summit for a solution of the Middle East crisis. He said President Reagan's plan has a number of (?aspects) which could help bridge the existing gulf in achieving a settlement of the Middle East problem.

The president said another serious problem in Pakistan's neighborhood was that of Afghanistan which still remains unresolved. As a result of this problem 2.8 million refugees have been forced to seek shelter in Pakistan. The president said Pakistan was looking after the refugees and would continue to do so in accordance with its Islamic obligations and on humanitarian grounds. He said they wanted a solution of the problem whereby these refugees could return to their homes with honor and dignity, foreign troops withdrawn from Afghanistan and the Afghan people allowed to have the government of their own choice in accordance with their own principles.

The president also referred to the Iran-Iraq war and made a spirited appeal to the countries to end the war in view of the sanctity of the month of Muharram and to resolve their disputes peacefully.

General Mohammad Ziaul Haq also referred to Kampuchea. He said, like Afghanistan, in that country also international principles had been trampled. He said Pakistan strongly condemns the military intervention in Kampuchea. He said we want the independence and sovereignty of both Afghanistan and Kampuchea to be restored and the people of these countries allowed to determine their future themselves without any outside pressure.

In his speech, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said the development of Sino-Pakistan friendly relations is conducive not only to the prosperity of the two countries but to the maintenance of peace and stability in Asia and the world at large. He said China and Pakistan are faced with the common task of safeguarding the independence and sovereignty and developing the national economy of their respective countries. We are willing to work together with our Pakistani friends to make up each other's deficiencies, help meet each other's needs and on the basis of equality and mutual benefit further develop the friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries in political, economic, cultural, scientific, technical and other fields.

Zhao Ziyang said relations between the two countries had grown in strength and developed steadily despite the vicissitudes of the international situation. These relations have stood the test of time. The Chinese prime minister said since his last visit to Pakistan a year ago, the international situation has become more turbulent and unstable and the Afghanistan question remains unsolved. As is known, the Afghan question stems from a superpower's military invasion of Afghanistan. Therefore, a genuine settlement of this question can be reached when the superpower withdraws all its troops from that country. He said Pakistan, upholding justice and adhering to peace, has worked tirelessly for a just solution of the Afghanistan problem and provided generous humanitarian aid to the Afghan refugees now in Pakistan. He said the just stand taken by Pakistan has won widespread commendation and support from people the world over as well as the deep admiration of the Chinese people.

He said in foreign relations Pakistan firmly pursues the policy of independence and nonalignment and endeavors to strengthen its unity and cooperation with other Third World and Islamic countries. It works hard to improve relations with other countries in South Asia. He said Pakistan has achieved marked successes in defending national independence and sovereignty and developing national economy. He said to strengthen our unity and cooperation with other Third World countries and develop and consolidate Sino-Pakistan friendship are the set policies of the Chinese Government. He reiterated that China will as always resolutely support the government and interferences from outside and defend national independence and state sovereignty.

HAQ REITERATES PEACEFUL FOREIGN POLICY

BK091223 Karachi Domestic Service in English 1715 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Commentary by Enamur Rahman]

[Text] President Gen Mohammad Ziaul Haq has said that Pakistan as a peace-loving country had always followed a policy of peaceful coexistence and opposed aggression. Addressing army officers and men at Attock yesterday he said Pakistan had endeavored to foster an atmosphere of trust, confidence, peace and tranquillity among the nations at global level in general and earnestly desired to have fraternal ties with the neighboring countries in particular.

There is no doubt that ever since independence Pakistan had endeavored to promote the cause of peace and goodneighborly relations (?between nations). It had extended total support to any move designed to create international amity and good will and to eliminate causes of friction. As a member of the United Nations dedicated to the principles of its charter, Pakistan had always tried to foster its faith in the international law and morality and had consistently advocated settlement of disputes by peaceful means. In fact, her solemn dedication to principles and a deep aversion to expediency constitute the cornerstone of Pakistan's foreign policy. That is why Pakistan has been able to resist successfully any pressure from outside to deviate from the principled stand on vital international issues.

To begin with, Pakistan had consistently upheld the Arab cause, especially the Palestinian cause because it is just and based on principles. She had cultivated friendly ties with all countries, especially the Muslim states, consistent with its peaceful universally recognized principles. Wherever any [word indistinct] have occurred that is because Pakistan has reacted adversely against a clear violation of these basic principles. One instance is Afghanistan, where the Russian military presence is in utter violation of the principles of international law and constitutes an assault on the sovereignty and independence of Afghanistan. Yet Pakistan has done nothing to provoke or alienate the Soviet Union with which it has tried to cultivate the best of relations. Indeed, bilateral relations between the two countries had been maintained in the practical sense and were reflected in the continuing growth of economic and commercial cooperation. Pakistan, however, continued to work for a political solution of the Afghan crisis. It had welcomed the EEC initiative for an international conference on the subject and talks with the personal representative of UN Secretary General Perez de Cauller. Pakistan had demonstrated its eagerness for a peaceful solution of the Afghan problem at the Geneva talks, which it hoped will produce some positive result.

With India, Pakistan had always tried to develop friendly ties in order to remove the causes of tension which had bedeviled relations between the two countries for a long time. Under the terms of the Silma agreement both Pakistan and India are committed to a settlement of disputes, including the question of Kashmir, through peaceful means and Pakistan had tried to remain true to the principles of the Simla agreement ever since it was signed in 1972. In order to reinforce these principles Pakistan had offered a no-war pact to India and had made sincere efforts to persuade the Indian leadership that such a pact was in the best interest of the two countries [words indistinct] to ensure peace and tranquillity in the entire region.

Pakistan believes that in the wake of the developments in Afghanistan, both India and Pakistan have the highest stake in strengthening each other and in promoting mutual trust and confidence. Pakistan, as the president has emphasized, wants stability in the region and has no aggressive designs against anyone. Aggression and war lead to chaos and destruction and no country can hope to survive or make any progress unless it sincerely strives to join the quest for international peace and tranquillity.

MAHBUBUL HAQ INTERVIEWED ON ECONOMY

Karachi DAWN in English Economic and Business Review 26 Sep 82 pp I, IV

[Text]

PAKISTAN's economy is healthier than most economies in the developing world, though it also suffers from major weaknesses. This view was expressed by Dr. Mahbubul Haq, the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission who has had the opportunity, as he said, to look at it closely during the last six months.

Dr. Mahbubul Haq, who was Director in the Policy Planning Department of the World Bank before joining his present post, also identified the sources of strength and the elements of weakness in the Pakistan economy and said, "we have to draw on the sources of strength and see how we can cover the weaknesses."

In an hour-long interview with M. Ziauddin of Dawn Economic & Business Review in Islamabad, Dr. Mahbubul Haq responded to about a dozen questions on various aspects of the national economy and spelt out in some detail the governmental policies relating to its different sectors.

Here are excerpts from the interview:

Q. You have observed Pakistan's economy form inside and outside. Would you tell us what exactly is wrong with it, assuming there is something wrong, and what corrective measures you would like to be taken?

A. I have tried to look at this economy from inside for the last six months and I find that there are tremendous sources of strength and also major weaknesses.

The sources of strength are that we have a healthy production base, we have managed a good growth rate of six per cent a year, there has been good financial management through which inflation rate has been kept down below two digits — 8 per cent this years, we have done extremely well in the agricultural sector, the income distribution in respect of the poor classes has improved — the remittances mostly going to the poorer classes — and zakat has put a safety net below the poorer of the poor, the bottom 15 per cent of the population or about 1.5 million families.

Weaknesses

But there are also weaknesses. The social services are badly neglected. On education and health, we have spent about one-fifth of what other developing countries are spending. We do not have adequate coverage of public services — electricity, water, roads — to rural areas. We have not liberated the economy from controls and regulations. We have not looked after the interests of middle income groups, particularly in urban areas, who see a major erosion in their fixed incomes.

So basically, we have to balance our developmental programmes. We have to continue the momentum of increased production, particularly in the agriculture sector, and create more infrastructure.

Q: It is claimed that the country's economy has been growing at an annual average rate of six per cent. Do you feel this is a realistic assessment?

Growth rate

A: Our real growth rate has been much higher than the official estimates. In fact I have been arguing with my colleagues that officially the growth rate is underestimated. For some major crops like wheat, rice, sugar, cotton there are fairly good estimates. But in many other sectors these are rough estimates and very conservative. For example, construction has been booming. You can just look at the figures of cement consumption and know how construction has been going on, which is logical in any period of inflation. Yet the growth rate that is shown in this sector is very small, because there is an old methodology which ties it down to unrealistic indicators, similarly, in minor crops, fruits, vegetables and many other sectors, some time the growth rate is taken at the same rate as the population growth. It has been the historical methodoly. My feeling is that in minor crops, small-scale industries, construction, even in trade, this is underestimated. The real growth in the system has been more, in the neighbourhood of seven to eight per cent.

Q: Would you identify the factors that have contributed to this kind of growth?

A: A number of factors have contributed to it. Better economic management was a major factor. In the case of agriculture, better support prices have meant that farmers made use of fertilisers, seeds and other inputs because now they could get a very good rate of return on their crops. In most cases the prices that farmers receive are either at the level of international prices or even above, like in sugarcane.

Most of the additional growth comes from agriculture. And there it has been a matter of policy changes. Support prices, good subsidy and a good rate of return to farmer. Agriculture is in private hands, they saw the incentives and moved quickly.

There has also been improvement in industry, a nine per cent per annum growth rate. There, it was more a matter of management of public enterprises which improved.

Q: Was this accomplished by changing the objectives of public enterprises from social to commercial?

A: So far as the social objectives of public enterprises are concerned, they could have been only twofold. One is increased production and the second would be better distribution. As such I cannot understand why we say that public industries, without meeting any of these objectives, were meeting some social objectives. But for the first time they are meeting these objectives because we define them as increase in employment, production, distribution and bonuses to the workers. For the first time we are also setting up performance criteria in social terms for each public enterprise. I do not think industries make major contribution to social objectives by either losing money or by raising prices endlessly.

Q: Are there any concrete plans for implementing your suggestion that a balance should be struck between the private and public sector?

A: Let me try to put this issue in perspective. There are two issues involved. One is the total industrial investment we must have for our future development. At the moment the total industrial investment, both private and public, is only one per cent of the GNP. In other industrialising developing countries it is roughly four per cent of the GNP. So, there is enough room for both public and private sectors. Because our total industrial investment is very low compared to what our future needs are. The dialogue unfortunately has been too much on public versus private. Secondly, I strongly believe that public sector should play only a catalyst role and in many cases it shoulf withdraw, if the private sector is willing to come forward with money, initiative and enterprise. This should create the room for it.

Denationalisation

Q: You have said that a number of industries like vegetable ghee and cement should be given back to the private sector. But so far no progress appears to have been made on this score?

A: The denationalisation issue has to move through several stages. One, you open up all the industries, which have been in the public sector, also to the private sector in future. That is what we are doing all along the line whether it is vegetable ghee or cement, except that there will be some industries like the steel mill which we cannot pass on to the private sector.

The second question is what to do with the existing nationalised industry. You cannot denationalise them simultaneously in one year. Supposing today there are 26 ghee industries and you try to sell all of them in one year, there is not enough money to buy them. So there has to be a phased denationalisation, depending on the capacity of the market and for that there must be a conscious policy. In each case there should be a realistic plan of action. Do we want to denationalise? Over what time? What kind of units? And then how are we going to do it?

Thirdly, there is a great limitation at the moment. Probably, there is more desire on the part of the Government to hand over units but there is limited desire on the part of the private sector to buy these units and for obvious reasons, because the private sector has the option to invest in these industries and to take up new units. They can set up their own pattern of investment. Engineering goods industry is going to open up the steel-based industries which have an exciting future. There is agro-industries and other avenues. These are all realistic issues confronting you when you come down to the nitty-gritty of nationalisation issue.

Basically, the Government has to spend a lot of resources in the Sixth Plan on both physical and social infrasturcture. No government has enough resources to take care of all these legitimate needs and yet be able to look after public industries and a number of other things. Yet a few limited things the Government will be able to do. As such there will be a great keenness on the part of the Government on pragmatic grounds to make the private sector partners in it. They should buy these units, take shares in it, become partners. Whether there will be similar keenness on the part of the private sector, I am not too sure.

Q: Do you think if there is no option, the private sector would consider buying these units more readily?

A. I do not want to impose a ban It would really be forcing a choice on the private sector, telling them you must take the old units off our hands We should not dump these units if we cannot run them or if they are inefficient. I think it will be unfair to suggest that no new units be given to the private sector. Let them come in, compete. Competition is the best thing that can happen between the public and private sector.

Deregulation

Q: Is it realistic to talk of deregulation in a planned economy, an economy which is also afflicted with limited resources and shortage of infrastructure facilities and is heavily dependent on borrowed resources?

A. There are two issues here. In any planned economy, there are some overall policy regulations that you need to have. But I find that the policy controls are generally weak in this economy. The administrative controls are very strong where discretionary powers come in.

What I mean by policy controls is that we can give guidance to the system. What kind of industrialisation pattern is in the national interest, what kind of concessions and facilities we will give for that, where we will give a tax break and where we will not and then within that policy framework, individual units will come up. There will be a short negative list and some restrictions on capacity in limited consumer item industries. Take for example agriculture. Here we adjusted the support prices of the crop, gave subsidies on various inputs, arranged credits for large and small farmers. In this sector, there has been a major breakthrough.

Now, there is other aspect. There are people who are desperate to get a number of services early because their industry is held up and they are going to suffer a major economic loss if they do not get these services. They are quite willing to pay, under the table, to some people who may have the power to give these services. Here the question is, how far you can use the pricing system to give these services which are in short supply to people who are willing to pay the highest, not to somebody below the table, but directly to the Government above the table. We are doing it, for example in case of tubewells. There is a subsidy of Rs. 1,500 per tubewell but also we brought in a policy parameter that if somebody wants a tubewell immediately there wont be any subsidy but the connection will be given. So the pricing system can be an instrument to replace the discretion.

And, secondly, of course, the only way to overcome these issues is to remove the scarcity itself, to invest in a major fashion in the infrastructure and remove these shortages. Thirdly in order to help, we would like very much to get the private sector in. If the private sector can set up their own generators, their own thermal stations, even airlines. We are considering a second airline in the private sector.

Q: Not banking?

A I am talking about infrastructure at the moment, physical infrastructure.

If I may just digress for a minute, in agriculture also the system of rationing is still there on wheat and sugar. We have lived with wheat rationing, for the last 40 years. But if we get into this surplus economy in wheat that we are trying we could have moved towards derationing. We are in a postion to do that in sugar. So the only real solution for scarcity economy is to remove scarcity. We are trying to see how we can take care of this through more pricing mechanism, rather than through adminstrative controls

Sixth Plan

Q: On what kind of model would you like to base the Sixth Plan?

A: The model of development is something that a country evolves according to its needs over time and it keeps changing because the needs of the economy keep changing. But the sense of direction has to remain the same in terms of development plans which is how best to balance a strong production base with a strong social consiousness. How to marry the ends of production and distribution because one without the other will die and wither away. That balance that you bring between production and distribution is where the typical genius of any country comes in. The model for the Sixth Plan is to bring this balance between improvement in production base and improvement in the lives of the people. That is why we are pursuing two related strategies. We must continue to increase our production by six to seven per cent a year and even more. And at the same time we have to balance it by much greater investment in our social services of education, health, clean water, greater balance between urban and rural areas so that they become full partners in development.

Cost of the Plan

Q: Would you like to tell us how much will it cost to implement such an ambitious Plan?

A: We have very preliminary exercises as to what it is going to cost us to pursue production, infrastructure and social services. The onvestment needs in the Sixth Plan, will be larger compared to the past, for two reasons. One, there has been neglect of infrastructure in the past. There has not been much development in energy, communictions or water supply. Secondly, they have increased because we are going to adjust our expenditures in education, health and low income housing.

Q: How are you planning to boost agricultural production?

A: Through a variery of devices. One, a very good rate of return to the farmer on his production. Two, a major improvement in the availability of services to the farmers like electricity, roads and social services. Three, a major improvement in farm mechanisation, particularly small tractors, because 90 per cent of our farmers are small farmers. Four, by opening up the possibility of exports and by organising the marketing system for it sothat farmers see an incentive not only to produce for the domestic market but a huge international market. We are one of the few developing countries which have comparative advantage to export food. Not many countries are in this business. They are competing in industrial exports.

Food exports

Q: In view of the existing unfavourable terms of trade for primary commodities, do you think it is possible to get a reasonable return on the proposed investment in agriculture by boosting food exports?

A: You are right, on primary produce the developing countries really get exploited. Today all the developing countries together are getting 50 billion dollars for primary goods exports and the consumers in the developed countries pay about 300 billion dollars for these items — banana, tea, coffee, coco —andin between the 250 billion dollars is taken away by the multinationals who process, ship, advertise and distribute them. These are the international services that the developing countries themselves should organise, the Third World multinationals.

The lesson to be learnt is not that we should not be getting into food exports but we should send them in a more processed form. We should handle the processing. That is why I am keen on village electrification so that agro-industry comes up all over the rural areas. Chain of cold storages everywhere. Marketing services should emerge. Because our markets are very close at hand in the Middle East. That requires skill, management and technology. But there is now a whole new class of educated people who have emerged. Many of them are going outside trying to set up international services in banking, insurance and distribution. Why cannot they do it if this field is opened up here.

Q: How crucially is the Sixth Plan dependent on the negotiations you are having with the World Bank for a five-year consolidation of debts?

A. Let me put it the other way. Pakistan in the Sixth Plan is going to offer to the international community one of the most dynamic societies that may be around in the developing world. I cannot think of many developing countries which will be trying to have six to seven per cent growth rate, where there will be a gradual liberation of economy from some of these current administrative controls, and which will offer opportunities and markets both domestically and internationally. I will suggest that it will be in the interest of the international community to take a chance in Pakistan's economic future. It is in their interest to ensure that our net assistance, which has dropped to 20 per cent of gross, scales up in the Sixth Plan period. They should find some means, either of consolidating debts and refinancing. We will pay each and every penny of the debt that we will incur. But the idea is to put them together whatever payments we are going to make in five years and say okay we will pay it over a longer period (20 years with five years grace on easy instalments) and that way we get a certain breathing space in which we can manage our affairs and get the needed resources for major investments that we have to make in infrastructure and social services alongside the production basethat I was just describing to you. So I wont say that the Sixth Plan is dependent on one particular thing, whether foreign loans, domestic efforts, agricultural breakthrough, infrastructural investments. They come together. It is a very delicate mechanism in any economy or Plan.But this is an important issue for us. And I would suggest that it is a far more important issue for the international community. They should rethink their options in the developing world. It is in their interest that they come through with this consolidation and major relief during a key period which is needed for our major economic breakthrough.

Q: If they dont come through?

A: I never speculate on failure. I always like to speculate on success. We are always prepared for the worst but we never speculate on it.

TAIWAN BUSINESS DELEGATION IN KARACHI--QUESTIONS RAISED ABOUT ENTRY

Karachi DAWN in English Economic and Business Review 26 Sep 82 pp I, IV

[Article by Shaheen Sehbai]

[Text]

A GROUP OF businessmen from Taiwan has just completed a fortnight's visit to Karachi reportedly on the invitation of a private import-export firm though all their efforts to gain official patronage met with a firm refusal.

The group and its Pakistani host, however, succeeded in meeting local exporters and importers to discuss trade prospects, especially import of Taiwan-make goods in Pakistan.

The businessmen last week also met an official of the Export Promotion Bureau but EPB sources later described it as a purely "courtesy call."

According to informed sources a meeting between the Taiwanese and the Karachi Chamber of Commerce officials was arranged on September 20 at the instance of the EPB but it was cancelled shortly before it could materialise.

An EPB official told DAWN: "The meeting had been inadvertantly arranged by the Bureau as a "routine". It is normal practice that when a visiting delegation seeks meetings with trade bodies, the EPB makes the appointments, without referring the matter to higher authorities. This was done in this case as well.

"But when the EPB high-ups came to know that the traders were from Taiwan, they immediately pulled out of the matter and informed the Karachi Chamber to cancel the meeting immediately."

"The EPB did not want itself to be involved with the Taiwanese in any way," a senior official said.

The firm which played host to the delegation is believed to maintain the position that it was "one of the many delegations which come off and on from China."

Officials of the firm would not admit that they belonged to Taiwan, but had no answer to the question as to why the visit was kept so secret.

An EPB official said the firm had persistently tried to enlist EPB patronage and wanted the EPB to entertain the delegation members like a trade delegation from any other country. This was firmly declined.

A market survey shows that goods made in Taiwan have made an increasing appearance in the last few months, although Pakistan has no official trade with Taiwan.

Business circles say many importers get Taiwanese goods through dealers in Hong Kong and Singapore and these goods reach here with "Made in Taiwan" stamps clear and visible.

The 1982-83 Import Policy of Pakistan, however, does not exclude Taiwan as a banned country like Israel and South Africa. Goods originating in these countries cannot be imported here but Taiwan does not appear to fall in this category.

This was probably the first attemptt by Taiwanese businessmen to seek a tacit official patronage for boosting Pak-Taiwan trade on a bilateral basis, though on an unofficial level.

The main question that arises however is how these businessmen got into Pakistan because Pakistan does not recognise Taiwan. No travel facilities exist between the two either.

Business sources say the visit was in response to similar visits paid by some Pakistani traders in the past and since Taiwan did not object to the entry of Pakistanis, it was so arranged that the Taiwanese did not face any problem while visiting Pakistan.

One possible explanation available was that since Taiwanese carried passports of "Republic of China", the name Taiwan uses, our immigration people could may not have detected the difference between the "Republic" and the People's Republic and let them in.

The question of how and where they got their visas to visit Pakistan, still remains a mystery. Part of the answer should be known to the Pakistani host firm and also in official circles.

POLITICAL AGENT SHOT DEAD

Karachi DAWN in English 26 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] PESHAWAR, Sept 25. Political Agent, North Waziristan, Mr. Abdul Hamid, and a Jawan of Tochi Scouts, were reportedly shot dead by a group of apparently tribal miscreants in Karkanrwam, while the deceased were performing official duties, says an official Press Note issued here today.

The Press Note said, on Sept 23 an official jeep while on its way from Janer post near Bichikashakai to Meer Ali in North Waziristan was stopped by the miscreants and the officers travelling in the jeep were deprived of their belongings including a rifle.

On receipt of information that these miscreants have taken refuge in Karkanrwam, North Waziristan, the Political Agent, North Waziristan, Mr. Abdul Hamid Khan, alongwith commandant and a small contingent of Tochi Scouts immediately rushed towards Karkanrwam via Bannu. The miscreants on seeing the party started firing, as a result of which the Political Agent and a Jawan of Tochi Scouts were killed and four others sustained injuries.

The injured were rushed to the nearest hospital for medical treatment.

The Commissioner, D. I. Khan and other officials have arrived in Bannu to supervise the situation.

The provincial Government has paid glowing tributes to late Mr. Abdul Hamid Khan, who sacrificed his life in the discharge of his official duties. The Press Note lauded his devotion, dedication and dutifulness and placed on record the highest appreciation of his dutifulness.

Late Mr. Abdul Hamid Khan was buried in his native graveyard in D. I. Khan, this afternoon.-

SIND GOVERNOR SAYS KILLERS OF BHOPALI ALMOST IDENTIFIED

Karachi DAWN in English 26 Sep 82 pp 1, 11

[Text]

Lt Gen S.M. Abbasi, Governor of Sind, said in Karachi on Saturday that the alleged killer of late Zahoorul Hassan Bhopali had "almost 90 per cent" been identified.

Talking to newsmen during the tea break at the Sind Provincial Council meeting the Governor said "in our view the killers are still hiding in the city".

He said that the Sind Police through the help and cooperation of a Federal agency, worked out a sketch of the alleged killers with the help of the "identikit". The eye witnesses have borne out the sketch to be that of the alleged killer, he added. He said the administration was considering whether to publicise that sketch and put it on display at public places and also to release it to the media in order to lay the arms of the law on him.

Replying to a question, the Governor said he was fully satisfied with the todate progress made by the police into Mr Bhopali's murder.

He didn't agree with certain Press reports in which it was suggested that a high police official's attitude was blocking the progress of the investigation. "It's not a matter of files only", the Governor said, adding that the police was doing more field work than the file work. He said through the investigative progress, the police had succeeded in identifying the particular terrorist group, to which the alleged killer belonged.

When aked to name that particular terrorist group, Gen Abbasi said the national dailies had already published reports about it. The Governor also said that Mr Bhopali's murder was due to political feud.

Ilyas Siddiqi

He said that the third murdered man, who remained unidentified for a few days after the crime, was Ilyas Siddiqi beyond any shadow of doubt. It may be mentioned here that Ilyas Siddiqi was one of the 54 prisoners, who were flown out to Damascas on the demand of the hijackers of the PIA Boeing in March, last year.

The Governor said that Ilyas Siddiqi's involvement and also the use of foreign weapons in the crime proved well that it was not the work of any local group or people.

To a question whether the alleged killers had fled the city, the Governor said that the administration viewed that they were still present in the city.

Asked for his comments on the failure of the police to check the re-entry of Ilyas Siddiqi in Pakistan, Gen Abbasi said that the police could not be blamed for that. Watch on the movement of individuals in a city of over five and half million population was not possible. Moreover, such persons had been entering Pakistan from Kabul.

TPI adds: A correspondent asked whether Ilyas Siddiqi was trying to seem amnesty through Mr Zahoorul Hassan Bhopali the Governor replied not to my knowledge.

The Governor said detailed investigations are being made and as a result of these a sketch of the culprit has been drawn to arrest him at the earliest.

To another question, Gen Abbasi said a detailed discussion will be held on law and order situation in the province in todays (Sunday) session of the Sind Council. He said the House will be apprised of the measures taken to improve the general law and order situation.

Great patriot

The Governor also made mention of Zahoorul Hassan Bhopali's assassination during his speech, while inaugurating the two-day session of the Council. Late Bhopali, he added, was a victim of a terrorist group. He paid tributes to him and said that thisyoung man was a great patriot and supporter of the ideology of Pakistan.

The Governor remarked that the trends of terrorist activities are currently increasing in several parts of the world.

Gen Abbasi also referred to the tragic death of another Majlis-i-Shoora Member — Jibreel Siddiqi of Hyderabad who died in a road accident recently.

RIFTS REPORTED IN PPP IN UNITED KINGDOM, EUROPE

Karachi DAWN in English 26 Sep 82 p 14

[Text]

LONDON, Sept 25: The intra-party rift in PPP (overseas) has created some serious problems for the party organisers not only in U.K., but in some West European countries as well.

The party sources in London are deeply worried over the situation which, according to them, is the result of personal differences between the leaders of various groups. Some party workers who belong to Khar group have started a whispering campaign against Dr Ghulam Hussain that he had no authority to call himself secretary general of the party, while the supporter of Ghulam Hussain group disapproved of the feudalistic manner of handling of party affairs by Mr Khar.

Recently some rallies and meetings arranged by the party in U.K. and elsewhere were boycotted by one or the other faction and its leader mainly due to internal feud.

Dr Ghulam Hussain has failed to get any support in the UK. He has also not been able to get a foothold in the West European countries.

A reliable party source has disclosed that in order to strengthen his position Mr Khar has been trying to establish liaison with some foreign countries. Only a couple of months ago he had a long meeting with a senior Russian diplomat in Paris. Khar group is attaching great importance to this meeting.

It is learnt that the different groups are making necessary preparations to present their case when Begum Bhutto visits London and some places in Europe in near future.-

TEHRIK TO TAKE PART IN MRD MEETINGS

Karachi DAWN in English 26 Sep 82 p 14

[Text]

PESHAWAR, Sept 25: Defunct Tehrik-i-Istiqlal would henceforth participate in the MRD meetings at all levels, but without accepting the offices in its permanent structure.

This was stated today by Syed Munir Shah Acting President of defunct Tehrik-i-Istiqlal, after receiving positive reply from Air Marshal (Retd) M. Asghar Khan from his residence where he is under house arrest.

According to him, Asghar Khan impressed upon him that he is not willing to interfere in party decisions, made on consensus. Syed Munir Shah, who had recently presided the meeting of National Working Committee of the party at Peshawar categorically refuted any signs of division in the said meeting on MRD issue. Instead, he said all decisions that it took were bearing total consent of the entire body.

He said the committee had unanimously decided to remain within the folds of MRD, extending its wholehearted cooperation in the struggle for restoration of democracy in the country. It however, was of the opinion that since the establishment of a permanent secretariat of the MRD was in contravention of four-point declaration of the MRD, Tehrik should not accept any office in the new structure. It further decided to carry on accepting the offices of conveners which come by rotation every month.—PPI

MRS BHUTTO'S MEDICAL REPORT SUBMITTED TO ZIA

Karachi DAWN in English 26 Sep 82 p 14

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Sept 25: The medical report of Mrs. Nusrat Bhutto regarding her recent illness has been submitted to President General M. Zia-ul-Haq by the Federal Ministry of Interior, it is reliably learnt.

Mrs. Bhutto, desirous of seeking medical treatment abroad, had asked the Government permission.

A detailed report showing various stages of her illness alongwith a private doctor's recommendation has also been submitted by her along with the request to travel abroad.

Her medical report, after it was carefully reviewed by the Interior Ministry, was moved to the Ministry of Health for technical comments.

The Interior Ministry is learnt to have later sent Mrs. Bhutto's request for medical treatment abroad to President General M. Zia-ul-Haq without comments from the Health Ministry.

Meanwhile, biopsy test of Mrs. Bhutto, performed by a pathologist in Lahore, had reportedly hinted the presence of cancer germs.

AFGHAN TALKS--Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan has said indirect talks on Afghanistan are to be resumed by the end of this month or in the second half of next month when the special representative of the UN secretary general on Afghanistan visits the area. His visit is expected to take place after the general assembly's debate on Afghanistan issue which is likely later during the session. The foreign minister was talking to newsmen on his return to Islamabad this morning after attending the first 3 weeks of the current session of the UN General Assembly. In reply to a question about the proposed nonaggression pact with India he said the next round of talks between the foreign secretaries of the two countries are to be resumed in December next. Although these talks could not be expected to achieve a spectacular or quick breakthrough, the two sides would certainly prepare the ground and consolidate the work that has already been done in this regard. Pakistan's endeavor in the normalization of relations with India, he added, was based on step-by-step approach. About the Iran-Iraq war he said Pakistan has made it clear to both the countries that it will be prepared to help bring at any time an end to the conflict. Referring to the Israeli aggression in Lebanon he said it has been of a major concern to Pakistan. About Pakistan's candidature for the Asian seat in the Security Council the foreign minister said they [as heard] had a good case and reasonable expectation of successes. UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES--There has been a big jump in Australia's monthly unemployment figures with the number of people looking for full- or part-time work now more than half a million, exceeding the level set in 1933 during the great depression. Radio Australia's Canberra office says recent labor force figures showing that jobs were disappearing at the rate of 2,000 a day prepared the way for a big increase in the official unemployment figures. According to the latest figures, nearly 421,000 people were seeking full-time employment during September while another 84,000 were seeking part-time work. On the full-time unemployment figures, the number of job seekers rose by just over 35,000 between August and September, a percentage rise of .6 of 1 percent. The treasurer, Mr Howard, says much of Australia's unemployment is due to the prolonged international recession although he also pointed to local wage increases as a major factor. In Melbourne, the president of the Council Australian of Trade Unions, Cliff Dolan, has called on the federal government to resign and hold an early election on the issue of unemployment. The economics spokesman for the Australian Democrats, Senator Siddons, says the latest unemployment figures show the country is sliding into a serious depression. AGRICULTURE MINISTER DISCUSSES FOOD SELF-SUFFICIENCY

[Text] Jakarta, 19 Oct (ANTARA-OANA)--With the current production rate Indonesia has basically achieved self-sufficiency in food, Agriculture Minister Sudarsono Hadisaputro said in a televised interview here Monday night on the occasion of the World Food Day commemoration.

In the last three years Indonesia has succeeded in raising food production especially rice in a spectacular rate, attributed, by the minister, to favourable weather and better productivity of the farmers.

In 1980 the country nothced up a 12.8 per cent increase in the staple food production to 20.1 million tons from only 17.8 million tons in 1979. Last year the production figure rose again to 22.2 million tons which represented an increase of 13.5 per cent. This year the figure is predicted to go up again to 23 million tons.

The annual increases enable the country to raise food procurement from farmers.

In 1979 food procurement totalled only 431,000 tons. In 1981 the figure shot up to 1.9 million tons. By October this year food procurement, which is handled by the Board of Logistics (BULOG), had reached 2.1 million tons.

Consequently, rice imports drop from year to year. In 1979 imports hit an all time high of 2.6 million tons, but the following year in 1980 the figure dwindled sharply to only 1.1 million tons and down again to a mere 430,000 tons last year.

This year the import figure is predicted to fall still further down.

According to the minister, the world food situation looks better in the last few years although production rates still are falling behind the population growth rates in many developing countries.

"Many countries still are plagued by severe food shortages. Hunger casualties are still high in Africa," he pointed out.

GOLKAR STATEMENT ENDORSES PANCASILA

BK210819 Jakarta OANA in English 0747 GMT 21 Oct 82

[Text] Jakarta, 21 Oct (ANTARA/OANA)--The Functional Group, Golkar, stated Wednesday there is a need in ancitipation of the fourth 5-year development plan (Pelita IV--1984-1989), to reorder the basic and principal social-political affairs of the nation.

With this reordering it is hoped that the succeeding younger generation will in future be able to concentrate full attention on national development problems, holding on firmly to Pancasila as the only national ideology and the 1945 Constitution as the state Constitution.

In a political statement issued Wednesday night on the occasion of the 18th anniversary of Golkar, the Functional Group said further that the reordering in the social-political field should be based on the essence of the Indonesian nationhood as a society made up of multicomplex groups all committed to the ideal of Indonesian independence.

Thus for Golkar it is a matter of deep principle that all social-political forces in the country should reassert their respective loyalty to Pancasila as the one and only principle, so that there will no longer be any room for dualistic attitude in their political ideology or for any form of exclusivism in the political field. As the logical consequence of this loyalty, each social-political force should have the characteristic of being open to all Indonesian citizens.

History has proved that each time the existence of the nation was threatened, Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution emerged as the saviour. That is why since the birth of the new order a national consensus was reached to safeguard Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution purely and consistently. The appointment of some members of the People's Consultative Assembly [MPR] would guarantee that Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution could not be changed even in a constitutional way.

With the successes achieved in the national development, there is a need to renew the above consensus so that the safeguarding of Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution could be implemented with full respect to the right of MPR to amend the Constitution as provided in Article 37 of it. As such, the number of appointed members of MPR could be reduced by holding a referendum as a mechanism in exercising the authority of MPR. In other words if MPR desires to amend the 1945 Constitution it had to get the direct approval of the people as the source of sovereignty.

In its political statement Golkar emphasized that cooperative constituted the main vehicle for developing the economy of the people steadily towards realizing a strong national economy. Therefore, cooperative movement should be further intensified and consolidated and that there should not be fear that it might pose as a threat to other sectors.

The concentrating of economic power such as the emergence of monopolistic groups and cartels should never be tolerated.

Foreign investment and other available international funds would still be needed and should be utilized as additional capital for realizing economic independence and self-sufficiency, he added. [pronoun as received--no earlier reference to person].

[Youth Union Feature: "Formation of the Base Level Youth Union Committee"]

[Excerpt] 2. Outline Organization of the Youth Union bases include:

Base level Youth Union Executive Committee, Youth Union units, and Youth Union groups depending on their special emphasis and the movements of each local unit in wards, villages, cantons, co-ops, factories, settlements, offices and organizations, hospitals, schools and base units within the army in order to set up the Youth Union organization in the bases properly aimed at making the Youth Union committee involved with the social movement to achieve the goals the party is struggling for as well as their own administrative authorities to which their units are subordinate.

The organization of the Youth Union in the bases might be one or many units depending on actual conditions. Any units with more than 3 members can be organized into a Youth Union unit. If there are more than 25-30 people it might be broken down into many different units. For units with many Youth Union members and Youth Union units, if it is considered necessary they might be able to form federated subordinate to the Youth Union administrative committee at the base level. The higher level Youth Union will set up and decide on the official age for membership and the responsibilities of the Youth Union federated units.

Youth Union units with at least 3-6 members must elect a secretary. If there are 7-8 members, they must vote for an additional deputy secretary. With at least 9 members they can elect an administrative committee. At the same time, they might be broken down into many groups and then select or specify who is to be chief and assistant chief of the Youth Union group.

The base level Youth Union administrative committee is 45-50 percent women. The Youth Union federated units can elect a secretary and an assistant secretary. If there are more than 9 on the committee they can elect a standing committee.

The base level Youth Union administrative committee, the Youth Union federated units, and the Youth Union units must divide up the work for each committee as follows.

The secretary has overall responsibility and [is in charge of] political and ideological training.

The assistant secretary is responsible for organization and inspection.

The first committee member is responsible for various work movements.

The second committee member is responsible for youth work. Any units and schools without youth [are separate from] the work movement.

If there is another committee it would be responsible for physical work, increasing production, sports, gymnastics, and military [affairs]. If there is no such committee this work must be given to a comrade responsible for the work movement.

II. Duties of the base level Youth Union committee. What are the responsibilities of the base level Youth Union committee?

1. Study and teach party policies, the government's plan, and the duties of the Youth Union committee to cadres, Youth Union members, and the Youth Union masses aiming at cultivating solid revolutionary principles and morality in the Youth Union. Guide and organize study to improve culture, science, military science, etc for the Youth Union, Guide the Youth Union members in general in building up their pure and innocent life style and help them to endlessly advance themselves in all apsects. These are the basic duties they must normally do.

2. Organize, mobilize, and guide the emulation process in the ranks of the Youth Union. [Guide] the youth to carry out the party's political work, the government's plan, and other work assigned by the higher-level Youth Union, e.g., work to increase production, saving [what they had earned], volunteering to serve in the ranks of the military forces, receiving military training to get ready for the brave and resolute struggle and to defeat all the enemies' tricks. These are the main duties.

3. Encourage all forms of organization movement to attract youth of 15-30 years of age who are in their units or localities, including those who are married but less than 30 years old, to join the organization. Divide up and assign Youth Union members of all classes to be in close contact with each level of the Youth Union and as nationalities in order to firmly grasp their ideology, goals, and living situation. Then study and look for ways to educate, train, and mobilize them to participate in physical work, studies, and different movements in society. This is considered [front line work].

4. Work to give the Youth Union organization a firm, solid political ideology, and organization especially the Youth Union units which must have the ability to firmly grasp and to be the driving forces in various kinds of work. Avoid having inert ideas; [instead], be a driving force to properly research, report, and solve all cases and all situations which occur in the Youth Union in their units and localities. These are the primary duties.

5. Be responsible for the youth work, pay attention to, study, and organize movements aimed at building up the [youth units] so that they can become continuing and expanding forces of the Youth Union in all aspects in order to carry on the revolutionary work of the party in the future. These are the immediate duties as well as long-term duties of the Youth Union.

Questions for study:

1. What is the base level Youth Union committee?

What do they aim at in order to form the base level Youth Union organization? What is the outline of the base level Youth Union organization? How do the base level Youth administrative committee, the Youth Union federated units, and the Youth Union units divide up work for individuals? What are the duties of the base level Youth Union committee?

NOUHAK ORDERS RESTRICTIONS ON FISHING, USE OF CHEMICAL POISONS FORBIDDEN

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 8 Sep 82 p 2

[Feature: "The Resolution Concerning Organization and Control of Fishing in the Nam Ngeum Reservoir Under Vientiane Province"]

[Text] Considering the demand and capability for expanding fishing in the Nam Ngeum reservoir subordinate to Vientiane Province;

Concerning the results of the meeting of the standing committee of the Council of Ministers on 16 August 1982 concerning the organization and control of fishing in Nam Ngeum reservoir;

Considering the report of the Ministers attached to the Office of the Prime Minister;

The Council of Ministers has decided as follows:

Article 1. Nam Ngeum reservoir is a natural resource for the nation, and an important part of Nam Ngeum electrification. Investment, exploitation of, and business concerning this natural resource including fish raising, fishing, and fishing business all have to be under government control. No individuals, organizations, military, or police units have the right to fish or carry on any fishing business in Nam Ngeum reservoir without the approval of the fishing control committee. The government strictly forbids the use of poisons, explosives, other chemicals, and electricity for fishing in the reservoir.

Article 2. The provincial administrative committee of Vientiane Province is an organization assigned by the government with full rights to control all fishing in Nam Ngeum reservoir.

The machinery for controlling the Nam Ngeum reservoir is called the "Nam Ngeum Reservoir Fishing Control Committee." This is the administrative machinery. There are patrol units, an inspection division and light weapons section. All inspection and patrol activities must strongly cooperate with military forces, public security forces, and guerrilla-militia units in the Nam Ngeum reservoir area under the unified guidance of the Vientiane Province administrative committee.

Article 3. The government has set up the Nam Ngeum Fishing Company which is subordinate to the Vientiane Trade Service and grants it a monopoly for fish raising, fishing, fish purchasing, fish manufacturing protection, and fishing business. Meanwhile, it must be responsible for fish production to meet the needs of all central offices and organizations in Vientiane Capital and Vientiane Province (including all military forces of the center, Vientiane Capital, and Vientiane Province).

Outside of the Nam Ngeum Fishing Company, no organizations or individuals have the right to get fish in this reservoir.

Article 4. The organizations and persons who are permitted ot fish in the Nam Ngeum reservoir are:

--the Nam Ngeum Fishing Company;

--the fishing co-ops that are still doing fishing in the Nam Ngeum reservoir, and that have been granted a fishing license in Nam Ngeum reservoir preceding the issue of this resolution;

--workers who normally live around the Nam Ngeum reservoir, and cantons of many different districts subordinate to Vientiane Province who have been fishing preceding the issue of this resolution; no matter how many fish they catch they must sell them only to the fishing company;

--workers who are not engaged in the fishing business who live around the Nam Ngeum reservoir preceding the issue of this resolution will be permitted to fish only for family consumption.

The Nam Ngeum fish control committee must implement this resolution and reorganize registration for all units and individuals who engage in fishing in the Nam Ngeum reservoir so it will be easy to control.

Article 5. Organizations and individuals who are granted licenses for fishing and who engage in the fishing business in the Nam Ngeum reservoir as mentioned in Article 4 above must register for fishing with the Nam Ngeum Reservoir Fishing Control Committee; they will be able to fish only after the Nam Ngeum fish control committee has granted them permits. All fishing boats in Nam Ngeum reservoir must use registration plates made of stainless steel or wooden boards made by the Nam Ngeum Fish Control Committee, and they must be on both ends of the boat near the seat of the person who holds the tiller.

Article 6. All organizations and individuals who engage in fishing in the Nam Ngeum reservoir must pay taxes to the government through the finance organ of Vientiane Province. The finance organ of Vientiane Province must put 50 percent of this tax into the central budget. The provincial administrative committee of Vientiane Province has the right to keep 50 percent of the taxes for the expenses involved in the fish control operation in Nam Ngeum reservoir.

Article 7. The provincial administrative committee of Vientiane is given the right to plan and announce the detailed restrictions concerning fish raising, fishing, protecting, buying, and distributing fish in the Nam Ngeum reservoir based on the protection of the government's interests and to properly improve benefits for all involved.

Article 8. The Ministers and Deputy Ministers, chairman and assistant chairman of the committee of equivalent ministries, the capital administrative committee chairman, and the chairman of the Vientiane Province administrative committee must be responsible for the implementation of this resolution.

All preceding resolutions that are in conflict with this one are hereby voided.

NEW RESTAURANT, ICE FACTORY TO OPEN IN VIENTIANE

[Text] This coming November 1982 a restaurant will be opened in Sikottabong District to serve the masses. There will also be international food to serve international guests, as well as performing arts entertainment during the meals. A special item is that in one more month an ice factory will be able to meet the demands of the masses in Vientiane Capital.

Comrade Khampon Sivivat, director of the State Hotel and Restaurant Enterprise of Vientiane Capital, told VIENTIANE MAI on the morning of 6 August 1982 that this November the company will open an additional restaurant to serve international guests and the masses in Sikottabong District, Vientiane Capital. Presently it is under construction and repair. According to Comrade Khampon, the restaurant will be open to serve all the masses and domestic and international guests. Its special characteristic is that it will be a place for amateur performing arts to entertain the guests in the restaurant, i.e., to entertain the masses.

Comrade Khampon added that in terms of food service for the company up to now, if we average it out the response to the needs of masses can be said to be total. This means there are now a total of 15 international and mass restaurants in 5 cities in the Vientiane Capital area. The masses utilize each of them in large numbers.

At the end Comrade Khampon Sivavat repeated and added concerning the ice service for the masses in the Vientiane Capital area that this coming October the ice factory under the company will put in one additional ice-producing machine whose installation is now being started. When the installation is finished it will be able to produce as much as 90 tons of ice a day. The new amount plus that produced by the present system is considered sufficient for the demands of the masses within the capital. However, the ice production of the company today is already considered to meet half of the needs of the masses in the capital, which is 15 tons of ice per day.

MONG TRIBAL DISTRICT LABOR UNIT--In order to make the party's resolution concerning solidly and strongly turning all aspects of forces into bases a reality, starting on 24 August to 17 August 1982 (4 full days in all) [as published], the Central echelon of the Lao Trade Union [Federation] along with the provincial labor union including Mr Bouapheng of the Lao Central Federation of Trade Unions committee, Mr Simon, a comrade of the Lao Central Federation of Trade Unions Office along with one follower and Comrade Kong Phannivong, chief of the Vientiane Province Trade Union, and Comrade Sounthavong Southammavong of the Vientiane Province Trade Union together formed a work unit to improve trade union forces all over the province. Along with one representative of Keo-Oudom, the labor union successfully trained members and organized labor unions in Hom District, Vientiane Province. From a place that had nothing it now has both old and new labor union members formed into 1 district base and 2 unit bases. The members and the district labor union organization show the fruit of the party's concern, and the determination and attention of both the central and provincial labor unions. [There was] good cooperation from the district and a quick understanding and voluntary awakening of this district's workers and government employees who want to be leaders in all aspects of the two strategic duties, which are the protection and construction of the nation to become steadily stronger. SPORTS TEAMS TO THAILAND--To continue the fraternal friendship between the people of Laos and Thailand, and to respond to the invitation of the governor of Nongkhai and the sports association of Nongkai Province, on the morning of 4 September 1982 the sports teams of Vientiane Province, LPDR, led by Mr Bounseng Phengsouk of the provincial administrative committee of Vientiane Province set off on their trip to join the friendship sports competition in Nongkhai. There were two sports that Vientiane Province participated in this time, badminton and basketball. These two sports competitions created a very cheerful atmosphere for the people in Nongkhai, and they were loudly and endlessly applauded and praised by the people in Nongkhai. The teams returned safely to Vientiane on the evening of the same day. [Text] [Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 7 Sep 82 p 1] 9884

SAVANNAKHET INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION--K. P. L.--In the first 6 months of 1982 workers of several companies and factories in Savannakhet Province all promoted the working class spirit in actively carrying out their work and guaranteed to achieve the first 6 month plan as expected. Several factories exceeded expectations. These included the Lao International Transportation Company which transported goods and other materials for trade companies in Vientiane, Khammouan, Champassak, Saravane, Attopeu, etc, with a total of over 13,000 tons. Soft drink factories produced 10,442 liters of different kinds of soft drinks, 50.85 percent of the plan; 1,616 tons of ice was produced, 172.06 percent of the plan; 29,700 bars of soap were produced, or 41.25 percent of the plan. The Na Tia salt factory produced over 80 tons of salt which exceeded the expected plan by 7.97 percent. The workers in each place are now continuously carrying out the second 6 month plan to score glorious achievements in the spirit of emulation to implement the Third Party Congress fruitfully and victoriously. 'STRONG POSITION' TO BE TAKEN ON KHMER ISSUE

[Article by Cheong Mei Sui]

[Text] Malaysia is expected to take a strong position on the Kampuchean issue at next week's commonwealth heads of government regional meeting (Chogrm) in Fiji which Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed will attend.

The five-day meeting in Suva begins on 14 October.

Singapore, another ASEAN member attending the meeting, is likely to support Malaysia's view.

Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir, who has just returned from addressing the United Nations General Assembly, has expressed disappointment over India's statement on Kampuchea.

In his speech at the UN, Indian External Affairs Minister Narasimha Rao said: "The advent of an alliance of convenience whose real content is too thinly veiled to need any unravelling should not distract our attention.

"Once the fear of the return of the holocaust is removed and the threat to their territorial integrity and sovereignty is ended, the people of Kampuchea will be willing and eager to get foreign troops to leave their soil."

Foreign Minister Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie too was disappointed with the Indians, who have recognised the puppet regime of Heng Samrin in Kampuchea.

"How can he (Mr Rao) talk of a threat to sovereignty and territorial integrity of Kampuchea when the country has already been debauched by Vietnam?" Tan Sri Ghazali asked.

The Indians are expected to take a low profile at the Chogrm. New Delhi's relations with Suva have been strained since the recent Fiji election.

The Indian High Commissioner accredited to Suva had to leave following allegations of Indian meddling in Fijian politics.

Indian Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi will not be present in Suva for the Chogrm and will be represented by Mr Rao, said diplomatic sources.

Said an ASEAN diplomat: "Malaysia and Singapore may have to take a high profile on the Kampuchean issue and criticise the Indians to get what we want on to the communique."

Mr Rao's statement in the UN is seen to be tantamount to a renegation of the Indian assurance to ASEAN that New Delhi would not do anything that would harm ASEAN's interest on the issue.

At the 1981 non-aligned foreign ministers' meeting in New Delhi, Malaysia, Singapore and Indonesia had to fight hard to get the acceptable wording on the Kampuchean situation.

The original draft put up by New Delhi was unacceptable to ASEAN as it did not mention Kampuchea by name.

At the second Chogrm held in New Delhi in September 1980, Malaysia and Singapore expressed satisfaction over the wording of the communique on the Kampuchean conflict although there was no mention of the Vietnamese.

The communique then underlined the need for a comprehensive political solution in Kampuchea to bring about durable peace and stability in South-East Asia.

The 16 heads of government from the Asia-Pacific region at the talks expressed "grave concern over the persistence of foreign intervention and interference in Kampuchea" which affected the peace and security of the whole region.

The leaders stressed the need for the withdrawal of foreign troops from that country.

Obviously referring to India, Singapore Premier Lee Kuan Yew told a news conference then:

"There were some people who thought that we should not make specific references to particular actions, whether they were armed or unarmed."

In Suva, Malaysia and Singapore expect no less than the position already taken at the New Delhi Chogrm. "In fact, we want more," said an official.

TRADE PROTECTIONISM--Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed expressed Malaysia's readiness to lend support to developing countries in this region in opposing the Australian trade protectionism policy. The prime minister sayd he understands the needs of the small nations; however, the bigger powerful countries should open their markets and this means they should not practice protectionism. He was speaking to newsmen on arrival in Suva, Fiji, to attend the third commonwealth heads of government regional meeting beginning tomorrow. Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir clarified that Malaysia did not have any trade problems with New Zealand. He reiterated his call to the wealthy nations like Australia to expend the trade opportunities with the developing nations. The prime minister criticized developed nations which still refused to ratify the Law of the Sea convention. He described their action as unfair as they were maximizing the benefit gained for their own countries' interests only. The United States is one of the countries that have not ratified the convention. [Text] [BK121439 Kuala Lumpur Domestic Service in English 1330 GMT Oct 82 [as printed]]

FOLLOWING GANDHISM TO BRING ABOUT ISLAMIC REVOLUTION RIDICULED

Lahore NAWA-I-WAQT in Urdu 10 Aug 82 p 10

[Article by Abdul Qadir Hasan: "Non-Political Talks; Punjabi Gandhi"]

[Text] At an intersection of Murree Road, Rawalpindi, there was a display of various cloth banners which said that the chief speaker of a television program "Al-Huda", Dr Israr Ahmad would give a lecture from such and such date. The next day, one of the English newspapers of Islamabad gave a report of his first lecture along with his photo in a special pose. This report was so strange that I could not believe what I was reading. I contacted the newspaper and learned that they, too, had published that speech with astonishment and bewilderment. Still, I waited 1 more day before saying something about the speech with the hope that some clarification about it might be published, but nothing happened.

Speaking on the question of true Islamic revolution in Pakistan, Dr Sahib rightfully said that partial solutions would not help to establish an Islamic society. Instead, it required a complete revolution like that in Iran. However, the stage by stage program suggested by Dr Sahib for bringing about this change and Islamic revolution, is worth contemplation for every Muslim. While presenting this program, he declared its first step to be non-violent resistance. He described Gandhi's movement for non-violence as its practical example. He said that they would have to follow the path of non-violence and gentleness like Gandhi in order to bring about an Islamic revolution. After that, he stated the second stage and said that that too, would be like Mahatma Gandhi's movement for salt. During his movement for salt, Mahatma Gandhi opposed the government by resisting its authority. Dr Sahib described the third stage of the program to be a direct armed campaign as practiced in Iran. He said that they could not bring about a true and perfect Islamic revolution without passing through those three stages.

It is feared that due to the impatience and restlessness with which Dr Israr Ahmad is trying to march forward and the manner in which he is handling the disputed matters in order to get more publicity, he would be unable to progress and would continue to stumble. Needlessly and without reason, he first expressed his ridiculous views on the Pakistani flag, the national anthem, vermicelli and embracing each other on the occasion of 'Id. Now he has completely gone off the track to accept Gandhi, an enemy of Islam and Muslims, as his Imam and is describing his campaign as an example for the Islamic movement. He appears to be so much influenced by the Indian propaganda that in the same lecture, he has also said that Pakistan was not founded by the Muslim League. If it were so, the Muslim League would not have become a "drawing-room" party after Pakistan's establishment. Historically speaking, his viewpoint is so wrong that there is no need to argue about it. One of his revered brothers, the Frontier Gandhi, also shares the same viewpoint and says that Pakistan was founded by the British.

Unfortunately, the great idol he has sought from the idol-house of the Hindus to safeguard the Kaaba for the Islamic revolution would not serve his purpose. In this regard he, supposedly a scholar of religion, will have to study Islamic tradition to find out as to what stages the Holy Prophet had to pass through to bring about the Islamic revolution. The Holy Prophet's nation and revolution are unique in their disposition. It is an atrocity to liken it to others. It contains all those stages through which one will have to pass whenever one tries to establish an Islamic system. Mohammad at Mecca, Mohammad at Medina and the Prophet's armed wars with the non-believers are all different stages of the Islamic revolution. His life at Mecca depicts a stage of patience and silence while faced with oppression and persecution by the non-believers. If Dr Sahib had called this as the first stage of the Islamic revolution, it would have been nearer to truth. Similarly, all other stages too can be found in the life of the Holy Prophet. However, if the matter had been presented like this, how could it have been construed as news? News is something new. The new thing was that our scholar of faith described Gandhi as being ideal for the Islamic revolution and he cut off the Muslim League from the movement for the establishment of Pakistan. Dr Sahib is making a tremendous progress and by the will of God, the number of his followers is also increasing. Columnist like me are also thankful to him for providing us with so much material that inspite of our efforts to ignore him, we are compelled to write a column on him every week, thus enhancing his popularity. Our senior reporters have advised us that if there is no news, "go to the zoo and you will definitely get news from there." Now the columnists also say that if no topic is found from anywhere, go to one of the serial lectures of Dr Sahib or read about it in the newspaper and one is provided with material. Merely for the greed of a topic, however, we cannot request Dr Sahib to go on saying whatever comes to mind, since some of the things he says are such that they really hurt the feelings of the Pakistani Muslims. Gandhi was the greatest political enemy of the Muslims of the sub-continent and the attitude of Gandhi's followers in Pakistan towards their own country is also clear to all of us. However, they are all political people. They do not thrust Gandhism upon us in the name of faith and religion, but whatever Dr Sahib has said in this regard is really hard for us to digest. Even those in Pakistan who are nominally Muslims cannot bear to see that an idol-worshipper and non-believer like Gandhi be regarded as their guide and that his footsteps be followed. If Dr Sahib deems it proper, he should not try to become a Punjabi Gandhi in order to bring about a revolution of God and His Prophet's religion. We shall be grateful to him for that. Baluchi Gandhi has already passed away and the Frontier Gandhi, by the will of God, is still alive. He is more than enough to hurt our feelings. Dr Sahib also claims that hs is not a political person. These followers of Gandhi are political people. For this reason, therefore, it is better to keep away from them. When Dr Israr does enter politics, and this stage does not seem very far, he, just like politicians, may wander in any valley he wants to!

IRRITATION EXPRESSED OVER PETTY HISTORICAL SQUABBLES

[Editorial: "How Long Will These Arguments Last"]

[Text] Pakistan was founded 35 years ago. This period of time is not lengthy enough for the life of a nation, but it is not that short either for a nation to remain entangled in the arguments about the role played by various political elements during the campaign for freedom and the parts played by various parties and individuals to achieve that freedom.

Pakistan is unfortunate in the sense that less effort has been made to achieve the objectives for which freedom was gained, while, through a discussion of the ideology of Pakistan, there have been more claims made as to who founded it. On one hand there are people who not only declared the demand for creating Pakistan on the basis of political reasons and requisites of wisdom wrong, but also, with the support of the teachings of religion, pronounced the demand to be against Islam. However, after the establishment of Pakistan, they became the sole heirs of the ideology of Pakistan. They started claiming that they alone had the right to decide as to what sort of system should be practiced, what sort of government and fundamental constitution should be established and who should run the government in Pakistan. On the other hand, there are those who, although they opposed the campaign for the foundation of Pakistan and stayed away from the struggle for its establishment, claim that the creation of Pakistan is the outcome of those struggles they and their companions launched to achieve the freedom of their country. Besides these people, there are those who feel that although they were connected with the Pakistan movement and also struggled hard to establish this state, after freedom their task is no more than to receive the reward for the hard work and sacrifices they made during the struggle for freedom, and they should continue to receive compliments by recalling their deeds.

Very few eyes, however, perceive the feelings, wishes and crushed sentiments of those people who aimed at, and with a clear concept in their minds, promoted this movement with their sweat and blood or the silent masses who endured numerous hardships and made sacrifices by playing the key role to establish this state, and after its foundation, gave up their lives to maintain and safeguard it. By the grace and benevolence of God, Pakistan has lived through enough number years for any nation to be established firmly and to solve its primary problems. Therefore, it does not befit us now to waste time in such discussions. It is essential for the common Pakistanis to know about the circumstances under which this country was founded, what factors were in its favor, what powers were fighting against it and what feats were overcome to establish this state. These things, however, should be presented to the public in an academic manner and as historic facts. Those who wish to present facts should write articles or publish books and read theses in academic gatherings. Those people who disagree with the facts presented by someone should in a similar scholarly manner correct those facts. They should acquaint the people with the correct incidents according to their knowledge. This is the method adopted by serene and responsible nations. It is not wise to make every problem a subject of statements to the press and to create an atmosphere of confrontation in the country by starting a moral and political argument.

Similarly, it is inappropriate to take the ideological discussions to the extent of the citizens' loyalty to the country. Everyone in Pakistan is a patriot. If our work is based on this positive thinking, the consequences would be positive too. Giving a constant impression that the country is full of traitors and its integrity is always in danger can never prove helpful in the healthy growth of a nation. Those who call each other anti-Pakistan, have, by the will of God, at one time or another been in power. No one knows more about the reality of these accusations than those people themselves. What harm was caused to the integrity of the country when they were in power should be left for their opponents to think about. We feel that there is goodness for all in giving up this negative way of thinking and getting rid of immature manner of action.

GOVERNMENT TO LAUNCH DRIVE AGAINST SUBVERSIVES

OW130333 Quezon City RPN Television Network in English 1100 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] The government meanwhile will launch a massive counteraction against subversives. This was one of the things taken up by President Marcos at his meeting today with governors and mayors belonging to the KBL [New Society Movement]. It was the first of a series of meetings the president has scheduled for this week after his Batasan address, during which government projects, including ways to meet the expected economic recovery, were discussed. Jose Carlos was at Malacanang with the KBS news [word indistinct]

[Begin Carlos recording] The president today announced that the government will soon undertake a massive counteraction against subversives and dissidents in critical regions. The president made the announcement in his meeting with governors and city mayors of the country at Malacanang this afternoon. The chief executive said local governments and the military must have better coordination to effectively implement this operation. Within the local government, the president urged an end to petty bickering among local executives belonging to the KBL majority party and present a united front in the program of development. A divided party, he stressed, becomes the object of subversive infiltration and results in the delay of various government projects. [end Carlos recording]

[Begin Marcos recording] The party is becoming so big that I am concerned that it will divide naturally, because of these struggles and factional fights. Let us not commit the same error that has been committed by big and dominant political parties. [end Marcos recording]

[Begin Carlos recording] During the 3-hour meeting, the governors and mayors presented a unanimous resolution to the president congratulating him, the first lady and the official party for a highly successful visit to the United States. The president also told local executives of a periodic meeting between cabinet ministers and governors and mayors, preferably every 3 months. Tomorrow the president will discuss development problems with representatives of the private sector. [end Carlos recording]

NATIONAL CONCILIATION URGED IN VIEW OF POLITICAL CALM

HK160828 Manila TIMES JOURNAL in English 15 Oct 82 p 4

["Viewpoint" column by Salvador P. Lopez" "Reply to Amnesty International"]

[Text] As President Marcos surveys the political landscape following his return from the United States, he must be considering measures to allay the apprehensions which had been created by the stepped-up military activity and the many arrests that had been made on the eve of his departure. There are two, possibly three ways of interpreting the significance of the situation of relative tranquillity that prevailed in most of the country during the period of his absence.

One, that the precautions he had taken were so effective that the planned disturbances were completely aborted. Two, that no such disturbances were planned at all, and therefore there was nothing to abort. Or, three, the opposition does not have the capability to mount the kind of domestic turbulance that would have competed with the visit for the big, black headlines of the newspapers.

The contrast between the grinding tension of the days prior to the departure and the relaxed atmosphere attending the arrival could not have been more startling. Has the contrast persuaded Mr Marcos that the precautions taken on the eve of the visit were wholly unnecessary? If so, should not care be taken to guard against the contrary error of indulging in excessive euphoria over the success of the visit?

These considerations must weigh on his mind as he reflects on the commitments, tacit or explicit, which he might be thought to have undertaken in the course of the visit. These would include a commitment to strengthen cooperation between the Philippines and the United States in defense of the principles of independence, peace, justice and liberty. Next would be a commitment to maintain the thrust towards an increasing measure of democracy and human rights in the Philippines. And third, a commitment to expand mutually beneficial cooperation in the areas of security, financial assistance, trade and investments.

If he is to gain the momentum of the generous sentiments the visit has produced in President Reagan and his close associates, then President Marcos' first duty would be to moderate rather than exacerbate the political situation in the Philippines. A policy of aggravated polarization within the national society would severely reduce the capability of his regime to do its share in promoting bilateral cooperation in the areas of most urgent need. Only a policy of national reconciliation and peace honestly and patiently pursued would lead to such a result.

The familiar pro forma invocations to "national unity" will no longer suffice. There must be a credible attempt at negotiating with the opposition the nature and scope of a proposal for the reorganization of the nation's political life. The primary objective of such a proposal should not be an assurance of the continuity of personal power but rather the survival of the national society in conditions of peace and enhanced well-being.

If President Marcos still believes that he can muddle through without any further consideration of the potential benefits of conciliation, then, of course, that is the decision he will make. But since, at this late stage of his political career, he must reach a decision in terms of the country's long future, then he has a clear obligation to make sure that such a decision is taken on those terms alone and not on any other.

The tone of his public statements since his return give warrant for believing that he may be seriously considering a policy of conciliation. Of so, then he must give thought to the best means of dramatizing the significance of this approach. High on the list of possible measures to that end would be a policy of limited amnesty.

Amnesty for political prisoners is normally resorted to by a regime after achieving a certain measure of stability so that it is not longer under serious threat or challenge. By this definition, Mr Marcos would be justified in considering a policy of limited amnesty starting with the labor leaders and others who were suddenly arrested only a few days before he left for America. The amnesty should eventually be extended to other political offenders who have been languishing in jails and detention houses around the country during the past many years. It's high time these forgotten victims of the impersonal rigor of martial law be granted amnesty and released to their suffering families so that they can pick up the pieces of their broken lives.

The amnesty, at first, would be particular and conditional; later, as it is gradually found to be working, it could be made general and absolute. The change would of necessity be correlated to the improvement of the nation's political climate. Forgiveness will beget forgiveness in the same way that hate breeds hate.

Amnesty would provide the most powerful single impetus to a policy of fulfilling President Marcos' assurance of the regime's commitment to human rights. Amnesty would be his most effective and convincing reply to Amnesty International.

VIRATA DISCUSSES ECONOMIC GROWTH RATE

HK190141 Manila BUSINESS DAY in English 18 Oct 82 p 3

[Text] The government expects a 4 percent growth of the economy in 1983, compared to the 4.1 percent target (originally 5.1 percent) set for this year, Prime Minister Cesar Virata told BUSINESS DAY.

Mr Virata noted there are certain favorable developments abroad, while others go against a full recovery of the world economy. The performance of the world economy, particularly of the leading trade partners of the Philippines, forms a main consideration in the government's economic strategies for next year, he indicated.

With uncertainties still haunting the United States, Japan, Europe, and the Middle East countries, the government wants domestic activities in the meantime to shore up the Philippine economy, he said.

Economists in both government and private sectors partly attribute the slack in domestic business to the slowdown of exports in past three years as recession struck the industrialized countries.

"Three years of recession is enough, and other countries may feel the same way," Mr Virata said.

Commodities: Mr Virate said the copper market has perplexed the government. With supply of copper concentrates going down, prices have remained depressed. Copper producers consequently have needed government help. "Nobody is certain when prices would start to move up," he said.

On textiles, the government is negotiating some agreements with the buyer-countries, hoping to improve on contracts that will expire this year.

In electronic products the government foresees continuous growth, Mr Virata said. But the need is to introduce more software, he added.

On the government intention to move in the domestic front to activate the economy, priority among the sectors is on agriculture, particularly corn production which will provide livestock feed and export earnings from Japan, Mr Virata said. The strategy in agriculture is import substitution--such as for wheat, corn, cotton, and dairy products--and for export production--for potatoes, papaya and rubber.

In industry, the government will continue to introduce reforms by linking the extractive industries such as mining with processing industries, such as smelting. The ultimate goal is to link them with the manufacturing sectors.

The government will also continue to invest heavily in energy development in the next five years, since domestic energy can make factories more competitive against those in other countries with no indigenous energy sources, Mr Virata said.

He said that this year the government expects the country to reduce its dependence on imported energy to 68 percent of total requirement, from 95 percent in 1974 when the energy development program started, and to about 45 percent by 1987.

With government investments in infrastructure, Mr Virata expects that construction can remain strong sector.

Funding: the main problem in achieving these goals is financing. The government has obtained the go-signal of the World Bank to get some $2.3 billion in both commercial loans and official development assistance next year.

Mr Virata said this target for foreign borrowings remains despite the 4 percent growth goal. (The 6.5 per cent yearly target under the 1983-1987 development plan.)

"The loans can be committed next year, but the actual drawdowns can be done in subsequent years," Mr Virata said.

For 1983, the government estimate of a 4 percent growth apparently considers a lower investment program of government as reflected in the budget allocation for 1983.

MARCOS CREATES PHILIPPINE-U.S. TRADE COUNCIL

HK081429 Manila TIMES JOURNAL in English 8 Oct 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by Veronica T. Velosoyap]

[Text] President Marcos created yesterday an 11-man council to expand trade and investments relations between the Philippines and the United States.

The Philippine-United States Business Development Council, to be headed by Ambassador Benjamin Romualdez, would integrate and coordinate efforts of the private sector and government agencies engaged in trade and investment promotion with those at the Philippine diplomatic posts in the United States.

The executive order places under the council all U.S. consular posts, service attaches, Philippine centers, Philippine promotions house, trading centers and other government corporations and their subsidiaries in the United States.

The council will help establish priorities and eliminate duplication of efforts.

The council's creation is a result of President Marcos' state visit to the United States, which generated among Americans a keen interest in doing business in the Philippines.

Signed September 30 by the president en route home from Honolulu, Executive Order No 831 was described by some local business sector as "long overdue."

"It is in the interest of the Philippines to further expand its participation in the U.S. market and to attract American capital in pioneering and preferred areas of investments," the president said in his order.

With an appropriation of peso 2 million, the council is empowered to:

Review Philippine Government policies affecting exports to and investments from the United States and make necessary recommendations to the president.

Monitor the conditions of access for Philippine products in the United States and making appropriate representations with the U.S. Government for the liberalization of these conditions.

Monitor Philippine quota and GSP [expansion unknown] utilization levels.

Publish product catalogues and buyer's guides as well as maintain an effective trade and investment opportunities referrals' system.

Assist the Philippine Embassy in Washington and the Ministry of Trade and Industry in organizing trade and investment missions and in holding in-store promotions.

Organize trade and investment seminars in the United States.

The council chairman will appoint two vice chairmen, one to coordinate Manila operations and the other to coordinate the council's field activities.

The executive director will be the special trade representative of the Ministry of Trade and Industry now assigned to the Philippine Embassy in Washington. This special representative will implement the council's work program.

The council is thus composed of the Philippine ambassador to the United States; a representative each from the ministries of foreign affairs, trade and industry, finance; a representative each from the National Economic Development Authority, the Central Bank, National Food Authority, Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry; the presidential executive assistant or his representative; and two from the private sector to be appointed on a two-year term.

The council will also formulate its policies and prepare the annual work program for the president's approval.

The council's chairman has the power to use the services of technical and administrative personnel of other government agencies.

In addition to the peso 2 million appropriation, the president has set aside another peso 2 million for the council's special trade and investment promotions. It is also authorized to tap other fund sources including donations and grants from local and foreign institutions.

The council will use the same formula that worked in the recent Marcos state visit with Ambassador Romualdez pooling the resources of the counsuls general, namely, ambassadors Rodolfo Sanchez, Chicago; Rodolfo Severino, Texas; Ernesto Pineda, New York; Luis Moreno-Salcedo, UN Mission to New York; Armando Fernandez, Los Angeles; Romeo Arguelles, San Francisco; Trinidad Alconcel, Honolulu, and Ernesto Querubin, Seattle.

CATHOLIC PRIEST ARRESTED IN CATBALOGAN

[Text] Military agents have arrested a priest in Catbalogan, Samar for alleged subversive activities. The Catholic priest was identified as Edgardo Kangleon, director of the social action center of the Pope Paul VI pastoral center in Catbalogan.

Camp (Degalno) was informed by Eastern Command Chief General Salvador Mison that the Catbalogan center was suspected to be a front organization of the Communist Party of the Philippines in league with activist elements in the church.

Earlier, a raid at the center resulted in the arrest of three persons, including a nun and the seizure of Communist Party documents and printing equipment. The nun was identified as Sister Helena Gutierrez, reportedly a member of the (Dixison) pastoral secretariat.

Last week, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile visited Samar and was briefed on the dissident situation. Enrile was told that Father Kangleon was one of several priests, nuns and layworkers linked to the subversives. Two young detainees also told the defense chief of their role and that of the communists with regard to the social action center in Catbalogan.

In Northern Luzon, four rebel priests were given the ultimatum today: Surrender or face the consequences. The four are Kondrado Balweg of (Abra), Nilo Ortega and his brother Bruno and the Father Valerio. All of them are priests who have joined the dissidents and have been leading subversive bands.

The ultimatum was issued following the killing of Zacarias Agatep in (Salsedo), Ilocos Sur, a 45-year-old priest who went underground 2 years ago and led subversive clashes with government forces.

REPORT ON MARCOS REMARKS TO OFFICIALS

HK131416 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 13 Oct 82 pp 1, 11

[Text] President Marcos, warning that dominant political parties often fall because of intra-party struggles, called yesterday for closer cooperation between the cabinet and provincial governors and mayors to implement the development program.

The presidential warning came during a three-hour dialoque with provincial governors and city mayors.

In another meeting at Malacanang, the First Lady and Human Settlements Minister Imelda R. Marcos urged that successful government projects be used to motivate the people to greater efforts.

She spoke at a joint meeting of the cabinet and the executive committee presided by Prime Minister Cesar Virata.

In his meeting with local officials, President Marcos said that petty bickering within the Kilusang Bagang Lipunan had delayed many programs of the government.

He reminded his partymates that under the present system of government, responsibility before the people is the party's responsibility. Whatever happens to a small part of the country is a party responsibility, he added.

The local executives had trooped to the palace to present him with a resolution congratulating him and the First Lady for a highly successful visit to the United States.

In their resolution, the local executives cited the president for presenting the correct state of affairs in the country and for correcting the long-standing international image of the Philippines.

In calling for greater cooperation among the party leaders, the president noted that history was replete with examples of dominant political parties falling under their own weight because of internal struggles and not because of a strong opposition.

Taking the floor during the meeting, the First Lady noted that some cabinet members do not know how to delegate authority to their subordinates. When cabinet members are busy attending the Batasan or other meetings she said, there is no one to attend to the problems of local executives.

MINDANAO PAPER URGES PUBLISHERS TO UNITE

HK200152 Davao City PEOPLE'S FORUM in English 7-9 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "The Need for Publishers To Unite"]

[Text] Newspaper publishers from Mindanao, more than at any other time, face an urgent need today to unite for a common cause. At a time when those charged with putting out community newspapers are being held at the mercy of one publication "bigwigs" in Manila whose only claim to power is their nearness to the powers from whom they get such power, the organization of a potent and responsible group of publishers becomes a must.

From initial press reports during the week comes a report that the Mindanao publishers have organized themselves into one solid group that would henceforth do everything to enhance the print media business in Mindanao.

The noble objective of the group, however, can be disastrously thwarted by some of its own members who may not be sincere in strengthening the association. It is an admitted fact that even among some publishers, there are those whose mere membership in the association can open the whole group to criticism and question. It is, therefore, imperative for the more responsible ones among the publishers to do either of two things: guide the less irresponsible ones or wipe them out from the organization. If the Mindanao publishers association were to be a potent force of mediamen, then it should do away with those who would be more of a collective liability than assert to the group. This early, its members should be able to convince themselves that they are part of a potentially strong and dignified group. Anyone who cannot convince himself cannot be expected to convince others. The publishers in Mindanao have all the aces up their sleeves. Unless they know how to play their aces, they can all end up being jokers in the organization and in the media community of the region.

Publishers have a definite role to play in raising the standards of the media. They can strengthen their role only through an equally strong organization.

BRIEFS

RENEGADE PRIESTS--The military has launched all-out operations to capture dead or alive four renegade priests who abandoned their parishes in the Ilocos Region and joined the Communist New People's Army. Regional PC [Philippine Constabulary] Commander Brig. Gen. Victorino Azada identified the wanted priests as Conrado Balweg, Nino Ortega, Bruno Ortega and a certain Father (Balerio). The hunt was intensified after the death of another rebel priest, Zacarias Agatep, in an encounter last Monday with PC troops in Salsedo, Ilocos Sur. Balweg, like Agatep, has a 130,000 peso prize on his head. Meanwhile, military authorities have arrested a priest in Catbalogan, Western Samar, on charges of involvement in subversive activities. The Defense Ministry identified the priest as (Edgardo Palmuleon), director of the social action center of the Pope Paul VI Pastoral Center of Catbalogan. Brig. Gen. Salvador Mison, eastern command chief, said the center was suspected as a front organization of the Communist Party of the Philippines in the church sector. NPA-MEMBER PRIEST KILLED--Renegade Priest Zacarias Agatep is dead. He was killed with an aide in an encounter reported today by military authorities in Camp Aguinaldo. Based on a report from Brig Gen Victorino Asada, first PC-INP [Philippine Constabulary-Integrated National Police] Recom one commander in Camp (Tangoa Benget), Agatep, 45 years old, former priest of (Cahuayan), (Barayorio) and San Jose in Ilocos Sur, joined the New People's Army [NPA] 2 years ago. Agatep and his companion, identified as (Nono y Espirit), alias (Cardoming), said to be chief procurement officer of the NPA, were killed in a clash with government troopers in Barangay (Baya Bayading), (Salcedo), Ilocos Sur. Leader of the government team was Lt (Daniel Costal) of the Ilocos Sur PC command. The PC team also captured two other dissidents as well as two boys used as couriers. The government team recovered one AK-47 rifle, one armalite, and one carbine from the dissidents at the scene of the clash. Agatep carried a price tag of 130,000 pesos, the same as that for another renegade priest from Abra, Conrado Balweg, who has also joined the dissidents. Three other renegade priests in northern Luzon who also went underground were (Nilo Ortega), (Bruno Ortega) and a certain (Valerio). It was Agatep who reportedly planned a series of attacks in (Salsedo) and other Ilocos Sur towns during the president's birthday last month, the anniversary of martial law, and during the president's state visit to the U.S. [Text] [OW121357 Quezon City RPN Television Network in English 1100 GMT 12 Oct 82]

MISUARI CRITICIZED--A former ranking member of the Moro National Liberation Front yesterday accused the remnants of the MNLF of having misled Islamic conference nations into believing that the Philippine Government has violated the Tripoli agreement. (Abin Abdullah), former Politburo member of the Cotabato Revolutionary Committee of the MNLF, said that the remnants of the rebel group led by Nur Misuari have been giving false information to the Islamic conference nations. (Abdullah) said that the act of deception on the part of the MNLF has promoted the Islamic nations to issue a resolution calling for a genuine implementation of the Tripoli accord. (Abdullah) is an appointed member of the regional legislative council of the autonomous government in Central Mindanao. The former rebel leader also criticized Misuari for his refusal to participate in the effort to end the Mindanao conflict. PARAMILITARY GROUP--The government yesterday authorized 43 logging firms in Cagayan Valley to form paramilitary strike forces to combat dissidents reportedly mulching them. The regional PC [Philippine Constabulary] Command and Natural Resources Minister Teodoro Pena gave the authority in time for yesterday's resumption of logging operations there. President Marcos ordered the lifting of the two-month-old logging ban to perk up economic activities in the region. "We have the authority to acquire high-powered weapon for the civilian home defense forces you will form for your logging firm," Pena and Col Thomas Manlongat of the PC Regional Command told representatives of the 43 logging firms. The PC said it would furnish the logging firms the names of former military trainees in the region. These trainees may be hired to form the nucleus of the paramilitary units. Logging firms have been complaining that dissidents have been extorting money from them and harassing their camps. The firms also complain that the dissidents have been hampering their cutting and hauling operations, resulting in big losses. The Bureau of Forest Development has also mobilized its forest guards for the anti-dissident campaign. [Text] [HK131446 Manila TIMES JOURNAL in English 13 Oct 82 p 2]

LIBYAN AID--Libya will extend more packages of benefit to the Philippines in the form of technology transfers, more manpower to be recruited, and the possible importation of rice and sugar. Libyan ambassador to the Philippines Mustafa Dreiza disclosed this as he was conferred an honorary doctorate degree in humanities by the Mindanao State University in Bonggaw, Tawi Tawi. Dreiza was cited for his efforts in ending the Mindanao conflict. The Libyan envoy also stated that his country will always be a friend of the Philippines. [Begin Dreiza recording] We will continue to work together for the achievement of a commonly-shared world, despite the titanic hardships created by the imperialists. We want to build, not to destroy. We seek [words indistinct]. We want freedom, not slavery. Libya stands for peace, not war. But above all, human dignity is of supreme importance to us. We are fighting for a dignified life for all Christians and Muslims alike. In the past we have assisted the efforts of reaching a negotiated settlement of the Mindanao issue. In the future, we are prepared for any support which we can extend for the peaceful solution to this problem. [end recording] [Text] [HK150438 Manila Domestic Service in English 0400 GMT 15 Oct 82]

LOG SMUGGLING--PC [Philippine Constabulary] chief Lt Gen Fidel Ramos yesterday directed the PC Investigation Service [CIS] and all PC regional commands to take bold measures to contain log smuggling. His move was spurred by reports that the government has been losing millions of dollars in revenue annually through illegal log exports, particularly to Japan. Records show that in 1981 alone, the volume of logs smuggled to Japan reached 1 million, or about 22 percent more than the legal shipment during the same period. Ramos ordered the CIS and the regional PC commanders to coordinate closely with the other government agencies involved in the anti-log-smuggling campaign. RURAL DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL--President Marcos today created a national council designed to spearhead the development of the country's rural areas. The body, to be called the National Council on Integrated Area Development, was established through executive order No 935. The newly-created council will be headed by Prime Minister Cesar Virata. It will prepare new policies designed to hasten the development of the barrios throughout the Philippines. Implementation of the policies will be carried out by the line ministries. [Text] [HK160831 Manila Domestic Service in English 0800 GMT 16 Oct 82]

NORTH LUZON RELIEF--The government is recommending two measures for immediate presidential approval designed to bring relief and stability to northern Luzon provinces. The first cabinet recommendation is for the president to declare several provinces hit by typhoon Weling as calamity areas. They include Cagayan, Isabela, Kalinga - Apayao and Ilocos Sur. One of the most destructive typhoons to hit Luzon, Weling left a wide path of destruction, damaging property and crops amounting to more than 300 million pesos and killing more than 50 persons. Prime Minister Cesar Virata said the cabinet's recommendation will be submitted to the president immediately after field reports from government relief agencies are verified. Reporting on the situation, social welfare Minister Sylvia Montes said Kalinga-Apayao is asking for speedy relief in food. The second recommendation being prepared by the cabinet is the rehabilitation of the North-South Railway Line as part of the 5-year development plan for Philippine National Railways. HAN RISE LINKED TO PREM, DISSENT IN RTA DISCUSSED

[Article: "Keep an Eye On Lieutenant General Han Linanon"]

[Text] Concerning the promotion of high-ranking officers this September, although Lieutenant General Han Linanon is not in the race for the position of RTA CINC, the highest position in the army, it is expected that he will move to a higher position. The achievements scored in the Fourth Army Area this past year have greatly enhanced his reputation. It is believed that his prestige and reputation in the army will increase even more and that this will enable him to play a very important role in the army and enable him to be a prime mover, a lever, a buffer or even the person who "sets" the course of the army and even the course of politics.

On this path in the army, it is worth noting how Lieutenant General Han Linanon will reach this point and by what means.

The 1982 Military Transfers, Who Will Be the RTA CINC?

As of today, people are still unsure about whether it will be General Athit Kamlangek, the assistant commander in chief of the army, or General Pamot Thawonghan, the army chief of staff, who will finanly win the position of RTA CINC. This is the case even though the various reports that have appeared tend to favor General Athit. And those who support General Athit are saying that it will be General Athit for sure. At the same time, the supporters of General Pamot affirm that the army list sent to the supreme commander shows General Pamot as the new RTA CINC and that an agreement has been reached with General Athit.

However, a high-ranking officer in the army spoke about the chances of General Pamot. He said that General Prem Tinsulanon, the prime minister and minister of defense, clearly wants to be prime minister for another term and so he will certainly not allow anyone in the army to have great power since that would be a double-edged sword that might cut General Prem.

"In many periods, one faction has been favored in order to reduce the power of another faction. For example, in the Kriangsak period, General Soem was forced to become the supreme commander and General Prem was made RTA CINC instead," said this officer. In the military transfers of 1978, General Soem Na Nakhon, the then RTA CINC, was preparing to take the position of supreme commander too. But against all expectations, he was kept from doing this when General Prem was made RTA CINC.

This same officer also pointed out that during the period when General Prem was in full control, during the transfers of 1981, General Prayut Charumni, an unassuming soldier, was promoted from the position of army chief of staff to the position of RTA CINC to eliminate the uneasiness about pressure from the army. At the same time, General Athit, a tough officer who was ready to "do big things," was restrained and not given full control of the forces. Thus, the situation in the army was such that no one could take resolute action like Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat was able to do.

"The same is true this year. It seems likely that General Prem will choose the army chief of staff, who is an unambitious man, rather than a very ambitious person. If this is true, the situation in the army will be the same as that last year. That it, pressure from the army will not be able really to dictate political trends. To head the government another term, General Prem must take this course," said the same officer in conclusion.

Similiarly, a group of high-ranking officers has pointed out that if General Athit becomes RTA CINC this year, the conflicts in the army may reach the breaking point again. This is because General Athit would be RTA CINC for 3 years. Those subordinate officers who are waiting in the wings for their turn would definitely be unhappy. "This is another problem that the high-ranking people must give attention to," said this group.

Will "Athit" Rise? The Balance Is Han

But at the same time, a high-ranking military news source in the First Army Area pointed out that General Athit is suited to this position and is the one most likely to be promoted to the position of RTA CINC this year. "The timing is right for General Athit to step into the position of RTA CINC. During the past period when the country has experienced various problems, General Athit has constantly solved problems in order to prove himself and build up credit for himself," said the news source.

He also said that "it was agreed on long ago that General Athit would support General Prem for the position of prime minister, and General Prem would support General Athit for the position of RTA CINC. Also, General Athit is well aware of the fact that, at present, he does not have the credit necessary to become prime minister. Thus, the problem of General Prem having to fear him should not arise, particularly in the short term. The long term is another matter. General Prem should find a way out of this by allowing General Athit to become RTA CINC but pushing someone else forward to serve as a counterbalance. This is probably the best way to handle the matter. No one will get their feelings hurt and no problems will arise," said the news source firmly.

Many officers believe that this will be the case. In particular, people are watching the promotions at the deputy level. Several people have pointed toward "Lieutenant General Linanon," concerning whom there are reports that he will become the army chief of staff or assistant commander in chief of the army. Also, General Prem and Lieutenant General Han have been very close for a long time. This can be seen from Office of the Prime Minister Order 66/1980, a policy that is now being implemented at the national level. This order originated with Lieutenant General Han and his staff. Thus, it is believed that Lieutenant General Han will be positioned to serve as a counterbalance so that a situation in which power gets out of control does not arise in the army. And at present, no other officer is better qualified to serve as this "counterbalance" than Lieutenant General Han.

Han-Prem, a Reform United Front

When general Prem was a major general and was serving as the deputy commanding general of the Second Army Area, Lieutenant General Han was a staff officer with the Second Army Area. It was Han who formulated a new formula for fighitng the communists in the area. This was called "politics leads the military." Later on, Major General Prem was promoted to lieutenant general and made commanding general of the Second Army Area. Lieutenant General Han was promoted to colonel and made deputy chief of staff of the Second Army Area. The "politics leads the military" path of struggle was used more widespreadly.

Later on, when Lieutenant General Prem became assistant commander in chief of the army and then RTA CINC in 1978, Colonel Han was promoted to major general and appointed chief of staff of the Second Army Area. The following year, he was made the director of the Directorate of Operations. At the same time, the name of the Democratic Soldiers group, of which Major General Han was the mainstay, began to become well known. In April 1980, Policy 66/1980 was put forward with the approval of General Prem and it became a national policy, finally developing into Order 65/1982, which was issued recently.

Besides the closeness between General Prem and Lieutenant Genral Han, the clear achievements, including the destruction of CPT camps in the area using the well-known "Tai Rom Yen" policy, scored by Lieutenant General Han, the person who has pushed forward the idea of a national army, will greatly enhance his personal prestige. It is certain that, in the transfers this year, if Lieutenatn General Han is promoted to full general and put in a high-level command position, there will not be any grumbling from any faction in the army.

And Concerning the timing of his moves these days, Lieutenant General Han is quickly paving the way and widely popularizing the "Democratic Soldiers" ideals in the form of Policy 66/1980 and Order 65/1982 using various methods. Besides the south, where ideals have spread and [the ideals of] the Democratic Soldiers have taken root, in other army areas, these [ideals] are quickly being disseminated throughout the country. And when that happens, the officer who is deeply imbued with these ideals and who has such achievements will easily be able to step into the highest position in the army, particularly since he has the support of General Prem.

Han-Athit, Two Poles In the Army

If Lieutenant General Han is considered to be the reformist pole in the army, then General Athit is the conservative pole in the army.

Officers who have studied the thinking of the Democratic Soldiers group closely have said that the profound thinking of this group of soldiers is democratic thinking in the style of Korea and Indonesia, where soldiers have played a direct role in politics. This was revealed partly in Policy 66/1980 and in the announcemnt of policies to eliminate oppression of the people by influential groups. The threats against the commercial banks were the latest signal by Lieutenant General Han under the sword of [Order] 65/1982.

Concerning what has taken place, the policy was pushed forward by Lieutenant General Han and the Democratic Soldiers group almost entirely. General Athit and the right-wing element in the army have not played any part in this. Although at a deep level there are serious conflicts with the thinking of the conservative faction in the army, when this was pushed forward and became the national policy with the wholehearted approval of General Prem, the prime minister, the opposition to this policy implicitely died down.

Lieutenant General Han Linanon, with only 2 more years before he retires from government service, is pushing forward with great energy. General Athit, with 3 years left before he retires, has almost reached the position of RTA CINC. Concerning these two ideological poles in the army, if there is no change in course, these two will certainly pose an obstacle to each other.

Keep an Eye On Han, Tomorrow's Morning Star

Concerning this year's military promotions, regardless of whether it is General Athit or General Pamot who becomes the new RTA CINC, the person who will be used as a counterbalance and buffer to prevent the formation of a power center in the army is General Han Linanon.

With his personality and with the support of the national policy and officers who have faith in the "national army," when this is added to the fact that he definitely knows where he is headed, it is certain that Lieutenant General Han has not taken the final step in gaining future leadership in the army in order to make the army a national army in accord with his thinking and the thinking of the Democratic Soldiers.

SECURITY FOR PREM VIEWED IN WAKE OF ATTACKS

Bangkok SU ANAKHOT in Thai 5-11 Sep 82 pp 12, 13

[Article: "Protecting Prem: Stifling Security"]

[Text] "The tiger went back to his home." This short phrase of a police superintendent in Korat has turned the 63rd birthday celebration of Geneal Prem, the prime minister and "beloved of the people of Korat," into a major affair and made the name of Colonel Chet Rotnson, the chief of staff of the Third Army Circle, well known throughout the country since he was the spokesman who talked with a reporter from a daily newspaper who had travelled from the center to report on the celebration. This does not include the criticisms by people in general who feel that the country's leader is being overly protected.

Actually, General Prem has not recovered from the two successive terrorist attacks on him at Lopburi and at his house at Si Sao Thewet. Thus, the protection given him this time was unusually heavy since the military authorities responsible in this area were afraid that some similar terrorist act would be carried out. Lieutenant General Phak Minakanit, the commanding general of the Second Army Area, who is directly responsible for this area, told reporters that the reason that security was so strong, even though the ceremony took place on a military base, was that "this is our duty. Because things were not strict the last time, someone was able to throw a grenade. In this military camp, if something happened here, I don't know where I could hide my face."

Thus, in mobilizing forces to maintain security at Korat, all the units concerned were used in order to provide protection for General Prem. These forces included forces from the provincial police precinct at Nakhon Ratchasima and a special operations unit that maintained security around the prime minister's house. A news source told SU ANAKHOT that "hundreds were brought in and this does not include the military police from the Third Army Circle, which sent 30 armed soldiers. This unit provided close-range security. There were 23 soldiers from the infantry regiment. And there were reconnaissance soldiers from the remote [patrol] company of the 6th Division. These forces all joined together to form a "guard army" that looked as if it were going to go fight a war rather than just provide protection for General Prem. This does not include the officials from the National Security Center who worked as plainclothesmen to watch for any unusual behavior in the area. Concerning this, besides strictly forbidding reporters from gathering news, they also resolutely prevented the reporters from taking part in the celebration.

A matter about which there are still questions is whether it was General Prem who ordered this army-style protection or whether it was the soldiers in this area who did this on their own initiative out of fear of some terrorist action. This is because a military news source in the Third Army Circle told a SU ANAKHOT reporter that it was decided to provide such tight protection because the military could not trust anyone. There were reliable reports that about 2 months prior to General Prem's birthday celebration, strangers tried to take photographs in front of General Prem's house in Korat, which is opposite Combat Support Headquarters 2, the unit that is responsible for the safety of General Prem. Thus, the matter of providing protection was made a priority matter, and if things were inconvenient, such problems would be solved later.

"Actually, he did not know beforehand what kind of welcome he would receive. According to the notice, the prime minister was on an inspection tour at Korat. But when he arrived at Korat, his close associates prepared a large celebration and he had to go along with this." There has been constant criticism to the effect that while orders have been issued forbidding others from holding such parties, he held such a party for himself and so what meaning can this have. A person close to Genearl Prem told SU ANAKHOT that "I was blamed by the prime minister too when I went to pay my respects on the morning of 26 August. He told me that just sending a card would be enough." And he added that "he has forbidden government officials from holding such parties. But he could not keep this party from being arranged. He was uncomfortable about this and wanted it held inside without any fanfare. And so he did not want reporters and cameramen to attend the party."

Usually, relations between General Prem and the press are good, even though there are complaints after every interview or news release to the effect that he did not say very much. Concerning this, those close to him have said that this is just the way he is.

However, reports obtained later by SU ANAKHOT state that this unit to provide tight protection was formed at the request of General Prem and that he sent an order to this effect to General Phak. Lieutenant General Chanthonkup Sirisut, the secretary-general of the Prime Minister, has denied this and said that General Prem never contacted anyone about providing such protection. The only thing was that the units in the area were informed as to where the prime minister would be going and when he would be there. "Maintaining security is the duty of the army area. It is up to those who are responsible to decide what action should be taken. And it is quite common for soldiers to be criticized for the action they take. There is no neutral ground," said a high-ranking officer who is responsible for the security of General Prem. And he added that "concerning this protection, the prime minister had to let them take action on their own accord. Normally, he does not ask questions because he feels that this is the duty of these people. It is a subconscious matter of duty...."

In forming units to protect General Prem, normally, this is up to the National Security Center, or NSC, which is subordinate to Supreme COmmand Headquarters. Normally, the NSC sends officials to protect and follow the prime minister like a shadow. These NSC officials take turns guarding him. This is with the exception of the two police officers who are his personal bodyguards and who are very close to General Prem. Both of these men are police captains. They represent the final line of protection. The NSC officials are armed with pistols only. The security unit at his Si Sao Thewet residence is armed with rifles.

Concerning the work of the NSC security unit, besides providing normal protection, another of its important tasks is to carry on counter-intelligence activities. It is a communications intelligence center. It is also responsible for investigating underground activities and opposing and countering enemy espionage, sabotage and acts of destruction in general.

"In maintaining security, there are specific techniques. We have a school to teach these special techniques. We teach everything from driving to giving up one's life to protect others. It goes without saying that whoever is sent much carry out his duties," said a news source at NSC to SU ANAKHOT. He added that, concerning the affair at Korat, the NSC took part in maintaining security. But it carried out things secretely and coordinated things with the police and military units responsible in the area.

As for the matter in Korat, besides the fact that the situation was uncertain, the local officials overreacted. It can be seen that security forces were arranged at three distances. The outer security force was positioned 2 kilometers away. This unit was on the lookout to see if anyting unlawful took place in that area. Concerning this, a news source said that this was partly because of the assassination attempt at Lopburi, which made it necessary to position forces at a distance. "It is difficult to maintain security along the highway. At Lopburi, for example, Prem would have been killed if the round had not missed," added the news source.

As for those forces positioned more closely, things were checked closely. As for the final line of protection, there was a special guard unit. If anything happened, the members of this unit were to place themselves in the line of fire to shield the prime minister and to die if necessary. A military news source who was responsible for protecting General Prem said that "I am responsible for maintaining security here. I took this position only last year and have been responsible for protecting General Prem since the beginning. If anything happens in Korat, I am responsible," said the news source to SU ANAKHOT. He also suggested that the 1974 Office of the Prime Minister Regulation on Maintaining Security be looked at. This regulation states that the security of personnel, offices and documents must be maintained. He said that leaders have been threatened and that there have been disturbances recently because the units responsible have neglected their duties to such an extent that there have been incidents. "I think that it is time that we become serious about maintaining security," said the news source in conclusion.

Even though the birthday celebration at Korat has passed now, there will probably continue to be criticism of General Prem's "protective army." But in a period in which anyting may happen, every sector must be on the alert. Because if there is still the idea that "it is General Prem who is the problem," everything possible must be done to provide protection.

"I think that after October, after which things will settle down, such things will not happen any more," said the news source to SU ANAKHOT without saying why.

CARTOON SHOWS PREM DISCOMFORT OVER CINC CHOICE

Bangkok KHAO CHATURAT in Thai 6 Sep 82 p 6

[Cartoon]

[Text] Caption 1: What are you sad about again. You probably need my help again, don't you?

Caption 2: I can't decide whom to appoint to the position of RTA CINC. Both are good men. Its difficult to decide.

We have to look back in history. It's better to use a Thai magazine.

Caption 3: Lets go look at the time of Field Marshal Phibun.

We will observe things from time time of Field Marshal Phibun, Field Marshal Thanom and General Kriansak.

Caption 4: This is from the time of Field Marshal Phibun when General Sarit was RTA CINC.

I never thought about measuring their footsteps.

Caption 5: Oh. This is 14 October during the time of Field Marshal Thanom. General Krit was RTA CINC then.

Caption 6: "I resign."

And this is when General Kriangsak resigned at a meeting of parliament. Who was RTA CINC then? Oh. General Prem!

Caption 7: Let's go gack. I don't want to see any more. Go home.

And whom have you decided to appoint to the position of RTA CINC?

Caption 8: I don't want to think about this. I can't think at all. I...am afraid. I am afraid.

ATHIT AIDE PROFILED, DESCRIBES ADVISORY ROLE

Bangkok KHAO CHATURAT in Thai 6 Sep 82 pp 26-31

[Interview with Dr Siwawut Thephatsadin Na Ayuthaya: "Behind 'Athit'"; date and place not specified]

[Text] When this tall and smart-looking man of the tall, dark and handsome type entered the room dressed in a light-blue safari suit holding a "walki palki" in his left hand, Chaturat did not think that he would be a scholar with the word "doctor" in front of his name. I thought that he was a soldier or a police official. But after talking together for awhile, I was no longer surprised. This was Dr Siwawut Thephatsadin Na Ayuthaya. This is a scholar who has made a great effort to understand and accept the role of the military and national army. "Everyone knows that I work for General Athit." This young professor is not concerned about revealing his position. "He is a sincere, honest and capable person with definite ideals, ideals that call for maintaining the stability, security and prosperity of the country." The goal of Dr Siwawut is to start working. He is ready to work with anyone whom he feels meets his specifications. As for General Athit Kamlangek, this young professor feels that "what is most important is that he is a person who reveres the monarchy and royal family above all else. This is one of my ideals too." Chaturat interviewed this man because of the many questions by people in many circles who want to know "who is behind Athit," "who is Athit's advisor," "who is Athit's 'Kun Su,' and even "who is playing the part of Luang Wichit Wathakan for General Athit?" "Do a good job but do not become so conspicuous as to pose a danger. No one wants to see us stand out too much. This was the advice of Luang Wichit Wathakan. But as for me, I want to do things even if I risk being criticized. What is important is that I do not have any blemishes. I just have definite ideals. I can't be attacked," said this young professor to Chaturat. But he would not admit that he resembled Luang Wichit Wathakan. "Whatever he was, I was born too late," he teased Chaturat. Dr Siwawut Thephatsadin Na Ayuthaya received his Ph.D. in Finance and Management in 1974 from the Claremont Graduate

School and University Center in California in the United States. His non-political position is associate professor of commerce and accountancy at Chulalongkorn University. As for his present political positions, he is under the ISOC, first region, and is an advisor to the deputy prime minister for economic affairs (Major General Praman Adireksan) assigned to the Office of the Secretary-General of the Prime Minister. He is close to General Athit and is responsible for economic matters. Foreigners who want to meet General Athit must "get by" him first. David Morrel once said of him that "he is a very interesting scholar."

Chaturat: Concerning your position as "advisor to the Capital Guards," what is the background of this position?

Siwawut: The Capital Guards, which is commanded by General Athit Kamlangek, feels that in solving the country's problems, particularly the problems with which the Capital Guards are concerned, there are several forms. By the time the problems reach the Capital Guards, they have been in existence for a long time. To solve these problems, it is necessary to go back to the causes. Getting at the causes requires clear-sighted analysis. To solve these problems correctly, there must be sufficient data showing the causes of the problems. For this reason, a group of advisors was formed to study the problems that have reached the Capital Guards. At the same time, the advisors have also studied the many problems facing the country. Although some problems have not developed or have not yet arisen, since there are tendencies and since some data indicate that certain problems may arise, in some cases it is necessary to study matters ahead of time in order to solve the problems in time.

[Question] Does this mean that the state's organizations, or sectors, have not been able to handle the situation?

[Answer] You must first understand what the role of the Capital Guards is. The main role of the Capital Guards is, as I said, to maintain stability and security and preserve order in Bangkok and the surrounding provinces. The government units do their own work. But sometimes, it is necessary to have the various sectors join together to solve the problems together. At the same time, there must be measures that can be used to preserve order, that is, using the police and military in maintaining order. This does not mean that the various sectors cannot solve the problems by themselves. But in some cases, it is necessary to use the various existing resources simultaneously, with the person responsible for maintaining security being the one who can assemble these resources for use.

It is known that, in Thailand, sometimes, assembling a large group of people to march on the Government House achieves greater results than directly contacting the government sector responsible. In the past, this is how things were. This does not mean that the sectors responsible did not do a good job. As I said, this is at the end point. There are problems with rice, with raising horses, with the race tracks and horse races, with the sugarcane and with 10-wheeled trucks. Concerning these problems, the sectors concerned cannot hold back all these people. These people hurry to see the prime minister. They hurry to the Government House and to the various departments at the ministries. We have to stop these things. This is the duty of the Capital Guards. This does not mean that the Capital Guards normally interferes in the affairs of th various sectors.

[Question] In the beginning when scholars were first asked to come [work here], there was much criticism, especially against General Athit. Sometimes there was criticism to the effect that he was interfering in things. In the wake of these criticisms, what took place?

[Answer] Oh. (Pauses a moment.) As for interfering, I definitely do not think that this was the case. The Capital Guards have never interfered with, given commands to or meddled in the affairs of the sectors, departemtns or ministries. This is a matter for the heads of the ministries who are responsible. The commander of the Capital Guards does not have the right to give orders to heads of the ministries or their representatives. But sometimes, things occur in the area of responsibility of the Capital Guards.

[Question] Is this the way things are? That is, at present, is it the case that, concerning the problems of the people or the many problems facing the country, the existing political and administrative system, or structure, cannot solve the problems?

[Answer] The situation is such....Many of the problems that have arisen pose a rather great danger to security.

[Question] I would now like to ask, or get your views on the fact that, at present, several of the younger generals feel that while the military has made progress, the political and administrative structure, including the politicians and bureaucrats, is more backward than the military and, therefore, it is necessary to improve this system, or structure. But since things cannot be improved immediately, it is necessary to create a special sector to solve the problems as General Han has done in the national army in the south or in accord with orders 66 and 65. Concerning this, can it be said that this is one way of solving the problems?

[Answer] I do not want to analyze things in that way. I feel that our government units, including the departments, ministries and bureaus, are each responsible for their own work and that they have worked continuously. But sometimes the country's problems must be viewed broadly. A single problem may involve many sectors. In particular, in the present situation, there are people who have bad intentions toward the country and they are trying to make use of this situation for their own benefit. The government sectors do not have the resources or power to deal with such things.

[Question] Are you saying that the various sectors are doing a good job and that they have achieved results in accord with their duties but that, concerning the strucrture of the system in the present situation, it is sometimes necessary to take resolute and decisive action immediately?

[Anwer] All the resources must be used together. We must understand that the military has other roles than just preparing for war. Even in the present constitution it is clearly written that the military must play a part in development too. Concerning development, I feel that this includes solving the problems at the source. Control and suppression is solving the problems at the end. Thus, if we can "put out the fire" at the beginning, play a part in developing things and solve the problems before they arise, things will be much easier. The forces of the national army are very large. We have military forces, paramilitary forces and mass forces that can be joined together to serve as the nation's strength in solving the problems satisfactorily. And the boundaries of the work, or forces, that I have mentioned are very broad, extending throughout the country.

[Question] Some scholars and politicians feel that the military's only duty is to defend the country. Solving the other problems is the duty of the government.

[Answer] I think that in the present situation, for our country, we should stop thinking about who should have just what [single] role. In a developing country such as Thailand, which is facing both internal and external dangers, it is essential to pool the resources and various forces. As for saying that the military should have this role and that civilians should have that role, I think that such thinking is very outdated.

[Answer] Yes. Definitely. Because the situation in the country today is very different from what it was in a previous period. Twenty years ago, we did not have any border problems or ethnic minority problems. We did not have a population problem. And we did not have problems with the communist terrorists or the Malaysian communist guerrillas. We did not have any of these problems like we do today. And do not forget that the soldiers are very close to the people and to the various situations. They live in these areas and have contact with the people. They know what the real problems are. Sometimes, the sectors at the center cannot really come in contact with these things.

[Question] But there is still the view that the soldiers are dictators.

[Answer] We must first arrive at an understanding of what dictatorship means.

[Answer] What power?

[Question] POlitical and administrative.

[Question] There are people who feel that the fact that the military is involved with all the problems...that this is characteristic of a dictatorship.

[Answer] I do not think that this is the case. We should look at things fairly and look at the country's situation clearly. We should look to see how we can improve things, develop [the country] and protect ourselves from any danger that might arise.Do not think that someone is trying to make himself important and concentrate all the power in his own hands. I do not think that such thoughts will occur to a person who is looking at the situation fairly.

[Question] Stated simply, at present, many people are saying that everything that General Athit is doing is aimed at increasing his own importance and concentrating power in his own hands. As a person who is close to him at one level, what is your view?

[Answer] I have never seen him do anything that was outside the scope of his duties. That is, everything that he does is within the scope of his responsibilities. I have never seen him play any illegal games. That is, he acts in accord with his position as assistant RTA CINC, commanding general of the First Army Area and commander of the Capital Guards.

[Question] All the power he has is in accord with the laws?

[Answer] He does not have the power to give orders to any department, ministry or sector. If he gave an order and it was not carried out, he does not have the power to force them. This matter is the responsibility of the heads of the ministries and the directors-general.

[Question] This is maintaining the situation?

[Answer] He acts in accord with the powers, and duties, that he has.

[Question] But there are many people who view him in an unfriendly way.

[Answer] I am certain that when a person dares to act and make decisions and dares to solve problems, the interests of others will suffer. These people will oppose [the one who dares to act] and will not be happy with his actions; this is natural. If nothing is done, none of these people will have any problems or lose profits.But we can no longer tolerate such a situation. When there are problems, they must be solved. And when problems are solved, the interests of some people may be adversely affected.

[Question] Or is it because General Athit has the characteristics of a leader in this period, characteristics that are especially prominent, and this has resulted in him being the target of much criticism?

[Answer] We see this in every period. Those who act, those who take any action, will be loved by some and hated by others. Those who take action will always be in the limelight. And those who want to make a name for themselves will try to do so by attacking those who are in the limelight. If they attack someone who is not well-known, this will not help them to become well known. We see this in every period. For example, if the newspapers print a story about Mr A or Mr B, few people will read the story. But if there are reports or articles about people whom the public is interested in, many people will read the stories. This is only natural.

[Question] Is he very interested in the economic problems?

[Answer] He is interested in all the problems facing the country.

[Question] Does this mean that if some problem arises, his group of advisors prepares a periodic analysis of the situation?

[Answer] The advisors to the Capital Guards can be said to be the hands and feet of the Capital Guards. If the commander needs to be informed about some matter or wants to study some matter, he can have an advisor or a group of advisors make an analysis for him. This is like the hands and feet of an institution, as I have said. But referring to these people as "advisors" may cause confusion. But I don't know what else to call them except "advisors." Because these people are not officials who are under the command of the Capital Guards. They are outsiders.They do not have any regular position in the Capital Guards. Each of these people has good intentions and really wants to work for the good of the country. They have come to help and do not receive any compensation. Since they do not hold any regular position, I do not know what to call them except "advisors."

[Question] What sector do they work with? Or do they work directly for the commander?

[Answer] It depends on the sector. If there is a conference, we contact the chief of staff. If it is an urgent matter or if it is a matter with which an advisor is closely involved in with the commander, he may discuss it with him and inform him directly.

[Question] There aren't the definite, or clear, characteristics of an organization?

[Answer] No. There aren't. And there shouldn't be either.

[Question] As a reporter, people frequently ask me who is General Athit's "Kun Su." If I asked you this, what would your answer be?

[Answer] What is the question?

[Question] Who is General Athit's important advisor, or "kun Su?"

[Answer] Who...(Laughs).

[Question] Isn't there one such person?

[Answer] No. He is a person who makes use of the resources available both in an outside the normal channels in order to hit the target or reach the main goal, which is [to maintain] the stability and security of the country. He uses whatever resources that he can.

[Question] Does he select the people himself?

[Answer] The most important thing is for the people who are going to work together to have the same ideals. As for the people who have come to work with the Capital Guards, if they hope to make profits or gain anything in return, I have never seen anyone profit. People are not even compensated for the gasoline they use. But we all have the same ideals. We are all honest and sincere.

[Question] I would now like to ask you a question in your position as a scholar. Recently, one important high-ranking officer gave a speech at the Government House. He said that, at present, the military must play a greater role in solving the political problems even though this is not the direct duty of the military. [He said that] the reason for this is that the politicians, bureaucrats and scholars cannot solve the problems. The scholars are divided into too many groups and are always arguing among themselves. Actually, he feels that at any one point in time and in any given situation, there is one, and only one, way to solve the country's problems. What is your view of such a statement?

[Answer] Concerning this, it is as I said at the beginning. That is, whenever a problem arises, we must assemble all the existing resources to help solve the problem. The time is past when the politicians and military should do just this or that.

As for the idea that there is only one way to solve the porblems, I think that (pauses a moment) we must look clearly at each problem. We must look at all sides since there are many effects, or causes. A problem may arise for many reasons. One problem may have an effect on many things. Having many offices is good. If we study various theories, political, economic and administrative theories, many of the theories depend on various assumptions. They depend on the past events surrounding the assumptions of each theory and on what situations the theory is appropriate for. Looking at things in a broad way using a theory will enable us to study the problems more clearly. And the fact that the national administrators will be able to make decisions and take action on a certain matter will help clarify the problem or situation and this will further help these people make the correct decisions. This is how I think.

[Answer] National administrators, company executives, all administrators must have several choices and they must study these choices. They must study the choices to see what the results will be if this or that course is chosen. They must then make what they consider to be the best choice. How can we know which is best if we do not study a variety of courses first? This is the correct way to do things.

[Question] Concerning this problem, many people feel that this is a weakness of the military. Many people are apprehensive. Everyone recognizes that in critical situations the military must play an important role. But the military's weakness, which resembles a habit, it that it cannt tolerate showness; it likes immediate decisions. In some situations, this may lead to mistakes. And the military views the other groups as worthless. Will this be a problem?

[Answer] No. No. I feel that this is a good mix. A characteristic feature of the military is its resoluteness. It does not like slowness. It likes quick results from decisions. Once a decision has been made, it wants immediate results. This is an essential characteristic in solving the country's problems. We cannot wait on this and that and allow matters to develop at their own pace. There is an expression, or proverb, in the military that the "remarks of commanders are orders; the orders of commanders are sacred." Such a way of thinking is remote form that in the civil service sector. The orders of a minister or civilian government official may not be obeyed. Or an order issued by a director-general may be held back for many days. But things are not like this in the command line of the military.

Scholars who work...that is, these scholars think and try to find various paths and the advantages and disadvantages of the various paths. They try to discover what the results will be if this or that path is chosen. These scholars can propose things but it is up to the commanders to decide which path to take. It is like a cook cooking food for the commander. There are many foods to choose from depending on what the commander likes and wants. After the food is prepared, if it is not delicious, a new dish can be prepared. I think things are like this. If two elements or two types are brought together, I think the benefits will be very great. Scholars such as myself....I greatly dislike the fact that once we prepare some "food" and serve it, we then think that we have done the best job possible. We do not know whether our proposals are good or not. I want to know whether they are good or not. When a proposal is submitted, if a high-ranking official files it away without looking at it or giving orders, this makes me so discouraged that I don't want to work any more. But if I submit a proposal and the official says that this part is good and that this is not good and must be revised, [this is fine] because I want to know the results of what I have done. I want to know whether the proposal is good or not and whether it can be implemented or not. I want to be told what the problems are. We can make many types. But if proposals are submitted and then forgotten about, no one wants to work. Scholars do not want to work like that. That is, if something is good, tell us. If it is not good, tell us and we can improve it.

[Question] That is, you are ready to accept the consequences?

[Answer] Yes. Yes. But if we do not know, oh! If we do not know whether things are good or not, we will not know what to do. No one can work this way. It is like a cook who prepares food for his boss. If the boss likes the food, the cook knows it was good. If he eats some, he can say if it is too sour or too salty. He can tell [the cook] how he wants it. He can say if the food pleases him or not. But if he doesn't say anything, [the cook] doesn't know if the food was good or not.

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] Concerning the matter of the banks and the military, based on the statement made by the commanding general of the Fourth Army Area concerning the banks and the financial situation, is this the view of Lieutenant General Han alone or is this the view of the younger officers in general?

[Answer] Oh (Pauses a moment). I think that this is the feelig of the people in general. This is the view that Thais in general have of the commercial banks. My reason for thinking this is that even though the commercial banks are presently playing a much greater role in building and developing society than they did in the past, the image of the banks in the eyes of the people in general still contains many points that can be criticized easily. And the banks are aware of these weaknesses. What is clear is that, concerning the statement by Lieutenant General Han, he mentioned things that have been commented on by the people based on his own feelings. But what is very interesting is the reaction of the commercial banks, or bankers, to this statement. He said very little but there has been a great reaction by the commercial banks to this short statement. This shows that the bankers feel that he touched on a weakness. Its like scratching a sore. If you scratch where there is no sore, it will not hurt. But if you scratch the sore, even if it is just a small sore, it will hurt. If you scratch the skin, it won't hurt but if you scratch the sore it will hurt, even if it is just a tiny sore. And when something hurts, you have to jump about and cry; this is natural. Lieutenant General Han's statement is interesting from the standpoint that there has been a great reaction from the commercial banks. This is very interesting.

[Answer] I think so.

[Question] The next question probably doesn't need to be asked but....Since this is the feeling of people in general, is it also the feeling of General Athit?

[Answer] (Pauses a moment.) I once did a study on some of the commercial banks. It can be said that the commercial banks still have many weaknesses. For example, take the matter of dispersing the shareholdings of the commercial banks. To date, they have not been able to disperse them widely. Concerning the administration of the commercial banks, it is clear that many of these banks are still being managed like a family operation. And many of the bank executives are also engaged in other activities and have interests in other activities. This is not the characteristic of a good banker. The commercial banks in Thailand are still playing a very broad and dominating role. They are engaged in many activities. No one can deny this. This is different from in countries where the financial system is well developed. They have limited the sphere [of operations] and role of the commercial banks. The role of the bank executives has been greatly limited. Their role should be limited to managing the financial institutions. But here they still dominate everything. The people see the role they are playing. This is a rather open matter. It is well known. We can see this clearly. The bankers cannot eliminate this weakness.

[Question] Do you think that this should be corrected using various laws and regulations?

[Answer] Actually, talking about laws, I can say that there have already been enough revisions. The commercial banking act was revised and improved about 2 years ago. I do not think that our major problem has to do with the laws. Rather, our problems concern implementation. Since we have laws, we should act in accord with the laws. It would be better to preserve these laws. It is easy to revise the laws. But once laws have been revised, things cannot be carried out in accord with the laws. There are laws....Take dispersing the shareholdings, for example. In the revised commercial banking act, it is clearly stated that the shareholdings of the banks must be dispersed. But the commercial banks and financial institutions that have been brought under control by the various laws concerning commercial banks and financial institutions have constantly asked that the time limit be extended. This is a matter of implementation rather than a matter of the laws.

[Question] Does this mean that, from now on, things must be carried on in strict accord with the existing laws?

[Answer] Yes. That is how things should be done. It is a matter of implementation. Laws can be written at any time.

[Question] If General Athit asked you to comment on this, would you answer like this?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] Before you became an advisor, did you have any previous relations with him?

[Answer] No. I did not know him personally before this. I took this job and then became close to him. Several officers who are close to General Athit introduced me to him and told him about my previous work experience. That is, I would like to say that, as a scholar, I have a strong desire to help the country as much as I can. And I....For a long time, I have had this goal. That is, I will work for anyone who is sincere and honest and who is a capable person whose ideals are to help the country. If these ideals, that is, if a person has such ideals, I will work with him. Before I started working with General Athit, I served as an advisor to Dr Anat Aphaphirom during the time he was the minister of agriculture. And I once worked with Deputy Prime Minister Praman Adireksan. Regardless of whom I was working for, I maintained my ideal of not having anything to gain or lose personally. I worked for the country honestly. I did not work for any particular person or group. If a high-ranking person feels that I can serve him in order to benefit the country, I am glad to work for him. I do not worry about what group a person belongs to or what the position of the person is. We live.... I believe that we all live in the same society and have the same king. These are the ideals that I constantly hold to.

POLICY ADVISORS TO MILITARY PROFILED

[Article: "Scholars Sell Their Souls to the 'Gold Digging Era'"]

[Text] General Saiyut Keotphon once tried to exert pressure to make security a part of the curriculum in the universities. He proposed a plan to the Internal Security Operations Command (ISOC) in order to have the matter taken up by the government. But high-level professors did not agree with this proposal and so it died. This news was disclosed by high-level officials in the government, and military officers who are involved in security work have confirmed this also.

"When this failed, the military kept on trying and tried to force this on the Faculty of Political Science, Chulalongkorn University, by using Professor Kamon Thongthammachat, an advisor to the prime minister. This proposal was well received by Professor Charun Suphap, the dean of the Faculty of Political Science. I have heard that they want to make this subject a part of this faculty. When this program was first proposed to the cabinet, General Saiyut wanted this to be a separate faculty in the university."

It cannot be denied that the universities are places that produce intellectuals, the brains of the nation, who will later control the important mechanisms of society. In one period, the universities played a very important role concerning the social problems and concerning the problem of democracy in the country. While the role of the students has now been reduced, the role of the professors and scholars has greatly increased.

Some scholars have been called upon to serve as advisors to the government and to high-ranking military officers. For example, General Athit has formed a team of advisors composed of scholars. General Kriangsak Chamanan, the leader of the National Democracy Party, has a team of advisors to map out the course and provide political data.

Besides this, scholars have joined together to form various organizations to conduct scholarly research for society. These include economic and political research groups and social research institutions.

It is this role that has caused the security sectors, including the Special Branch Division, the Central Intelligence Department, the National Security Council and the ISOC, to attach so much importance to the movements in the universities.

Government Advisors, Advisors to Dictators

Many past governments have appointed well-known scholars to the position of government advisor. But the government that did this the most was the first Prem government, which mobilized such able scholars as Sen Chamrik, Khien Thirawit and Chaianan Samutwanit. General San Chitpatima, a soldier-scholar, served as the president of the [Council of] Advisors. In the end, when the government of General Prem could not show that it was a democratic government, these people resigned and things crumbled with the events of 1-3 April 1981.

Following this, there were still some elements who had faith in the half-democracy of General Prem and some of them were appointed to positions. Such people, who are still serving as advisors, include Dr Komon Thongthammachat, Dr Mayun Wisetkun, Sukhum Nuansakun and Wiraphong Ramangkun.

One former advisor to the government said that the "team of advisors that served during the time of General San can be divided into three groups. One group was composed of scholars, whose only duty was to give advice and provide data. A second group was composed of social scientists. Besides giving advice, this group also tried to exert pressure to have their recommendations become policy. The third group was composed of people who played an activist role. When they saw that exerting pressure to have their suggestions become policy would not achieve any results, they began carrying on political activities. It was this group that took part in the coup of 1-3 April 1981.

He also said that the "present team of advisors provides advice only. These people just give their opinions on the events of the day. What is worse, some elements are openly and blatantly serving the dictators."

At the same time, General Athit Kamlangek has quietly formed his own team of advisors. The scholars on this team inlcude Associate Professor Wisanu Khuongngam, a professor from the Faculty of Law, Chulalongkorn University, Dr Siwawut Thephatsadin Na Ayuthaya, a professor from the Faculty of Commerce and Accountancy, Chulalongkorn University, Pricha Phongkrailoet, a member of the Faculty of Political Science, Chulalongkorn University, Dr Pridi Kasemsap and Dr Narong Ruongtnai.

These teams of advisors are playing a very clear role. Together, they put on a "regular Sunday evening television program to discuss the problems facing the country."

Secret Programs, the Target Is the Mass Media

"Since the beginning of last year, some officers from the Information Office, Supreme Command Headquarters, have been meeting with scholars who have been directly involved in mass activities. For example, they have met with journalism instructors and with scholars at social research institutions. They also drafted a secret project that asked for cooperation from the scholars. But most of the scholars refused," said one university instructor to SIAM MAI.

The phrase "ased for cooperation" refers to providing data and analyses concerning the attitudes and needs of the people.

This professor also said that in the draft of this secret military project, many projects of various types were included, but the thing that was clear and that was important was that concerning the mass media, "particularly the newspapers, they felt that this was a rather free institution that felt bold enough to criticize national administration strongly. In their view, this was not very good."

They thus asked for cooperation from scholars in this field in order to have them collect data and do studies on the press to see what effect [the press] has on the people, what its strengths and weaknesses are and to find out what the people like and dislike about the press. This data was analyzed in order to provide a way for the state apparatus to hammer at and weaken this institution.

Besides this, among scholars, it is well known that the military has shown a great interest in the public's opinion. For example, Colonel Naritdon Detpratiyut, the secretary of the army, has frequently asked for the data from the various public opinion polls conducted by social research institutions. Whevever a poll is completed, he immediately asks for the data.

"At present, the military has three radio and television programs under the supervision of General Athit. At 0645 hours there is a program on stability. In the evening there is a program on our country. And on Sunday nights there is a television program that discusses the country's problems," said a high-ranking officer to SIAM MAI. He also said that "besides serving as a means to spread propaganda and build up the image of the military, these programs are also a tool that they hope will be capable of fully countering [the stories published by] the newspapers."

In particular, concerning the television program on the country's problems, it is essential to have scholars discuss these matters for the viewers. These scholars have played their part at appropriate times, such as when the government was defeated on the draft of the revised constitution and when the baht was devalued.

Besides the scholars on the staff of General Athit, scholars such as Prathumphon Watcharasathien and Sumet Chumsai who have no inkling of what is going on have been persuaded to appear on these programs too.

Interference From Abroad

A high-ranking government official has revealed that during the period of the first Prem government, during which Mr Tamchai Khamto was the minister of commerce, an attempt was made to use students as tools in the movements of the government. During the period of the sugar shortage when the price of sugar increased greatly, Mr Tamchai proposed at a cabinet meeting that students be mobilized to go check on the small merchants. The result would have been that the image of the students would have been tarnished and the government's [reputation] would have been unblemished.

At the same time, the arrest of Professor Lea Dilokwithayarat on charges of libel cannot be separated from foreign political [influences] coming here and focusing on the movements of the progressive scholars. It is believed that if the scholars had not built a strong "fortress" for themselves, this would certainly have resulted in "a chicken being killed to show the monkey."

Furthermore, foreign foundations that have come to provide help with educational activities have played a major role. At Thammasat University, the Rockefeller Foundation has been active among the professors and students by giving them scholarships to go further their studies abroad. As for those who receive these scholarships, besides their academic qualifications, their ideology is important in being considered for these grants. Only those who are anti-communist are selected so that they can carry on activities after they return. One person who received such a grant is Mr Bunkhong Hanchangsit, the son of Chit Phumsak, a former kamnan who worked as a hired killer in Sawang Daen Din, Sakon Nakhon Province. At present, he is a professor with the Faculty of Economics at Thammasat University.

The important thing is that almost all the scholars from this foundation who are invited to come teach at Thammasat University are probably working for the CIA. This was true of the last person who returned home only last year. Dr York Dilahanty was an important CIA agent who was sent here to keep an eye on the activities of the students and faculty members at Thammasat University during the period that Dr Puai Ungphakon was rector. During that period, the student movement was very active.

Many scholars who once scored important achievements in doing scholarly work for society have been threatened to the point where they have had to keep quiet or flee the country. Those who remain, who have tried to form a group to do research for society, have been watched very closely.

"It is the universities that are the target of the security work, which must finally succeed after the many past attempts, which all ended in failure," said one officer involved in security work to SIAM MAI. This clearly indicates what the future has in store for the universities.

It can be said that today's scholars who are able to play a role openly are not people bent on doing scholarly research. Rather, they are people who work for the government or for the military in order to analyze the situation and give advice on how to play the political game in different situations. Or they go on television in order to make excuses for the government. 11943 CSO: 4207/168

COL NARONG REENTERS POLITICS, PROJECTS POPULIST IMAGE

Bangkok KHAO CHATURAT in Thai 30 Aug 82 pp 34-37

[Interview with Colonel Narong Kittikhachon in Sena District, Ayuthaya Province: "'Narong' Rhetoric"; date not specified]

> [Excerpt] The origin of rhetoric: After he made a definite decision to stand as a candidate for MP in Ayuthaya Province, Colonel Narong Kittikhachon immediately began to seek votes without giving any attention to the great tumult following him. Colonel Narong launched his campaign about 2 weeks ago. To visit the people in the [province of the] old capital, his group uses longboats to reach the communities along the river and travels by foot to reach the people in the paddy fields. What follows is a record of a speech given by Colonel Narong at Wat Naksamot in Phai Phra Commune, Bang Sai District, and a record of questions and answers after a speech at a community in Sena District. A Chaturat reporter who went to listen wrote this record.

A villager: I would like to know to which party you belong in your bid for election to the House of Representatives. Do you belong to a party? I would like to know.

Narong: Yes. I am running for election as a member of the Thai Nation Party. I am running in the name of the Thai Nation Party. Professor Prasoet Bunsom, a long-time member of the party, is running with me.

[Question] I would like to know what the policy of the Thai Nation Party is. I don't know much about this. This is the party to which Praman Adireksan belongs, isn't it? I would like to know what the party's policy is.

[Answer] The Thai Nation Party was formed in 1973. Most of the members come from the old United Thai People's Party. The leader of the United Thai People's Party was my father, Field Marshal Thanom Kittikhachon. This party was disbanded in 1973. And when new parties were formed, the Thai Nation Party was one of the parties formed from the United Thai People's Party. At present, Major General Praman Adireksan is the leader of the party. I became a member of the party only 3 months ago. Actually, I did not want to join any party. I wanted to be an independent. But the new law says that a candidate must belong to a party and so I had to join a party. As for party policy, every party formulates its own wonderful policy. And the Thai Nation Party is no exception. But I'm not sure how much of the policy can actually be carried out. The policy of the Thai Nation Party calls for all-round development. On the social front, it calls for a good standard of living for the people in general. It wants educational development so that the youth of the country have a general education at all levels. And it calls for agricultural development. But to date, the Thai Nation Party has not been able to do much. I think that agriculture is in trouble because, as we can see these days, rice prices are low. This is not progress; this is moving backward. Thus, I think it would be best if you do not ask me about party policy. Every party formulates a wonderful-sounding policy. But whether these policies can be implemented is another matter. This is a new beginning for me too. I have joined the Thai Nation Party. I want to see the party's wonderful policy implemented. And if this turns out to be impossible, I will have to switch parties. Or if I have a chance, I may form my own party. If I form my own party, my policy will contain few clauses. The policy they have written runs to 10 typewritten pages. But I haven't seen them do anything yet. If I had my own party, I would not write more than five points and all five would have to be carried out. If they could not be carried out, I would scrap the policy.

[Question] I would like to ask about....Would you please discuss the events of 14 October 1973? Why did this occur? And concerning blame for this, was it the students or the government that was to blame?

[Answer] Yes. That is a good question. I want to tell you why the events of 14 October 1973 occurred. Based on my knowledge, in 1972 I suppressed various capitalists. I suppressed bankers, dishonest government officials and draftees. In particular, I went and examined the taxes of the bankers and collected taxes from them. Many of these important businessmen had high-ranking government officials serving as the chairman of the board. I went in and put a stop to their activities and collected taxes. In some cases, I collected up to 1 billion baht. This resulted in several groups that had made great profits but that had been opposed by me becoming very dissatisfied. But they could not find a way to harm me because I did everything according to the law. I did not act on whim. Then on 8 October 1973, a group of leftist students began demonstrating and distributing leaflets about a constitution. At that time, there was still no constitution because we had carried out a revolution in 1971. We had suspended the constitution. In 1973, the students made demands. A group of 13 leftist students demonstrated and distributed leaflets calling for a constitution. They demanded that the government promulgate a constitution as quickly as possible. I knew that this was a plan that had been formulated by the capitalists that I had suppressed. They wanted to urge this group on so that I would arrest them. And after I arrested them, there would be an incident. I was aware of the trap they had set. I did not take any action. I would also like to remind you that in 1972, the government appointed me to serve as the head of the unit responsible for suppressing people dangerous to security and as the person responsible for maintaining [the security of] the capital. Thus, I had power equal to that of General Athit Kamlangek today. I was able to do many things in Bangkok Metropolitan. Police officials came and informed me that 13 students were distributing leaflets opposing the government and calling for a constitution. They asked me what to do. I told them not to interfere with them. Let them go ahead and distribute their leaflets. I then took a trip upcountry. By chance, at that moment a high-ranking police official who belonged to one of the groups of government officials that I had suppressed took this opportunity to order the arrest of the 13 students. When I learned that they had been arrested, I did not know what to do. I could not issue any orders because if I had ordered them released, this would have been against the law. We had to conduct an investigation in accord with the law. I allowed an investigation to be made. But from 9 October on, few of the students understood what had happened. Leftists incited a demonstration against the government and asked that the students be released unconditionally. I said that I could not do this. We had to conduct an investigation first. Then on 13 October 1973, I saw that if we kept pressing this matter, things would only get worse and people might even get hurt. Thus, I asked the cabinet for permission to reach an agreement with the students. If an agreement could be reached, I would release the students without conditions. The government gave persmission and so I went and talked with the 13 students who had been jailed. They told me that they personally did not want anything. They wanted the government to promulgate a constitution as quickly as possible and to allow elections. I agreed and asked for 6 months in which to write a constitution, after which an election would be announced. All 13 students were satisfied. We agreed and most of the student leaders were satisfied. But after I released the 13 students, I don't know where they went. I couldn't find them. A group of capitalists who had lost profits because I had suppressed them got involved. And several groups of high-ranking government officials who wanted to topple me went to meet with students at Thammasat University and told them that they could not stop the protest. They asked them to continue the protest until the three of us [Narong, Praphat and Thanom] had been forced to leave the country. Thus, the matter grew worse. Then on 14 October 1973, General Krit Siwala, who was one of the people who had been piling up profits, in effect proposed that we allow blood to be spilled. He proposed that the government order Thammasat university seized by using sailors, who were to be landed along the Chao Prhaya River, and soldiers, that is, soldiers from the 11th Royal Infantry Regiment, under my command, who were to go in from the Sanam Luang side. At that conference, I said that if we did this, blood might be spilled. I asked to be allowed to make an aerial inspection first. I was given permission to do this. I went to the cavalry division at Sanam Pa and used a helicopter. I flew it myself. I flew over the Thammasat University area to observe things. I saw that there were at least 40,000 students gathered there. They had assembled weapons and erected barriers in preparation for making a stand against the soldiers on both the Chao Prhaya River and Sanam Luang sides. When I saw the situation, I reported matters to the conference and told them to stop the advance on Thammasat University, because if we went ahead, people on both sides would be killed. As the director of suppression operations, my father ordered a halt to the operation to seize Thammasat Universiy. The matter should have stopped then and there. But things did not stop there.

RELATIONSHIP OF COMMANDERS IN ARMY REGIONS ANALYZED

Bangkok SU ANAKHOT in Thai 5-11 Sep 82 pp 8-11

[Article: "Eleven Generals On a Chessboard"]

[Text] On a chessboard, even though the king is the most important piece, without any supporting pieces such as bishops, rooks, knights and pawns to protect the king from enemy attacks, he will be surrounded and finally checkmated. Similarly, in the army where the various powers are trying to build up their role and play a part in arranging the forces in their favor, this is something that cannot be ignored. Once someone has gained the advantage, such as the position of RTA CINC, which is the highest position in the army, besides the four army area commanders, no less importance should be attached to those who command the divisions. This is the source for positioning the 11 chesspieces in order to see the real power structure in the army at a time when all these people have "their sights" set on the position of regional commander.

Opening the Command Line In the Infantry, Artillery and Armored Cavalry

At the divisional level in the army, there are three main branches that are really combat units: the infantry, the cavalry and the artillery. Each division is composed of two regiments and each regiment is composed of three battalions. This is the minimum criteria. Concerning all three of the branches, it can be said that it is the infantry divisions that are the largest. These divisions are directly subordinate to the army areas, whose forces consist of at least one main division. The army area that is more special than any other is the First Army Area. This army area guards the central region, the capital, where important installations are located, and the area along the eastern border. Thus, this army area has two main divisions, the 1st Division, stationed in Bangkok, and the 2nd Division, which is stationed in Prachinburi. The other army areas have only one division. The Second Army Area has the 3rd Division, which is stationed in Nakhon Ratchasima; the Third Army Area has the 4th Division, which is stationed at Phitsanulok; and the Fourth Army Area has the 5th Division, which is stationed at Nakhon Sithammarat.

Since the strength of the various units has increased together with the [increased] tasks in maintaining the security of the country, the strength of the infantry divisions has been increased in order to handle the present situation. From the five main divisions already in existence, another six have been established so that there are now a total of 11 divisions. But of these, only the 9th and 6th divisions have a combat strength equal to that of the five main divisions. The other four divisions were established only last year and at present they are only "loose divisions" that are waiting to have their combat strength built up in the near future.

Besides the infantry divisions, cavalry and artillery divisions are combat divisions that are essential too in both times of war and peace. This is because they are combat units that are even more powerful than the infantry divisions, even though they are smaler in terms of manpower. Both of these divisions are directly subordinate to the RTA CINC; they are not under the army areas. Until recently, there was only one artillery and one cavalry division. But a second cavalry division was formed and so now there are the 1st and 2nd cavalry divisions. In 1980, the base was moved from Lom Sak District in Phetchabun Province to Bangkok, just as the AAA Division is located in Bangkok.

Besides this, another special unit that has not been included along with the usual units is the special combat division. There have been reports that this unit will be officially formed in 1982. It will be formed by expanding the Special Warfare Center at the Phra Narai Camp at Lopburi, which was formed from a paratroop division, as it has continued to be called to the present. Actually, this center is already equivalent to a division. It has four regiments and is directly subordinate to the RTA CINC. It has played an important role in several coups in the past.

The commanders of all these divisions have a good chance of eventually being promoted to full general. Most of them were promoted from the rank of colonel and special colonel, which is in the same command line.

Generals In 1982, the Turn of Classes 3 and 4, Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy

As long as the main criterion for transfer to various positions in the army continues to be seniority, branch and class will continue to be the basis for consideration. Because normally, if a person gains seniority in doing his duties, it is based on his class at the Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy [CRMA]. Concerning this, it can be seen that the 11 commanders are all officers from various classes ranging from Class 5 of the Army Academy [AA], which is the same class as General Athit Kamlangek, the assistant commander in chief of the army, to Class 2 of the CRMA, [some of whose members] reached the rank of general only in recent years. But most of these generals were members of Class 7 of the Army Academy.

However, it is well known that, in addition to seniority, there are other criteria that are used to decide who will be transferred to what position. These criteria have to do with knowledge and skills and, of course, "suitability" in the eyes of their immediate superiors. In the past, we have seen that some people have bypassed class and seniority and unexpectedly risen higher than others. They have done so easily by making this claim [suitability]. In some cases, some people have bypassed their chain of command. For example, in the 1979 transfers, then Major General Athit was transferred from the northeast, where he was the commander of the 3rd Division, and made the commander of the 1st Division.

"Talking about the position of divisional commander, it is difficult to say for sure. There are many factors that depend on fate. If nothing unexpected happens, I expect transfers to be made in accord with the chain. But I do not think there will be many changes this year since there were changes just last year. Usually, a divisional commander stays in the position for at least 2 years," said a news source in the army. At the same time, another important commander pointed out that if divisional commanders are transferred, the next classes in line for these positions are classes 3 and 4 of the CRMA. "But most will probably come from Class 4 because there are very few from Class 3 who are in this chain. As for Class 2, they have already made general," observed this same officer.

Keep an Eye On the Older Generals

Of all the infantry divisions, it is believed that the 1st Division is the best and most modern combat force since it is the main force in defending the important heartland of the country. But the special characteristic of this division is that it is more involved in politics than is any other division. Almost all past coups have had to have the cooperation of this division in carrying out the coup. And the position of commander of the 1st Division was considered to be the first rung of the ladder on the way to the important command positions in the army, including the positions of commanding general of the First Army Area and RTA CINC. This was the case with Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat, Field Marshal Thanom Kittikhachon, Field Marshal Praphat Charusathien and General Krit Sivala.

There was a change in the path to the position of RTA CINC after the time of General Krit. Since the time of General Bunchai Bamrungphong, it appears that the path to power in the army has changed. Neither General Bunchai nor General Soem Na Nakhon were infantrymen and neither commanded the 1st Division or even the First Army Area. And General Prem Tinsulanon gained power after having served as the commander of the cavalry center and as the commanding general of the Second Army Area. However, if, as everyone expects, General Athit Kamlangek becomes the new RTA CINC during the military transfers this October, this will be in line with the old system once again since General Athit served as the commander of the 1st Division. This occurred because pressure was exerted by high-ranking political groups after General Prem became RTA CINC in 1979, or after the "sky changed color" as is said.

As for the present commander of the 1st Division, Major General Phichit Kunlawinit, the man who was transferred here from his position as commander of the 4th Division after the events of 1 April, everyone, including both his subordinates and his superiors, agree that he is a "professional soldier" who is "more a soldier than a politician." It is very likely that, as a person who is trusted, he will be allowed to retain this "sharp" position. Even though there have been rumors that Major General Phichit will return to his old area and become the deputy comanding general of the Third Army Area, where he achieved good results in fighting the communist terrorists at Khao Kho, he may instead be put in command of the special combat division that is being formed, a job that requires skill, since he was once a special combat instructor at the infantry center.

Several SU ANAKHOT news sources have confirmed that "Commander Phichit" will definitely not be transferred anywhere next year. Because besides the fact that he has served in his present position only 1 year, high-level political groups want him to stay in this position. "Phichit is his own man. He is a very capable person and does not have any 'black marks.' And what is important is that he is a combat soldier who is greatly trusted by several groups. Thus, he will probably not be moved this year," said a news source close to General Prem. Another news source pointed out that if Major General Phichit is transferred to the special combat division, this would be like a demotion since his present position is much more important.

"Phichit is not one to talk in a depressed way or to act as if the job is too much for him. Instead, he will talk about his achievements," said a close friend of Major General Phichit in denying reports to the effect that Major General Phichit is bored with a position that is involved with politics. He also said plainly that "if there are such reports, it shows that such things were not said by Phichit." The thing worth keeping an eye on is the future of Major General Phichit. It is thought that he is the "heir" who will step into the position of RTA CINC in 3 years after General Athit retires. "The person who becomes the commander of the 1st Division must look into the future to see if he will later become the commanding general of the First Army Area and then RTA CINC," said the news source in conclusion.

The 2nd and 6th Divisions, Possible Changes

Concerning the important forces in the First Army Area, besides the 1st Division, there are two other divisions too. One is the 2nd Division, which is presently commanded by Major General Prachum Phibunphanawat, a member of Class 7 of the Army Academy. There are rumors that he will be promoted and become the deputy commanding general of the First Army Area. But others disagree, saying that there are others who are senior to Major General Prachum. One such person is Major General Kasem Sumanan, the commander of the 1st Army Circle who was in the same class as General Athit. And Major General Prachum was just transferred last year. If he is actually transferred, one possible replacement for him is Colonel Sanan Sawetseni, the deputy commander of the 2nd Division who is a member of Class 2 of CRMA. He is the most senior deputy commander.

The 9th Division is another unit that has played a part. It once took part in a coup during the time of General Chalat Hiransiri, who was defeated. Then, after the failure of the 1 April coup, in which this force took part too, rather than being an independent division under the command of the RTA CINC, this division was placed under the direct command of the First Army Area. Major General Somkhit Chongphayuha became the commander of this division last year, replacing Major General Sinthu Keotsombun, who was transferred to the post of deputy commanding general of the First Army Area. As for this year, it is expected that Major General Somkhit will stay in this position since he was transferred here only recently. At present, the division is playing a role in defending the forward area along the border. It is now stationed in Prachinburi Province, its former base being in Kanchannaburi Province.

Similarly, in the Second Army Area, Major General Bunchin Ditthakun just became the commander of the 3rd Division last year and will probably not be transferred. But in the case of the 6th Division, which is based in Roi Et and which was formed only 2 years ago, Major General Phisit Mabut, the division's first commander, may be transferred to become the deputy commanding general of the Second Army Area. One of the deputy commanders will be moved up to replace him. As for the north, Major General Ruamsak Chaikomin, the commander of the 4th Division who is said to be a very capable person, may be moved to become the deputy commanding general of the Third Army Area. But one news source has stated that this depends on whether or not Lieutenant General Phrom Phiunuan is moved from his position as commanding general of the Third Army Area to become the assistant commander in chief of the army as the rumors say.

"If Ruamsak is transferred, the person most likely to take his place is Colonel Siri Thiwaphan, a member of Class 4, CRMA," commented a news source. In the south in the Fourth Army Area, Major General Panya Singsakda is the commander of the 5th Division. Even though he has scored good results as the commander of the 43rd Civilian-Police-Military Regiment, which controls the border area in the five southern provinces, and recently seized major bases of the communist guerrillas, because he has been here only 1 year and because he works well with Lieutenant General Han Linanon, the commanding general of the Fourth Army Area and the person who formulated the "Tai Rom Yen" policy, he will probably not be transferred to another area but will probably be made the deputy commanding general of this army area. One news source said that the problem is the matter of seniority. There are several deputies, such as the commander of Combat Support Headquarters 4, who have a greater right [to the position].

"The value of a person depends on who supports him." This seems to be a good summary for almost all military appointments. And it will be true this time too. The generals will certainly be appointed by the new RTA CINC, which will undoubtedly be General Athit Kamlangek. "Actually, there should not be any problem. The people who looked at last year's transfer lists were General Prem, General Prayut and General Athit, who will certainly appoint people who are loyal to him. But this year there are only two real positions open for Athit's men," said the same news source to SU ANAKHOT. And he pointed out that it is quite normal that when a person loses power, his subordinates, or loyal followers, will be transferred in accord with regulations. For example, the followers of General San Chitpatima, the leader of the 1 April Revolutionary Council, were all transferred. And the same thing happened to the followers of General Amnat Damrikan and General Soem Na Nakhon. In general, those who were not "sacked" have all "switched" and now support the person with the greatest power in the army.

Tanks Join the Battle, Prem's Line Gets Involved

Political lessons in Thailand have shown that unless a prime minister also has military power, it is difficult for him to maintain his stability. General Prem too is well aware of the things that happened to him. The people involved were the same ones who opposed General Kriangsak Chamanan when he was prime minister. Even though General Prem must now rely on the forces of General Athit for his stability in the future, this does not mean that he has complete trust in him in the situation in which he [Prem] is separated from his real base of support in the army.

Thus, it is not surprising that General Prem has tried to play a role in arranging the various forces this year. Actually, he did this before when he was still the RTA CINC. The new cavalry division that was formed recently is one of the elements that he is using to help maintain a balance of power with the infantry, which is a branch of the army General Prem did not serve in. In addition to the other positions that he has stipulated, "the fact that General Prem has moved the two cavalry divisions and based them in Bangkok has generated greater confidence. Tanks are more powerful than infantrymen," said one officer close to General Prem.

"This is characteristic of every RTA CINC. Take this year, for example. General Prayut came from the engineers. He formed one new regiment of engineers in each region. The only thing is that the engineers do not control forces and so they cannot play a great role," added a news source from another branch.

In cavalry circles, it is expected that Major General Chaichana Tharichat, the commander of the 1st Cavalry Division, will be transferred and made the deputy commanding general of the Third Army Area or put in some other higher position after he has commanded this unit for 2 years. This will give Colonel Sathon Suwannapha, the deputy commander of this division, who is a member of Class 4, CRMA, a chance to step into this position in his place. Major General Wichat Lathomya, the commander of the 2nd Cavalry Division, whom General Prem put in this position last year, will probably remain in this position for another year since he has served in this position only 1 year and since he is "loyal" to General Prem.

Artillery--A Special Combat Force: One Will Remain, One Will Change

As for the AAA Division, which is presently commanded by Major General Prasat Simonsilapin, who was transferred here in 1980, it is believed that this division will stay in the camp of General Prem, who was then the RTA CINC (extended term). A news source said that there will probably not be any changes. "I have heard that he wants to remain in this position," said one officer in the artillery unit. At the same time, concerning the special combat division that will be formed from the Special Warfare Center, which will result in the commander being promoted to a lieutenant general, it is not clear who will become the commander of this new division. A guess is that it will be the present deputy commander of the center. As for the commander of the center, it is not clear whether Major General Enok Bunyathi will be promoted to lieutenant general and kept in his present position or whether someone will be brought in from the outside to replace him.

As for the new divisions, including the 11th Division of the First Army Area, the 12th Division of the Second Army Area and the 15th and 16th divisions of the Fourth Army Area, a news source said that the present commanders must be kept in the present positions so that they can continue and complete the task of building these combat units in accord with the targets. Because at present, these units have only a name and a loose structure.

Concerning the 11 generals on the army's chessboard, it is believed that they have now been put in place. No one can deny that these are strong power bases of General Athit Kamlangek and that they will begin to make their mark in the next several months and become even tighter in the coming years, unless they make some unbelievable mistake.

REPORT ON ARAB INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN SOUTH ASIA

London AL-MAJALLAH in Arabic No 134, 4-10 Sep 82 pp 42-43

[Article: "Countries of Southeast Asia Trying To Attract Arab Investments and Arab Capital"]

[Text] Political leaders in southeast Asia have begun expressing their disappointment with the low level of investments in their countries by some Middle Eastern countries, despite the encouraging overtures that were made by some banks in the countries of the Arabian Gulf.

A Malaysian official complained, "Arab investors lack a broad imagination. They are only interested in land and real estate. This is not what we have been hoping for."

What Malaysia's prime minister, (Muntazar) Mohamad and the remaining leaders of the League of Southeast Asian Countries aspire for are major projects that would link together capital coming from Arab countries that are members of OPEC, Korean technology and the natural resources and manpower that are available locally. That is, they are making an effort to achieve the so-called Asian triangle.

This league consists of Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. All these countries are "moderate" countries, and they have one thing in common: they all fear the People's Republic of China which supports illegal communist parties in those countries. The countries of the Southeast Asia League also fear the largest military power in the area, Vietnam, which is loyal to Moscow.

The five countries that are members of this league are different from each other. Indonesia, whose population is 140 million persons and which consists of a group of islands, is the largest Islamic country in the world as far as its population is concerned. Oil is its principal resource. In 1965 an uprising by communists loyal to Beijing was put down after about 600,000 persons were killed. However, with [annual] per capita income being about 130 dollars, according to the 1980 world census, Indonesia is considered one of the very poor countries.

The Philippines is considered more industrialized than Indonesia. Per capita income in Indonesia is 890 dollars, even though its population is 50 million. The vast majority of the population in the Philippines are Catholics. Also educated people there speak English fluently. [The chief] religion in Thailand, whose population is 50 million, is Buddhism, and per capita income there is about 670 dollars. As far as oil and gas are concerned, Thailand is self-sufficient, producing both oil and gas locally.

In Malaysia, however, whose population is about 14 million, per capita income is about 2,090 dollars. Malaysia is considered the largest producer in the world of rubber, tin and other metals. It is therefore considered one of the rich countries in the region despite the fact that its population is a mix of Chinese, Indians, Sri Lankans and Bengalis.

With its 2.5 million people--76 percent of whom are Chinese--Singapore is considered the Geneva of Asia with a per capita income that is about 4,430 dollars. This is the highest per capita income in Southeast Asian countries, with the exception of Japan. Like Japan, Singapore is considered a center for high technological industries.

One of the most important salient economic features in Singapore is the Asian currency which is called the Asian dollar. There is a possibility that a trade community may be established in the free commercial zone in order to meet the demands of the unified market which may consist of about 250 million local consumers. However, the ongoing cold war with Vietnam and its two allies, Laos and Cambodia, has shaken consumer confidence. At the present time 19 American companies in Malaysia are producing semi-conductors--transistors and similar objects--thereby making the country the largest foreign supplier of these products to the United States. It is rare for a foreign visitor to go into a hotel, a restaurant or an elevator in a building without seeing a few Japanese businessmen.

Appointment of Jewish Ambassador Rejected

It seems though that the United States has begun losing its influence in Indonesia and Malaysia due to its special relationship with Israel. Both countries have been plagued by a wave of bomb threats against American institutions. Last June [or] July Indonesia declined to accept the appointment of Morton (Ambrose) Moses as U.S. ambassador to Indonesia because he is Jewish.

Recently Malaysia has become involved in an open dispute with Britain which in the past had colonized the country. Britain was denied investment opportunities in Malaysia. Despite the fact that Malaysian and Indonesian officials have been trying to obtain Japanese investments in their country, Japan's occupation of the five Asian countries during World War II has left bitter memories that cannot be easily forgotten. Also as a people, the Japanese do not have sufficient popularity.

"Accordingly, investment possibilities in Southeast Asia for countries of the Middle east appear to be excellent," said the editor of an economics magazine in Kuala Lumpur. The magazine editor added, "We will welcome investments from Middle Eastern countries more than investments from other countries."

The ministers of foreign affairs of Malaysia and Indonesia, Ghazali bin Shafie and Mochtar Kusumaatmadja, [respectively], will visit Islamic countries in the next few weeks to seek their support regarding the new coalition government in Cambodia, which is headed by Norodom Sihanouk. This government will take Cambodia's seat at the United Nations next September. Both ministers will use this tour to explore the matter of Arab investments in their countries.

Thailand is seeking to broaden the range of its domestic investments. Annual economic growth in Thailand, a country which attracts more than 1 million tourists a year, most of whom are from the countries of the Arabian Gulf, is eight percent.

At the present time Arab investments are concentrated in Malaysia, Indonesia and Singapore. In Malaysia, for example, the government is building an Islamic university by means of the aid that is being offered by Pakistan and the Arab countries. Malaysia and Indonesia, however, are quite apprehensive about the Islamic Iranian wave; they are prohibiting, for example, displays of Khomeyni's pictures and slogans.

Recently, the United States offered Malaysia a loan of 1 billion dollars to help the country improve its economic conditions. This happened after the annual rate of growth fell from 8 to 5 percent this year and after inflation doubled and reached an annual rate of 10 percent. The government of Malaysia borrowed 1.2 billion dollars from Europe. This includes a 250 million dollar loan for building a gas refinery in Sarawak .

Last year Malaysia's oil revenues amounted to 3 billion dollars; it earned 2.6 billion dollars from exporting manufactured goods, especially electronics. As a result of the recent decline in oil prices due to the inflation which world markets are suffering from, the country has had its first deficit in its balance of trade. However, the expected expansion in oil and methane gas production will correct the situation.

Saudi Subsidies

The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia has agreed to help the government of Malaysia by establishing a bank that would operate according to Islamic principles. This bank would become one of the effective means or channels for carrying out investment operations that countries of the Middle East undertake. The Industrial Growth and Development Organization in Malaysia is trying to encourage investments in the area of cultivating rubber, in the wood industry; in the growing electronics industry; in aircraft devices; sensitive engineering equipment; heavy industry like paper, cement, petrochemicals and oil refining; and in defense equipment such as light weapons and other weapons.

The aim of the new economic plan is to invest 940 million dollars in developing energy sources and increasing oil and gas exploration. With its present oil fields Malaysia will become an energy exporting country in the next decade.

As far as the people of Singapore are concerned, trade and business to them are like soccer to the people of Brazil. Every morning the newspaper, BUSINESS TIMES is at the doorstep of every home. This newspaper contains much more business news and analyses than can be found in THE WALL STREET JOURNAL or THE FINANCIAL TIMES of London, for example.

Singapore is considered an important banking center in Southeast Asia. [Officials in Singapore] are even thinking of introducing a system of confidential banking and numbered accounts over the objections of neighboring countries.

The market for the Asian dollar began operating in 1969 by abolishing the tax collected on the accounts of non-resident citizens in an attempt to attract the Arab funds of 25 Arab banks. These funds, which are estimated at about 90 billion dollars, are currently invested in the European market.

Singapore is trying to encourage Arab banks to open branches in Singapore so as to ensure more geographic balance and, accordingly, ensure the necessary funding for Asian contractors, especially Koreans, Japanese, Philipinos and Indonesians.

The 100 banks [in Singapore], including large American banks, are very active in extending different loans. They are also very active in trading gold and various other precious metals. The tax levied on the sale of gold is no more than 1 dollar per ounce.

Although wages for industrial workers have risen recently by 18 percent, easy term loans continue to make investments in Singapore very attractive, especially since rent for office space is very low and does not exceed 3.5 dollars per square foot in the most luxurious commercial and financial district overlooking the Strait of Malacca .

The government allows its citizens to borrow funds from their social security accounts if they are going to use those funds to make a down payment to purchase one of the apartments the government is building for them. In addition, citizens are given the opportunity to borrow money in the form of entering into a mortgage agreement to purchase homes.

FAREWELL RECEPTION HELD FOR PRC AMBASSADOR

[Text] Outgoing Chinese Ambassador in Bangladesh Liu Shuking on Sunday said Bangladesh is a "very close and friendly neighbour" of China and that friendship between the two countries is "very firm and deep-rooted," reports ENA.

He was speaking at a function held simultaneously to celebrate the 33rd anniversary of the founding of People's Republic of China and to accord farewell reception to him at Ramna Restaurant, Dacca on Sunday evening.

Bangladesh-China Friendship Society sponsored the function. Shuking said the peoples of both China and Bangladesh should continue their efforts to further cement and develop the existing friendship between the two countries.

Presided over by President of the association, Mirza Golam Hafiz, the function was addressed by Vice-President of the association Ataur Rahman Khan and Kazi Zafar Ahmed.

Referring to China's commitment to the Third World and developing countries Shuking said his country is pledge-bound to extend all possible support to those struggling against hegemonism, exploitation and oppression.

He outlined the progress achieved by the present leadership of China in all sectors through modernisation programmes. He said objective of his country's modernisation programme includes increase of farm-production four-fold by the turn of the current century. He described the outcome of 12th Congress of the Communist Party of China as "very important and successful".

Mirza Golam Hafiz said friendship and cooperation between Bangladesh and China has been gaining stronger day by day since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

He said cultural ties, trade transactions, cooperation in scientific and technical fields developed significantly between the two countries during the past few years.

Mirza Hafiz said China had extended support to Bangladesh in consolidating her national independence and sovereignty and hoped she will always stand by the side of the people of Bangladesh in their just struggle in future.

He said that an Islamic delegation from China will soon visit Bangladesh at the invitation of the government.

Ataur Rahman Khan who led a friendship delegation to China recently narrated the experience of his visit to China.

He said the friendly feelings demonstrated by the people of China during the visit of the friendship delegation clearly shows that the existing ties between the two peoples will be further promoted.

Kazi Zafar said the people of Bangladesh are still continuing their struggle in consolidating their national independence and sovereignty and hoped that China would extend its unflinching support in future.

He lauded the efforts of the outgoing Chinese Ambassador in developing friendship between the peoples of the two countries.

'CONFUSING' REPORT ON EXPORT PERFORMANCE NOTED

Dacca HOLIDAY in English 26 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Jaglul Alam]

[Text] The export earning of the country during the first two months of the current fiscal year (July-August) indicated a shortfall by over 70 crore takas measured against the projected average target for the period.

During the period 186.12 crore takas were earned by exporting commodities while the target for the same period was 258.16 crore takas taking into account that 1550 crore takas worth of export earning has been fixed for fiscal year 1982-83.

It is gathered that the export situation was to be discussed threadbare by the export promotion authorities with the Martial Law administration on September 22 last. But since CMLA was busy otherwise on that day the meeting could not be held.

Meanwhile, the Export Promotion Bureau has published the export performance report for the month of July and August 1982.

But this performance report about exports during July-August is confusing. It is found that the export figures for July as quoted in the monthly statement of export for the month are not similar to those in the statement prepared for the months of July and August.

In the monthly statement of July it was stated that jute goods (all sorts) worth 36 28 crore takas were exported in July '82 while the statement prepared for August shows that jute goods worth 45 11 crore takas were exported in July '82.

The statement for July showed an export earning of 4 65 crore takas from tanned and semi-tanned leather, while the statement for August shows 4 93 crore takas as export earning for the same commodities for July, '82.

Similarly, export earning from total manufactured commodities during July as quoted in the monthly statement for July was 50.58 crore takas while it was shown in the statement of August that over 55 crore takas were earned from exporting manufactured items in July 1982.

The total export earning during July-August as shown in the statement for August was 190.02 crore takas while totalling the figures of the statements of July and August separately it is found that commodities worth 186.12 crore takas were exported in the same period.

On the other hand, the statement published by the Bangladesh Jute Mills Corporation and Export Promotion Bureau showing export earning from jute goods do not tally.

According to a BJMC source jute goods of about 50 thousand long tons were exported during the first two months of the current fiscal year and about 50.15 crore takas were earned at the rate of about 10,012 takas per ton of jute goods.

But the statement of the Export Promotion Bureau shows that jute goods worth 85.53 crore takas were exported during the same period. However, the latter statement contained neither the volume of jute goods nor its per ton price on the international market.

According to the July '82 statement of export earnings the country incurred a shortfall of over 29 crore takas on export earning compared to the export earning of the previous month. In July '82 commodities worth 76.16 crore takas were exported as against 105.20 crore takas during June 1982.

Export both in terms of volume and takas during July '82 fell due to slow trend in export of jute goods, tanned and semi-tanned leather, handicraft, hosiery and specialized textiles, raw jute, tea, etc.

During June this year raw jute worth 16.88 crore takas was exported. The figure fell by 9.18 crore takas to 7.70 crore takas in July 1982.

Over 2.38 crore takas were earned in June 1982 exporting tea. The earnings decreased to 1.76 crore takas in July, '82.

During June, this year agricultural products worth 104.02 crore takas were exported but in the following month this export decreased by over 17 crore takas to 86 92 crore takas, it is learnt.

Total primary commodities worth 25.57 crore takas were exported from Bangladesh in July this year as against an earning of 31.57 crore takas during the previous month.

The situation indicated some improvement during the month of August '82. In August 109.96 crore takas were earned from export as against 85.51 crore takas export earning during the corresponding period of the previous year.

When contacted, the vice-chairman of Export Promotion Bureau said he could not meet this correspondent because he was 'busy'.

Meanwhile, Export Promotion Bureau has issued a handout clarifying the export performance in July and August, '82 which was also based on the aforesaid anomalous statements.

FOOD MINISTER: ARRANGEMENTS FOR FOOD GRAINS ADEQUATE

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 26 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Daulatpur (Kushtia) Sept. 25:--Food Minister Air Vice-Marshal (Retd.) A. G. Mahmood today said that adequate foodgrains had already been arranged from external sources to meet the additional food shortage caused by recent flood and drought in some districts reports BSS.

Addressing a cross-section of people here this morning the Minister said that 12 lakh tons of foodgrains were scheduled to arrive in the country by December next. He said that over 50 per cent of this quantity had so far arrived.

Air Vice-Marshal Mahmood said that Government was fully aware of the food situation and was keeping a constant watch on the market. Adequate measures have also been taken to intensify supply of foodgrains through open market sale modified rationing and test relief he added.

He said that the foodstock in the Government godowns as well as in the pipeline was satisfactory. He assured that there would be no interruption in the supply of foodgrains through Government distribution system.

The Minister was informed in the meeting that sufficient quantity of foodgrains was being distributed all over the district of Kushtia and it had made salutory effect on the market to stabilize the price of foodgrains.

Explaining the food policy of the present Government the Minister said that the objective of the policy was to strengthen the free movement of the foodgrains to make food available in all the areas of the country.

Referring to the various steps taken by the Government in other fields the Minister said since our resources were limited these should be utilized properly and in a planned way for the benefit of the common man. The Minister said with that aim in view the Government had taken several fundamental policy decisions for the total uplift of the rural people. He called upon the people to come forward to work with the Government to implement these programmes.

The Food Minister also visited the local LSD and OMS centre. He was informed that over 45 thousand maunds of foodgrains were stored in Daulatpur P.S. alone.

Later Air Vice-Marshal Mahmood met a cross-section of people at Gangni and Chuadanga and discussed food situation with them.

Earlier on Friday the Minister addressed two separate meetings at Ishurdi and Sathia in Pabna district.

FIRST PHASE OF BAKHRABAD GAS DRILLING COMPLETED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 26 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] Bakhrabad (Comilla) Sept 25:--The first phase of Bakhrabad gas drilling was completed today reports BSS.

The DCMLA and Minister for energy and mineral resources Air Vice-Marshal Sultan Mahmud formally announced the successful completion of the exploration phase of the project when he visited the drilling site in Comilla.

Bakhrabad is one of the largest gas fields of the country, with an estimated reserve of three trillion cft. gas. In addition, there would be available a considerable quantum of condensate which would also reduce the foreign exchange burden on account of oil import.

The drilling in this gas field was started in June 1980 and was designed project to have its producing wells with gas gathering and processing facilities. The estimated cost of the project was Taka 109 crore including a foreign exchange component of Taka 90 crore, financed by OECF of Japan.

All the five wells out of which four are deviation drilling of the project have now been completed with an estimated minimum production capacity of 150 million cft. of gas daily. The gas gathering and processing equipments are expected to be installed and commissioned by June, 1983.

Air Vice-Marshal Sultan Mahmud also visited the gas pipeline link areas at Feni which will be completed by March next year.

This will connect Bakhrabad with Chittagong city gate station and transmit gas through the 110-mile long pipe-line to Chittagong city and industrial areas and six lakh consumers will be benefited. At the same time, the consuming centres at Comilla, Chandpur, Laksham, Feni will also come within the network.

While addressing the personnel of the Bakhrabad gas field Air Vice-Marshal Sultan Mahmud appreciated their endeavour and enthusiasm which helped early completion of the work. He expressed his gratitude to OECF and Japan for providing necessary assistance for successful completion of the drilling project.

He also mentioned that the Government was keen to extract LPG from natural gas and supply it throughout the country.

The DCMLA asked the officials to coordinate with other related agencies for early completion of the pipeline connection.

He said, it is our prime responsibility to meet the growing demand of gas of our own people within the country and urged all concerned to work with dedication to fulfil the task.

Air Vice-Marshal Sultan Mahmud also visited Feni 33 KV power sub-station and expressed his dissatisfaction of the poor standard of electricity distribution there.

He asked the PDB authorities to take up a rehabilitation programme immediately with special emphasis on the maintenance of the scheme to ensure smooth power supply in the area.

FINANCING STOPPED IN 16 INDUSTRIAL SECTORS

[Article by Badiul Alam]

[Text] Due to acute shortage of funds both in foreign and local currency the government has directed the major lending institutions, Bangladesh Shilpa Bank (BSB) and Bangladesh Shilpa Rin Sangstha (BSRS) not to entertain for now any projects other than export-oriented and import substituting industries.

In particular the government has advised the lending institutions to stop financing in some 16 subsectors. These are, fish catching and processing, cold storage, biscuit factory, edible and non-edible oils including refinery and hydrogenation, beverage (nonalcoholic), cordage, rope, twine and jute yarn, jute bailing, plywood, packing board, foot wear, steel re-rolling mills (excluding corrugated & plain galvanized sheets), aluminium utensils & enamelware, dry cell batteries and parts thereof, electric fans, bodybuilding of bus, trucks, etc. and acquisition of ships and coasters (ocean going).

It is learnt that this decision of the government has adversely affected a substantial number of private sponsors whose projects had been approved and for which funds had been sanctioned and who were awaiting finalization of machinery procurement.

An official of D. G. Industries Office said that the existing capacity in these sectors appears to be in excess of requirement. Moreover, some of these sectors could not utilize the sanctioned capacity due to paucity of necessary raw materials and marketing problems, he claimed.

He particularly referred to the fish catching and processing plants. As per sanctioned capacity nearly 2 lakh tons of fish can be processed, but up to Dec. '81 it was utilized only to the extent of 94,475 tons.

In cold storage sector sanctioned capacity was nearly 2 and a half lakh tons. But up to the end of last fiscal year capacity utilization was only 1 lakh tons. In footwear sanctioned capacity was 155.18 lakh pairs but utilization was only 118.89 lakh pairs.

As per sanctioned capacity the country can have 3.41 lakhs electric fans by this time. But latest reports revealed that only 2.60 lakhs fans are available.

In drug and pharmaceuticals sector the government advised the banks to give preference to those projects having proposals for manufacturing basic intermediate pharmaceuticals-chemicals, preferably with foreign collaboration and manufacturing of medicine should include 150 essential drugs as mentioned in the new drug policy.

Meanwhile, a highly placed executive of BSB told me that they require foreign currency amounting to 25 to 30 million US dollars and local currency amounting to Tk 40 to 50 crores to meet the demand of the projects lying with the bank.

It is learnt from a reliable source that the management of BSRS has asked the government to arrange some 20 million US dollars urgently.

INDIAN INTRUDERS REPORTEDLY STILL IN DAHAGRAM

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 28 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Matiur Rahman]

[Text] The Coochbehar district administration of West Bengal has not yet taken any step to take back the intruders from the two Bangladeshi enclaves—Dahagram and Angorpota.

According to the Rangpur district administration, the Indian side did not even respond to the protest lodged with the District Magistrate of Coochbehar by the Deputy Commissioner of Rangpur against the incident of illegal intrusion.

The Deputy Commissioner of Rangpur had lodged a strong protest with the Coochbehar District Magistrate immediately after the forcible entry into the two Bangladesh enclaves of a number of Indian nationals who tried to settle there. The incident occurred in the early part of this month.

The Indian nationals mainly from the neighbouring Coochbehar district had forced their way into Dahagram and Angorpota and erected houses there defying the protest of the local people.

The Rangpur district administration could not take any action in this regard as the two enclaves remained totally cut off because of the lack of passage or corridor what else we could do when the passage or corridor through Indian teritorry to the enclaves is not open to us and the people living in the two enclaves remained virtually stranded there," one dritrict official told this correspondent.

According to reports reaching Dacca, over ten thousand Bangladesh nationals living in the two enclaves have no touch with the mainstream of the country or any link with the local administration because of the non-availability of the Tin Bigha corridor.

The district administration also confirmed that the two enclaves had turned into 'den' of smugglers and miscreants from both the sides thus causing serious concern to the nationals living there.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh Foreign Secretary Ataul Karim was learnt to have discussed the issue on lease-in-perpetuity of the Tin Bigha corridor to Bangladesh with his Indian counterpart K. S. Bajpai when the latter came to Dacca last week.

Both the Foreign Secretaries discussed the matter as it was envisaged in the 1974 Indo-Bangladesh land boundary agreement along with other issues for the forthcoming summit between Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. General H. M. Ershad and Indian Premier Mrs. Indira Gandhi in New Delhi.

It may be recalled here that former Foreign Secretary Humayun Rashid Chowdhury and Indian Foreign Secretary Eric Gonsalves had prepared agreed minutes following their talks in Dacca in November last year on the Tin Bigha issue.

The two Foreign Secretaries had elaborate talks on the issue following the joint statement issued after the meeting of Indian Foreign Minister Narashimha Rao and former Foreign Minister Prof. Shamsul Huq in New Delhi in September last year.

Both sides had discussion on the issue again when Indian Foreign Minister Narashimha Rao visited Dacca in May last.

The Tin Bigha corridor issue became ticklish following the non-implementation of the land boundary agreement signed by the late Prime Minister Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and Indian Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi in 1974 during the former's visit to New Delhi.

Bangladesh immediately after the signing had ratified the agreement by the then parliament but India has not yet ratified it by her parliament.

According to diplomatic circles in Dacca, the Tin Bigha issue might be solved this time when the Bangladesh Chief Martial Law Administrator General Ershad will pay visit to the Indian capital on October 6 and 7.

CORRESPONDENT INTERVIEWS KASHMIR CHIEF MINISTER

[Text] Srinagar, Sept. 20.

The balding, handsome Chief Minister of Jammu and Kashmir, Dr. Farooq Abdullah, has made it clear that neither his Government nor the ruling National Conference Party could afford the luxury of a confrontation with the Centre or the Congress (I) within or outside the State.

His sincere and honest endeavour would always be to place the State's relations with the Centre on "a balanced and mature basis on all issues and avoid the type of misunderstandings which used to crop up every now and then in the recent past", Dr. Abdullah said in an interview.

"Our backward State always needs the guidance of Central leaders as well as assistance from the Central Government to rid it of our basic problems", he added.

The 45-year-old Chief Minister said he wanted to give high priority and a new direction to education so that fundamentalist tendencies were discarded by the youth.

No merger: On relations with the Congress (I), he said, he would have no objection to an electoral alliance or understanding between the National Conference, of which he is the president, and the Congress (I) for the coming elections to the 76-member State Assembly. But it was not possible for him or Mrs. Gandhi to have a merger of the two parties, even though both were wedded to the same principles and ideals of secularism, socialism and democracy.

Mrs. Gandhi, he said, was as keen on retaining the separate identity of her party in the State as he was with regard to his own party. The National Conference, Sheikh Abdullah had said in his will, "is the only guarantee of their identity and only legacy". This must be preserved.

Dr. Abdullah said it was for the Congress (I) in the State or Mrs. Gandhi to decide on the type of ties they wanted to have with his party. If the ruling National Conference and the Congress (I) could have mutual understanding and cooperation, it was bound to weaken communal parties in the State. The State could not afford "communal" parties like the Jamait-i-Islami and its youth wing Jamait-i-Tulba and the RSS to raise their ugly head.

Dr. Abdullah made it clear that he did not have in mind the kind of cooperation from the State unit of the Congress (I) which it had offered to his father, Sheikh Abdullah in February 1975 at the time of his return after finalisation of a new accord between him and Mrs. Gandhi. At that time, the Congress party, though having an absolute majority in both Houses of the State legislature, promised unconditional support to him to take over as Chief Minister but then backed out and finally withdrew support in April 1977. This resulted in the downfall of the Sheikh Government and imposition of Governor's rule in the State. Dr. Abdullah was confident that his continued close relationship with Mrs. Gandhi would enable him to solve any problem that may be created by the local unit of the Congress (I).

"I consider myself lucky that I can seek Mrs. Gandhi's advice whenever I need it as I used to turn to my late father".

Fight against corruption: For an electoral alliance with the Congress (I), his only condition would be that the party should give its ticket for the Assembly elections, only to those who had a "clean record" as he himself would be doing in the case of his party candidates. He said he would not give party nomination to any of the 21 members of the Sheikh's Council of Ministers against whom there were corruption charges.

His Government has, in fact, decided to set up special courts to try corrupt Ministers, former Ministers and officials. He was also setting up a special cell in the Government to receive complaints of corruption against those in public life as well as the bureaucracy. If there was a prima facie case, the complaint would be placed before the special court.

Dr. Farooq Abdullah warned elements which he said, had once again started raising the demand for abrogation of Article 370 of the Constitution. These elements, within and outside the State were doing a great disservice to the country. Abrogation of the Article, which guarantees a special status to Jammu and Kashmir would be resisted by each and every Kashmiri at any cost, he said. If the Article was tampered with, divisive forces in the State might get the upper hand.

Assembly Speaker: The National Conference candidate Mr. A. R. Rather will be elected unopposed Speaker of the Assembly tomorrow, report UNI, PTI. Only Mr. Rather's nomination papers were received by the Assembly Secretariat till noon today, the deadline. The formal announcement will be made tomorrow.

The post had fallen vacant following the induction of Mr. Parmanand into the Council of Ministers.

CPI-M POLITBURO PROTESTS ACTION ON TRIPURA

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 21.

The politburo of the CPI (M) on Tuesday protested against the declaration of certain parts of Tripura as a disturbed area by the Union Government.

In a statement, it said the Tripura Chief Minister, Mr. Nirpen Chakraborty, had declined to endorse the Centre's suggestion that he agreed to the move.

The Chief Minister felt that "this extraordinary step would put serious obstacles in the political mobilisation of the people against the forces of destabilisation."

"Tripura is the only State in the northeastern region where separatist and divisive forces have been kept in check, mainly because of the CPI (M)'s untiring work to maintain the unity of the tribal and non-tribal people."

The politburo said the Centre had, earlier, rejected the State Government's request for a CRP battalion to assist it in maintaining law and order.

"This makes it clear that the Centre is interested in riding roughshod over the State Government rather than preserving law and order through it."

The politburo noted that the Tripura PCC (I) and its allies had been using one pretext or the other to bring the State under Central rule at least before the Assembly elections due in a few months.

"The CPI (M) had warned when the Disturbed Areas Act was passed that it would be used to curtail the powers of State Governments. This is what has been done in Tripura now against the Left Front Government of that State," it said.

DELHI STATES POSITION ON STATES' POWERS

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 21.

The Centre is not prepared to accept the Akali Dal (Longowal) plea for referring the question of States' autonomy to a Commission, because that would "open Pandora's box," as an authoritative source put it.

Through indirect hints, the Akali Dal (L), which had launched an agitation in Punjab, conveyed its willingness to resume discussions, if the Centre agreed to refer the autonomy issue as also the demand for inclusion of Punjab of Punjabi-speaking areas of adjacent States to two commissions. The Centre left the Akalis in no doubt about its negative reaction.

Apart from the fact that the present arrangement was considered satisfactory, the Centre felt that, by re-opening the issue, it would be creating fresh complications for itself, especially in relation to Tamil Nadu, West Bengal and Jammu and Kashmir.

An official note, which spelt out the Government of India's stand on Centre-State relationship said "The States are in no way dependent on the Union for the exercise of their legislative and executive authority in the sphere assigned to them if it does not infringe the sphere of the authority of the Union. The Constitution, while providing maximum possible autonomy to the State, places in the hands of the Centre adequate powers to ensure the unity and integrity of the country. The Constitution thus strikes a fair balance between the claims of the Centre and the States."

The note defended the powers of the Union to ensure compliance with laws made by Parliament, to issue directions to States in regard to maintenance of the means of communications, railways, etc. and other matters like welfare of the Scheduled Castes and instruction in mother tongue, and said: "It is essential that the Union should have the powers to give directions to the States and this cannot be termed as infringement of powers provided to the States under the Constitution. It is also the duty of the Union to protect the State against external aggression and internal disturbances and to ensure that the Government of every State is carried on in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution."

Cordial relations: Dealing with the efforts of the present Government to maintain cordial relations with all the States, it said: "maximum possible assistance to the State Governments, including financial and police personnel, has been provided by the Centre as and when needed. The Central Government has scrupulously refrained from interfering in any way with the legislative and executive authority of the State Governments in spheres assigned to them under the Constitution. The Central Government has never adopted any discriminatory or unsympathetic attitude towards any State Government irrespective of the party in power in that State."

The provisions concerning financial relations between the Centre and the State, it said, were designed with great care and circumspection and had stood the test of time. "They have enough flexibility for reconciling conflicts of interests that may arise from time to time between the Union and the constituent units. The financial jurisdiction of the Centre and the States has been demarcated on sound economic principles."

ANALYST NOTES EFFORT TO PROMOTE INDO-U.S. TIES

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 21.

There are various moves afoot for keeping up the tempo of improvement of Indo-American relations in the wake of the Prime Minister's recent visit to Washington.

The U.S. Secretary of State, Mr. George Shultz, will pay a visit early next year to attend the much postponed ministerial level meeting of the Indo-American joint commission.

The U.S. Vice-President, Mr. George Bush, will also be visiting India some time next year to pave the way for a visit by President Reagan himself before the end of his term.

A major Indo-American seminar is being planned for early January in connection with the Roosevelt centenary to recall his sympathy and support for the Indian independence movement. Many distinguished Indian and American scholars, including some leading U.S. senators, are expected to take part in it.

A number of U.S. business delegations are expected to visit India during the next few months to discuss the possibilities of investment and technology transfer in some of the key sectors where India in need of foreign collaboration. The Finance Minister, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, met several company executives and investment bankers in New York and Washington, on his way back to India from the IMF and World Bank meetings, to spell out the opportunities for more U.S. investment.

The Finance Ministry has already begun the next budget exercise with some broad projections of the steps that have to be taken to carry forward the policy of liberalisation. A lot of emphasis is being laid in official circles on better fiscal management during the next year, when inflationary pressures are expected to build up again.

The Indian and U.S. governments have lately been giving some serious thought to the removal of irksome restrictions on import-export trade by liberalising quotas and tariffs within the limits of their policies and obligations. As India's largest trading partner, the U.S. is in a position to help the country to step up its exports.

The Government of India is appreciative of the attitude adopted by the U.S. at the Toronto conferences on the question of external assistance to developing States. Despite its reservations on the aid question, the U.S. did not go out of its way to embarrass India in any way by questioning the validity of its claims to a larger slice of international assistance.

The nuclear question, no doubt, remains a recurring irritant in Indo-American relations but after passing the buck to France, the U.S. is not involving itself in the current Indo-French parleys on the safeguards issue.

SUPREME COURT JUDGES ON WORKERS' RIGHTS, WAGES

[Text] The following Supreme Court dicta and observations have been culled by our Legal Correspondent from a recent judgment of the court (W.P. No. 8143 of 1981):

WE (the Supreme Court) may point out with all the emphasis at our command that whenever any fundamental right enacted in Articles 17 (abolition of untouchability) or 23 (prohibition of traffic in human beings and forced labour) or 24 (prohibition of employment of children in factories, etc.) is being violated, it is the constitutional obligation of the State to take the necessary steps for the purpose of interdicting such violation and ensuring observance of the fundamental right by the private individual who is transgressing the same.

Of course, the person whose fundamental right is violated can always approach the Court for the purpose of enforcement of his fundamental right, but that cannot absolve the State from its constitutional obligation to see that there is no violation of the fundamental right of such person, particularly when he belongs to the weaker section of humanity and is unable to wage a legal battle against a strong and powerful opponent who is exploiting him.

The Union of India, the Delhi Administration and the Delhi Development Authority must therefore be held to be under an obligation to ensure observance of the various labour laws by the contractors (in relation to workmen employed in the construction of various projects connected with Asian Games) and if the provisions of any of these labour laws are violated by the contractors, the petitioners vindicating the cause of the workmen are entitled to enforce this obligation against the Union of India, the Delhi Administration and the Delhi Development Authority by filing the present writ petition.

Where a person is suffering from hunger or starvation, when he has no resource at all to fight disease or to feed his wife and children or even to hide their nakedness, where utter grinding poverty has broken his back and reduced him to a state of helplessness and despair and where no other employment is available to alleviate the rigour of his poverty, he would have no choice but to accept any work that comes his way, even if the remuneration offered to him is less than the minimum wage.

He would be in no position to bargain with the employer; he would have to accept what is offered to him. And in doing so he would be acting not as a free agent with a choice between alternatives but under the compulsion of economic circumstances and the labour or service provided by him would be clearly 'forced labour' (prohibited under Article 23 of the Constitution).

There is no reason why the word 'forced' should be read in a narrow and restricted manner so as to be confined only to physical or legal 'force' particularly when the national charter, its fundamental document, the Constitution has promised to build a new socialist republic where there will be socio-economic justice for all and everyone shall have the right to work, to education and to adequate means of livelihood.

The Constitution makers have given us one of the most remarkable documents in history for ushering in a new socio-economic order and the Constitution which they have forged for us has a social purpose and an economic mission and therefore every word or phrase in the Constitution must be interpreted in a manner which would advance the socio-economic objective of the Constitution.

It is not unoften that in a capitalist society, economic circumstances exert much greater pressure on an individual in driving him to a particular course of action than physical compulsion or force of legislative provision. The word 'force' must therefore be construed to include not only physical or legal force but also force arising from the compulsion of economic circumstances which leaves no choice of alternatives to a person in want and compels him to provide labour or service even though the remuneration received for it is less than the minimum wage.

We (the Supreme Court) are therefore of the view that where a person provides labour or service to another for remuneration which is less than the minimum wage, the labour or service provided by him clearly falls within the scope and ambit of the words "forced labour" prohibited under Article 23. Such a person would be entitled to come to the (Supreme) Court for enforcement of his fundamental right under Article 23 by asking the Court to direct payment of the minimum wage to him so that the labour or service provided by him ceases to be 'forced labour' and the breach of Article 23 is remedied.

It is therefore clear that when the petitioners alleged that minimum wage was not paid to the workmen employed by the contractors, the complaint was really in effect and substance a complaint against violation of the fundamental right of the workmen under Article 23.

* * * * *

The Union of India in its affidavit in reply admitted that there were certain violations committed by the contractors but hastened to add that for these violations prosecutions were initiated against the errant contractors and no violation of any of the labour laws was allowed to go unpunished. The Union of India also conceded in its affidavit in reply that Re. 1/- per worker per day was deducted by the 'jamadars' from the wage payable to the workers with the result that the workers did not get the minimum wage of Rs. 9.25 per day, but stated that proceedings had been taken for the purpose of recovering the amount of the shortfall in the minimum wage from the contractors.

No particulars were however given of such proceedings adopted by the Union of India or the Delhi Administration or the Delhi Development Authority.

It was for this reason that we (the Supreme Court) directed by our order dated May 11, 1982 that whatever is the minimum wage for the time being or if the wage payable is higher than such wage, it shall be paid by the contractors to the workmen directly without the intervention of the jamadars and that the jamadars shall not be entitled to deduct or recover any amount from the minimum wage payable to the workmen as and by way of commission or otherwise.

We (the Supreme Court) would also direct in addition that if the Union of India or the Delhi Administration or the Delhi Development Authority finds — and for this purpose it may hold such inquiry as is possible in the circumstances — that any of the workmen has not received the minimum wage payable to him, it shall take the necessary legal action against the contractors whether by way of prosecution or by way of recovery of the amount of the shortfall.

We (the Supreme Court) would also suggest that hereafter whenever any contracts are given by the Government or any other governmental authority including a public sector corporation, it should be ensured by introducing a suitable provision in the contracts that wage shall be paid by the contractors to the workmen directly without the intervention of any jamadars or thekadars and that the contractors shall ensure that no amount by way of commission or otherwise is deducted or recovered by the jamadars from the wage of the workmen.

Since it would not be possible for this (Supreme) Court to take evidence for the purpose of deciding this factual dispute (on the question of violation of other labour laws by contractors) between the parties and we (Court) also wanted to ensure that in any event the provisions of these various laws enacted for the benefit of the workmen were strictly observed and implemented by the contractors, we by our order dated May 11, 1982 appointed three ombudsmen and requested them to make periodical inspections of the sites of the construction work for the purpose of ascertaining whether the provisions of these labour laws were being carried out and the workers were receiving the benefits and amenities provided for them under these beneficent statutes or whether there were any violations of these provisions being committed by the contractors so that on the basis of the reports of the three ombudsmen, this Court could give further direction in the matter if found necessary.

We (the Supreme Court) may add that whenever any construction work is being carried out either departmentally or through contractors, the Government or any other governmental authority including a public sector corporation which is carrying out such work must take great care to see that the provisions of the labour laws are being strictly observed and they should not wait for any complaint to be received from the workmen in regard to non-observance of any such provision before proceeding to take action against the erring officers or contractors, but they should institute an effective system of periodic inspections coupled with occasional surprise inspections by the higher officers in order to ensure that there are no violations of the provisions of labour laws and the workmen are not denied the rights and benefits to which they are entitled under such provisions and if any such violations are found, immediate action should be taken against defaulting officers or contractors. That is the least which a government or a governmental authority or a public sector corporation is expected to do in a social welfare State.

IMPORTANCE OF DEFENSE COOPERATION WITH U.K. TOLD

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

NEW DELHI, Sept. 22.

The British Defence Minister, Mr. John Nott, who is now on an official visit to India, has been exploring the prospects for long-term Indo-British cooperation in this highly sophisticated sphere involving the very latest technological advances.

The proposed cooperation relates not only to supply of the latest equipment and its indigenous manufacture under licence, but also research and development of the next generation weaponry involving a major breakthrough in the adaptation of micro-electronics for push-button warfare, revolutionising the very concept of modern defence.

Hitherto, the main accent has been on the acquisition and progressive manufacture of equipment in current use or in the process of being replaced by more advanced weapon systems. None of the big powers which has had a defence supply relationship with India has so far come forward with an offer to associate this country actively with the development of any new weapon.

Long-term cooperation: The British Defence Minister has indicated his country's readiness to embark on joint projects that would take India into the realm of push-button warfare before the turn of the century, if it is prepared to embark on long-term cooperation with Britain.

The implication is that, since any such sharing of scientific skills and pooling of technological resources would inevitably involve security problems, India must choose its friends carefully and put greater faith in them on a long-term basis without deviating from the chosen direction.

The British maintain that, though they are no longer a major military power, they nevertheless retain the ability and experience to keep abreast of other countries like the United States and the Soviet Union in the application of scientific knowledge for defence purposes.

The United Kingdom is no less advanced, it is claimed, in several key sectors that are vital for the development of new weapon systems like designing of new combat aircraft and development of missiles that can detect and destroy in-coming bombers from a distance of several hundred kilometres, high-speed naval boats for electronic warfare and field weapons of revolutionary design for use by land forces.

Vacillation is costly: In these days of rapidly changing strategic concepts and crippling defence burdens, no country can afford the luxury of vacillating over the choice of the options open to it. India has paid dearly by delaying decisions, whatever the reasons for procrastination. The Jaguar deal is a striking example of what some defence experts have described as a good decision that got delayed for years for no valid reason and in the process lost a part of its relevance.

The IAF should have gone in for the Jaguar, so the argument runs, at least five or six years earlier and got its domestic production into stride. Instead of embarking on this deal when Britain and France were already engaged in developing much more advanced and versatile aircraft for interceptory and interdictory roles.

Whither Jaguar programme?: The fact that more advanced air craft were being inducted into the American and Soviet, or British and French, airforces did not make the Indian choice of the Jaguar any less relevant in its particular geostrategic context. So the whole controversy now rests on whether India should be content with the 40 fully assembled and 45 to be locally assembled Jaguars, or embark on a manufacturing programme to gain the necessary skills in the production of modern combat aircraft.

The choice that India has made but not officially announced yet, is to assemble another 31 Jaguars with partly imported and partly locally fabricated components, taking the total acquisition to 116 aircraft. It is difficult to define at this stage the degree of "indigenisation" in the lingo of the defence production experts, but all the critical components will have to be imported from Britain.

The British Defence Minister, who had wide-ranging discussions in Delhi on the future of Indo-British defence cooperation is leaving for Bangalore tomorrow to have a look at the high level of proficiency displayed by Indian technicians of HAL in organising the Jaguar assembly line with imported equipment. And the British Aerospace engineers feel India can assume the responsibility for producing more and more parts as the assembly of these aircraft progresses to the stage at which it could think in terms of partial manufacture.

JAMMU, KASHMIR GOVERNOR COMMENTS ON RESETTLEMENT BILL

Madras THE HINDU in English 24 Sep 82 p 7

[Text]

SRINAGAR, Sept. 23.

The Jammu and Kashmir Governor, Mr. B.K. Nehru has suggested to the State legislature that it amend the controversial Resettlement Bill to make it consistent with the correct constitutional position.

The Speaker, Mr. A.R. Rather read out in the House today the message he had received from the Governor.

While returning the Bill Mr. Nehru suggested that certain "unintended" consequences of some provisions of the Bill be removed.

Legal lacunae

The Governor said the Bill suffered from legal lacunae and was infructuous. The State had no powers to legislate in the matter.

The Law Minister, Mr. P.L. Handoo laid on the table of the House a copy of the Bill as returned by the Governor. The two Houses of the legislature had passed the Bill in their last session at Jammu.

Mr. Nehru said there were no doubt many cases of hardship of former permanent residents who, in their old age or for other family reasons, wish to return permanently to the State, who are not security risks and who had under the existing laws, not been permitted to do so.

He, however, felt it was possible that on further study, it might appear that fresh legislation for the purpose was not necessary.

Mr. Nehru said that all such cases could be dealt with under Section 5(1) (A) of the Indian Citizenship Act, 1955, the procedure under which was simple and expeditious.

"To the persons thus regaining Indian citizenship, or gaining it for the first time (as in the possible cases of wives, widows and descendants), can be restored (or granted for the first time) the rights of a permanent resident, which the State Government was perfectly entitled to do by amendment, if necessary, of the existing laws on the subject," he said.

All such actions of amendment, even if inconsistent with the Fundamental Rights, would be protected by Article 35(A) of the Constitution.

'Unintended consequences'

Referring to the unintended consequences of the Bill, Mr. Nehru said the Bill, as it stood, would entitle any person who had migrated to Pakistan to return to the State (and to India) provided he satisfied four conditions namely.

(1) that he migrated to Pakistan (at any time) after March 1, 1947; (2) that he wished to come back to the State permanently; (3) that he was a State subject before May 14, 1954, or is a descendant, wife or widow of such State subject and (4) that he is willing to swear allegiance to the Constitution of India and of the State.

This simple provision, he said, would have the following consequences which the legislature did not perhaps intend:

1. Persons who may have deliberately and voluntarily migrated to Pakistan, settled there, taken Pakistani citizenship, appropriated evacuee property, served in the Pakistani civil or armed services, fought against India or committed other treasonable acts against the country can, at any time of their choosing, return to India (and to the State) and settle here "as a matter of legal right."

2. Not only the migrant but his wives, widows, or descendants who may have been born, or may hereafter be born in Pakistan and who may never have been Indian citizens (and therefore never been State subjects — for in order to be a State subject, one has first to be an Indian citizen) will have the right for all time to come to settle in the State.

3. As the returnee has only to satisfy the competent authority that he has the "intention" to settle permanently in the State and as there is no method to keep him forcibly here, there is nothing to prevent his return to Pakistan (or migration elsewhere) when he has sold his original property (evacuee property which is being held for him by the custodian of evacuee property) or received such compensation in lieu thereof as he may be entitled to from the State.

4. As the Bill makes no provision for checking the antecedents of an applicant, it makes it possible for spies, saboteurs and foreign agents to come and settle in the State as a matter of legal right.

5. The provisions of the Bill itself cannot in practice facilitate the return from Pakistan of those desirous of settling in the State as it is the Central Government alone which controls entry into the country.

The Bill was therefore infructuous, the Governor said.

Misunderstanding

He said "the Bill seems to be based on a misunderstanding of the legal and constitutional effects of Section 6 of the Constitution of Jammu and Kashmir and the second proviso to Article 7 of the Constitution of India, from which the powers to enact a measure of this kind are sought to be drawn.

"The subject matter of this Bill is concerned with the following items in List 1 of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution of India:

"Entry No. 19: Admission into and emigration and expulsion from India, passports and visas.

Entry No. 17: Citizenship naturalisation and aliens.

Entry No. 1: Defence of India and every part thereof including preparation for defence and all such acts as may be conducive in times of war to its prosecution and after its termination to effective demobilisation.

Entry No. 10: Foreign affairs: All matters which bring the Union into relation with any foreign country."

The items lie in the exclusive domain of Parliament. The State has no powers to legislate on these subjects. This position was recognised as early as 1950 in the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order 1950 and "is now embodied in Section 5 of the State Constitution.

He said Section 6 of the State Constitution did not provide authority for the proposed law, as that Section "prescribes only who shall be the permanent residents of the State. It states clearly that the condition precedent to being a permanent resident of the State is that the person concerned must be a citizen of India or deemed to be a citizen thereof.

Sub-section 2 of Section 6 only confers the right of permanent residence of the State on a certain class of persons who would have lost this right but for this provision.

It does not confer on the legislature any powers to legislate on the citizenship of such subjects, which is even otherwise beyond the domain of the State.

Mr. Nehru said that the second proviso to Article 7 of the Indian Constitution also did not provide authority for the proposed law, as the proviso must be read with the main provision and the first proviso and with the other Article of part second of the Constitution (which applies in toto to Jammu and Kashmir), namely, Article 5 to 7 which together form the corpus of the constitutional provision of citizenship.

The structure of part second is that Article 5 defines who shall be a citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution. Under the definition in Article 5, even those who migrated to Pakistan would continue to be Indian citizens but Article 7 excludes those who migrated after March 1, 1947, from the benefits of citizenship.

The first and second provisos to that article exclude the exclusion. The effect, consequently, is that those who migrated to Pakistan after March 1, 1947, will be deemed to be Indian citizens under Article 5 at the commencement of the Constitution — January 26, 1950 — provided they return to India under a certificate of permanent return of resettlement.

In the case of the rest of India, the competent authority to grant this certificate is the Central Government. In the case of permanent residents of Jammu and Kashmir, it is the Government of that State.

The Governor has said the grant of this certificate only enables its receiver to be deemed a citizen of India by virtue of Article 5 at the commencement of the Constitution of India.

If, however, he chooses at any time voluntarily to accept foreign nationality (including that of Pakistan), he loses the citizenship of India under Article 5, which was reconferred on him by the provisos to Article 7.

Consequently, a person who has, at any time, accepted Pakistani nationality, and wishes to regain Indian nationality, cannot do so under Article 7, but must do so under a law or laws enacted by Parliament under Article 11.

Mr. Nehru had discussed the Bill with the Chief Minister, Mr. Farooq Abdullah before returning the legislation to the State legislature for reconsideration.

According to Raj Bhavan sources, he had informed the Chief Minister that he was returning it. — UNI.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF FRENCH FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER

Indo-French Committee Meeting

Madras THE HINDU in English 2 Oct 82 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Oct. 1.

India has proposed to France to set up units to make components and ancillaries in this country and buy back the production for its use or export to third countries. India has also suggested that France send two or three purcahse missions.

The proposals were made by the Union Commerce Minister, Mr. Shivraj Patil, at the meeting of the Indo-French joint committee on economic, technical and commercial cooperation today.

The French Foreign Trade Minister, Mr. Micheal Jobert, responded by calling for more meaningful and imaginative cooperation between the two countries in the field of trade and setting up of joint ventures both in India and in third countries.

Adverse trade balance: The meeting discussed the whole range of Indo-French economic cooperation. Mr. Patil expressed concern over India's growing adverse trade balance with France. He wanted France to take note of the balance of payments difficulties and purchase more from India.

Mr. Patil informed the French Minister about the special provisions made for units to be set up in the free trade zones and also 100 per cet export-oriented units. He suggested that major French companies might be persuaded to avail of this facility.

Mr. Patil felt that the process of technology-transfer from France to India could be given the necessary impetus and dynamism if there was a permanent machinery for promoting it. This machinery could be provided by any one of the existing organisations or a new one with offices in France and India. It could be provided with technical assistance by any French agency in the task of identifying the micro-sectors and potential partners for such collaborations.

Relations with EEC: Referring to Indo-EEC relations, Mr. Patil said there were differences in the EEC to some of India's suggestions, particularly in regard to the access to European investment bank funds, participation in projects financed by the bank and the level of EEC aid. India expected that with the growing bilateral Indo-French relations, Paris would be able to exercise a positive influence over the EEC in these matters. He urged the French Minister to look into this issue.

Mr. Jobert took note of India's views on various issues and called for a more effective implementation of the agreements entered into earlier.

It was noted at the meeting that January 1980 marked a water-shed in Indo-French relations in many ways, when many protocols were signed including the one for setting up the aluminium complex in Orissa. A number of French firms were active in this country and some major projects were entrusted to some of them even without recourse to global tender and international competition. The bilateral cooperation would begin to have significant impact in the coming two to three years. Mr. Patil said.

The French delegation will visit Bombay tomorrow and have discussions with businessmen and industrialists.

Jobert Addresses Businessmen

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 3 Oct 82 p 10

[Text]

BOMBAY, October 2: Mr. Michel Jobert, French foreign trade minister, today assumed Indian businessmen greater economic co-operation by France. Whatever hesitancy had been experienced in the past to participate in India would disappear soon, he stated.

Addressing a luncheon meeting organised by the Indo-French Chamber of Commerce and Industry here today, Mr. Jobert said considerable changes had taken place in France facilitating more economic co-operation between her and India.

Earlier, Mr. Harish Mahindra chamber president, welcomed the guest and hoped for continued French interest in India. He, however, observed that the French interest in Indian private sector had been rather disappointing.

Various aspects of Indo-French economic co-operation and measures to widen the range of trade participation were discussed at the meeting between leading Indian businessmen and the 20-member French trade delegation consisting of leading businessmen and industrialists in that country. Among the several points that figured in the discussion included a suggestion for more Indo-French efforts for third country projects.

Mr. Sohrab Godrej, chamber vice-president, while conducting the discussion, observed that the advanced, best and sophisticated French technology had not made its sufficient presence felt in India.

REPORT ON RAO SPEECH TO 1 OCT UNGA MEETING

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 2 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] United Nations, Oct 1 (UNI, PTI)--External Affairs Minister P V Narasimha Rao today voiced concern at the 'increased build-up of the military presence of great powers in the Indian Ocean and called for immediate action to check the deteriorating security environment.

In his prepared address to the 37th annual session of the United Nations General Assembly, Mr Rao said that the Colombo conference should be held in 1983 as scheduled and should address itself to this question 'in a forthright manner.'

Mr Rao said theories of balance of power were being advanced to justify the induction of sophisticated arms into the area.

The Colombo conference originally set for 1981 stood postponed at the behest of those who 'are far removed from the area' Mr Rao noted.

India also called the attention of the Assembly to the unprecedented build-up of sophisticated arms in South Asian sub-continent, unrelated either to reasonable needs or threat perceptions and said it pointed to the continuance of strategic consensus situations detrimental to regional independence and harmony.

Mr Rao, however, expressed the hope that the subcontinent would be able to usher in an era of peace which was more comprehensive than the mere absence of war and encompassed relationships of positive friendship and cooperation.

The External Affairs Minister referred at some length to the recent West Asia conflagration resulting in the virtual destruction of Beirut and the 'horrid' genocide of the Lebanese and Palestinian population and squarely placed the blame on Israel.

He told the General Assembly: "It was nothing short of a holocaust, imposed strangely and ironically, by none other than Israel. Ironically again, the withdrawal of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) from Beirut, to save innocent civilians from further suffering and devastation has itself led to the gruesome massacre of Palestinians in Chatila and Sabra. Israel's responsibility, indeed complicity, is self-evident".

Mr Rao added that those who had undertaken to protect the Palestinian and Lebanese civilians in Beirut in the wake of the withdrawal of the PLO must also share the blame for the criminal bloodshed.

The External Affairs Minister urged that the quest for a comprehensive solution to the West Asia crisis should be pursued relentlessly. Immediate steps should be taken at the UN to devise a suitable mechanism for finding a permanent solution. This was the very minimum that needed to be done in expiation of the rivers of innocent blood that had been allowed to flow in Lebanon.

South East Asia

Mr Rao called for the ending of confrontation in South East Asia which alone, he said, could have a welcome impact on the stability and prosperity of the entire region.

Reiterating India's stand on the Kampuchean question, Mr Rao dismissed the tripartite coalition of Prince Norodom Sihanouk as 'an alliance of convenience whose real content is too thinly veiled to need any unravelling' and said its advent should not detract their attention.

In a brief reference to Afghanistan, Mr Rao said in the prospect of success of the UN Secretary-General's effort, India felt gratified that its own approach of finding a political solution stood vindicated. India commended the commencement of the Geneva talks and hoped they would pick up momentum to enter substantive areas.

Non-alignment

Mr Rao told the Assembly India felt honoured to be called upon to host the next Non-Aligned summit in these difficult times. He promised that India would do all in its power to be worthy of the trust which the movement had reposed in his country.

The External Affairs Minister endorsed the UN Secretary-General's concern about the growing ineffectiveness of the UN and said it was painfully obvious that the Security Council, predicated to discharge its responsibilities stood paralysed and immobile because of the inability of the permanent members to rise above their narrow national objectives to harmonise their positions in the cause of peace.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION UNITS EXPANSION PLANS TOLD

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 3 Oct 82 p 7

[Text] NEW DELHI, October 2.

THE defence production units, with an excellent performance recorded in the past year, are poised for expansion in the sophisticated field of electronics.

An avionics factory with an investment of Rs. 32.7 crores will be set up in Sultanpur district in U.P. This unit of Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd. (HAL) will meet the electronic requirements of the Jaguars and the light combat aircraft that may be introduced later.

The project report for the advanced avionics units was prepared more than two years ago, and West Bengal was very keen to have this unit located in the Salt Lake area. The site selection took some time and the final choice fell on Korwa village in Sultanpur district.

Bharat Electronics (BEL) will set up two units, including one for tank-related electronics, in Garhwal district in U.P. and the other in Haryana. The two units approved by the government will involve an investment of Rs. 42 crores.

The Kanpur unit of HAL will take up the manufacture of a light transport aircraft for military and civilan uses and an armed helicopter, both with foreign collaboration.

The HAL unit in Bangalore has already assembled the first of the Jaguars and has two more almost ready, according to Mr. M. C. Sarin, secretary, defence production. The air force was satisfied with the performance of Jaguar, he said.

He told newsmen yesterday that there was a marked improvement in the profitability of HAL during 1981-82. In fact, six defence production units increased their profits from Rs. 29.5 crores in 1980-81 to Rs. 87.1 crores.

MAZAGON DOCK PLAN

The three other units, however, made an aggregate loss of Rs. 19.2 crores, most of which was accounted for by the Garden Reach shipyards and the Mishra Dhatu Nigam which has been set up with an investment of Rs. 124 crores and is now going into commercial production.

The nine public-sector undertakings recorded an increase in their production from Rs. 483.5 crores in 1980-81 to Rs. 813 crores, an increase of 68 per cent. Of course, the performance during 1980-81 was affected by industrial unrest in some units, but the unrest continued for a month during the year under review.

Thus, mainly improved productivity and efficient management contributed to the outsanding performance during 1981-82. The exports went up from Rs. 13 crores to Rs. 24.3 crores.

In the current year, the aggregate turnover is estimated to go up further by Rs. 157 crores to Rs. 903 crores, according to Mr. Sarin.

What is significant, a large share of the production of these companies goes to the civilian sector where the competition is tougher. Bharat Earth Movers, which registered a spectacular increase in turnover from Rs. 87.9 crores to Rs. 221.9 crores, supplies very little to the defence forces.

Mazagon Dock Ltd. has diversified and undertaken construction of offshore oil platforms, saving considerable foreign exchange. The Oil and Natural Gas Commission is being supplied these at competitive prices. BEL also has several products for the civilian electronics sector. It has also entered into the space-worthy electronics production for India's space programme.

Mr. Sarin said that the three non-profit-making units were expected to do better this year. The main reason for the Garden Reach shipyard losses has been a 1975 order for three bulk-carriers for the Moghul lines which was secured on unfavourable terms and which ate up the equity. Steps are being taken to restore the company to health.

ENVOY NOTES INDIAN READINESS FOR BARTER TRADE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 3 Oct 82 p 3

[Text] KUALA LUMPUR, Oct 2 (Bernama-Pool) — India has expressed interest in Malaysia's proposal to look into the possibility of engaging in barter trading with interested countries.

Indian High Commissioner to Malaysia Prakash Shah told a press conference here on Friday that India would be happy to explore the possibility of such trading arrangements with Malaysia.

"In principle, we would not have any objection to any request by Malaysia for such a trade. India itself has had similar ventures with other countries, he added.

Mr Shah was responding to an announcement made early this year by Malaysian Deputy Trade and Industry Minister Lew Sip Hon that the Government was prepared to consider countries which were interested in this form of trading with Malaysia.

Mr Lew had said the Ministry was making a careful study of the barter system in its efforts to upgrade its exports to the under-developed or developing countries.

On India's participation in supplying iron ore pellets and lump iron ore to the sponge iron mill in Labuan, the Indian High Commissioner said that India's state-owned Minerals and Metals Trading Corporation (MMTC) had already made a series of negotiations with the sponge iron mill authorities.

He said India was prepared to make an annual supply of 500,000 tonnes of lump iron ore and another 500,000 tonnes of iron ore pellets to the Labuan mill.

Mr Shah added that the mill had shown "interest" in the type of lump iron ore and pellet iron ore that India was keen in supplying.

India is the major supplier of both types of iron ore to Japan.

Mr Shah also said that negotiation to supply the iron ore to the sponge iron project in north-eastern Malaysian state of Terengganu was underway and was 'progressing satisfactorily'.

He said that eight joint ventures between Indian and local manufacturers were in the pipeline.

One of the joint-venture projects was between an Indian pharmaceutical manufacturing concern and the Ked Ahd State Economic Development Corporation in Sungai Petani.

Mr Shah said that a total of 29 Indian manufacturers had started joint-venture with Malaysians here since 1964.

The joint-ventures generated 660 million Rinnggit (278 million Dollars) in annual turnover last year and provided employment to about 7,850 people, he added.

GANDHI ADDRESSES CONGRESS-I PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 4 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Prime Minister Indira Gandhi on Sunday warned as 'dangerous' steps to throw open the doors to all the aspiring immigrants to return to India sought in the Jammu and Kashmir Resettlement Bill.

Individual cases could be examined for granting citizenship she said while questioning the validity of the terms of the Bill.

Addressing the Congress-I Parliamentary Party meeting on the eve of the Parliament's winter session commencing on Monday, Mrs Gandhi supported her arguments by the opinion of eminent jurists, including Mr N A Palkiwala, who had questioned the legal aspects of the impugned Resettlement Bill.

The so-called Kashmir Resettlement Bill which has been returned by Governor B K Nehru, is slated for reintroduction in the State Assembly tomorrow. If it is passed again, the Governor under Kashmir's separate constitution' has no option but to agree to it.

Mrs Gandhi also expressed her deep concern at the recurrence of communal trouble and asserted the government was determined to put them down.

She said politically-motivated forces were trying to create distrust and uncertainty among the people and exhorted the partymen to take initiative to combat them instead of leaving the task entirely on the government.

Mrs Gandhi also criticised the agitations whipped up by vested interests' on every conceivable issue and warned that these would only affect the government's capacity to tackle the enormous problems facing the nation.

She made special mention of the economic challenges. The financial situation at the moment was very difficult Mrs Gandhi said.

Referring to the international situation, the Prime Minister said it was getting worse because several destabilising forces were at work.

In this context, she spoke with anguish about the recent massacre of innocent Palestinians in West Beirut by Israel. She also lashed out at South Africa's armed intervention in Angola and other neighbouring countries.

India, she said had all along exerted itself in arresting these forces of destabilisation.

In an obvious reference to the arms build-up in Pakistan, Mrs Gandhi said that the induction of sophisticated weapons posed a threat to peace.

She however stressed that India's consistent policy was to work for harmony and friendship with all neighbouring countries.

Expressing her satisfaction at the outcome of her recent visit to Soviet Union Mrs Gandhi said that it had resulted in strengthening bilateral relations and enlarging in strengthening the area of economic cooperation. Like India she said the Soviet Union was also keenly interested in promoting peace.

To safeguard peace, it was essential that no country should interfere in the internal affairs of another, India had all along stressed this point at the international forums the Prime Minister said.

She referred to two major international events which India would be hosting in the next few months--the Asiad and the Seventh Non-Aligned Summit.

The holding of Asiad would add honour and prestige to this country, according to Mrs Gandhi.

As for the Non-Aligned Summit, India agreed to host it in response to the desire of most of the member countries.

CPI RELEASES STATEMENT ON MEERUT VIOLENCE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 4 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Expressing its grave concern over the renewed outbreak of communal violence in Meerut, the Communist Party of India on Sunday attributed it to the 'utter incompetence and failure' of the district administration.

In a statement, the CPI said the administration had allowed a dispute over the ownership of a building which was neither a temple nor a mazaar to go out of the hand and develop into a communal incident.

The statement said it was evident that the spate of communal violence was the result of the activities of the communal forces, particularly the RSS-BJP and the Jamait-e-Islami, fanned by Congress-I MLAs leaders belonging to both the communities. The BJP, by calling for a bandh in Meerut and surrounding areas stoked the communal fire.

Condemning the 'notorious role' of the PAC, the CPI has reiterated its demand for creation of a composite police force and composite district administration to deal with such a situation specially in areas prone to riots. "The Government has so far failed to live up to its promises and recommendations in this respect", the statement added.

Mr Sarjoo Pande, MLC, secretary, UP State council of CPI and Mr Harish Tiwary, president UP Trade Union Congress who rushed to Meerut for an on the spot study of the latest situation have also demanded "withdrawal of notorious PAC and firm action against the RSS and Jamait-e-Islami leaders to curb communal warfare and restore normal conditions".

In a joint statement they said that the 'communal riot in Meerut was preplanned'.

They said that they will submit a report to the UP Chief Minister. Meerut is burning for the last three weeks. If the communal forces are not curbed and dealt with effectively communal disturbances are likely to spread to the neighbouring districts, they added.

Mr Harish Tiwary promised to invite representatives of CITU, HMS, UTUC, AITUC and other trade union centres and industrial federations to take stock of the situation so that the working people unitedly intervene to oppose and curb communalism.

My Syed Hashmi, MP also urged Prime Minister Indira Gandhi to visit the riot-torn Meerut to help restore normalcy there.

In a letter to Mrs Gandhi, Mr Hashmi condemned the PAC role in handling the situation.

He called for the withdrawal of the PAC force and replacing it with the Border Security Force.

OFFICIAL CALLS TRADE GAP WITH FRANCE 'DISTURBING'

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 5 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] India has conveyed its concern over the continuing stagnation in its exports to France and noted that various project contracts awarded to French companies would result in a steep increase in India's imports from France.

The concern was expressed at the third meeting of the Indo-France Committee on Economic and Technical Cooperation which ended its four-day session in the Capital on Monday.

The minutes of the meeting were signed on Monday by the two co-chairmen--French Minister for External Trade Michel Jobert and Commerce Minister Shivraj Patil.

The Indian side at the talks made it clear that since India's ability to maintain its present level of imports would be largely determined by the extent of its capacity to generate foreign exchange earnings, it was in the mutual interest of France and India that the former should examine how it could assist the latter in increasing India's exports.

In this context it was proposed that French companies, especially those looking for major project contracts in India, should be encouraged to set up production units in India with buy-back arrangement for making ancillaries components.

Later, at a press conference in the presence of the two Ministers, Commerce Secretary Abid Hussain highlighted this as the basic thrust of the discussions at the meeting. The French Minister, he informed, had advised to extend our visions far beyond trade ceilings and figures.

Answering a question if India would have to live with the deficit, Mr Jobert said the trade deficit for India was neither "worrisome" nor "catastrophic". In this context he referred to France's enormous trade deficit with Saudi Arabia as it was importing oil from that country. "But we are not making any fuss. We are not complaining to the Saudi authorities," he remarked. He said India was at an advantageous position in the sense that it would be self-sufficient in oil in the next 10 years, a prospect which was not at all bright in the case of France.

He informed that France would send purchase missions to India to identify and buy Indian products of interest to his country.

The meeting sought to identify specific areas of cooperation in various fields.

Mr Jobert said discussions on assistance by a French firm "Merieux" for setting up a polio vaccine project in India were currently continuing and the prospects of its realisation were good in view of the fact that both French President Francois Mitterrand and Prime Minister Indira Gandhi had evinced keen interest in it.

Of special importance was the light commercial vehicle project according to which leading French auto manufacturer "Renault" would collaborate with an Indian private enterprise to produce trucks which could be exported to India's neighbours after some time as an 'Indian product.'

On civil aviation, he said France was prepared to cooperate with India.

In the context of the coming visit of the French President to India, the committee tried to devise measures for establishing model relationship of North-South cooperation.

Both sides agreed to set up an Indo-French working group to promote mutual cooperation in the fields of chemical and telecommunications.

The French side indicated its interest in transfer of technology in the area of mini-computers.

Mr Shivraj Patil said that the omnibus protocol covered many fields including the transfer of technology.

GANDHI MAKES STATEMENT ON RESETTLEMENT BILL

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 5 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] The Centre on Monday referred to the Supreme Court the controversial J and K bill granting citizenship to people of the State returning from Pakistan--hours after the Bill had been passed a second time by the State Legislature.

In the midst of a near unanimous demand in Parliament that the Government act speedily to check a potential threat to the nation's security and integrity, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi announced in both Houses that the President had referred the Bill to the Supreme Court for opinion on its constitutionality.

Affirming that the Bill had ramifications that went far beyond legal technicalities and immediate political consideration--the Prime Minister declared that she and the Government would never tolerate anything that posed a threat to the nation's integrity and security, 'which is paramount and overrides everything else'.

(In Srinagar, Chief Minister Farooq Abdullah declared in the Assembly that though the Bill had been passed again as it stood after being refused assent by the Governor, the Government would not implement it until the Supreme Court had pronounced opinion on its validity. The Chief Minister said the President had a right under clause (1) of Article 143 to refer the Bill to the Supreme Court. With its second passing in the legislature, the Governor can under law no longer withhold assent).

Referring to the passage of the Bill in the State Assembly, the Prime Minister welcomed the new Chief Minister's statement and his assurances. The nation, she said, was aware of the patriotism of the people of the Kashmir and of their commitment to secularism.

"We do not want to do anything which may weaken their resolve" she said in response to impassioned speeches made by members belonging to the National Conference who defended the Bill and charged that doubt was being cast on the loyalty of the people of the State. There was endeavour to have a confrontation' she said.

But, said the Prime Minister, the Bill had serious consequences which the Government could not ignore. Referring to the threat from the arming of Pakistan by the US--pointed out by many speakers--Mrs Gandhi said the Government had raised the matter with the Pakistan Government and with other Governments and peoples. The Government's concern was with India's unity, security. "We have fought for, are fighting and shall continue to fight for this unity and integrity of India--which is paramount and which overrides everything else".

She rebutted allegations by the National Conference members that the issue was being blown out of all proportions and the Centre was playing into the hands of communalists. She said there was no substance in the argument that the Bill was designed as a humanitarian gesture towards those who had been divided from their families at Partition and wanted to come out.

"You want to stop people who want to come back to their homes to die", National Conference member Sharief-ud-din Shariq had asked.

Advice to Sheikh

Mrs Gandhi said the Centre had told the late Sheikh Abdullah that any individual cases would be considered sympathetically. "We do not doubt the people of the State, but want to warn them of the difficulties that may arise", she added.

As she made her statement, the Prime Minister received spontaneous and wide-ranging support from the Opposition, most of whom demanded instant Government action against the Bill, which they said would destroy Indian security by opening the floodgates to spies and saboteurs.

Members from all parties barring the National Conference assured their support to the Government on the issue which affected national security. The National Conference members, while they callenged both the Congress-I and Opposition parties on their arguments, also assured the Government of support in defence of unity and security of the country.

After she read out her statement, Mrs Gandhi answered many supplementaries from the Opposition in which members wanted to know if the Government had known about this private members Bill, and why it had not taken action well in time.

As the subject was raised during zero hour and in special mentions, members alleged that Government could have avoided a confrontation if it had acted in time. One member said the Governor need not have sent back the Bill, but could have just kept it pending.

In fact, according to Mr Advani, Dr Farook Abdullah had himself given such advice to Governor B K Nehru saying that withholding assent and forcing the National Conference to pass the Bill once again would create political problems for him (Dr Abdullah) at the beginning of his term.

Mrs Gandhi admitted that the Centre had come to know about the Bill some time ago though she did not have the exact dates. She said it came to the Government's knowledge first when the Home Ministry wrote to the then Chief Minister, the late Sheikh Abdullah, on an issue of resettlement. The Sheikh had in his reply referred to the private members' bill. The Home Ministry then referred the matter to the Attorney General whose advice was then conveyed to the State Governor. Mrs Gandhi said the Governor had taken legal advice on his own also.

She said she could not comment on the suggestion if the Governor could have just kept the matter pending. She did not agree that the Bill would have been allowed to lapse as had been mooted by some Opposition members who referred to the impending elections and the political capital that could be made out of the Governor withholding assent and sending the Bill back for reconsideration.

"I do not think that the Bill would have been allowed to lapse", she said.

Mrs Gandhi welcomed assurances of support from Opposition leaders, but said even if such assurances had not been made, she would have gone and fought alone in defence of national unity.

Mrs Gandhi earlier held consultations with Law Minister J N Kaushal, Energy Minister and former Law Minister Shiv Shankar and her Principal Secretary Dr P C Alexander and soon after, made a statement in the Rajya Sabha and then in the Lok Sabha.

In her brief statement she referred to Chief Minister Farooq Abdullah's statement on the floor of the State Assembly that under Article 143 of the Constitution of India, the President could refer the Bill to Supreme Court for advisory opinion and his assurance that the Bill would be implemented only if the Supreme Court approved it.

She said the President had decided to refer the Bill to the Supreme Court for opinion.

Mrs Gandhi said it was the Centre's information that the other legal opinion separately sought by the then Chief Minister had also supported the Attorney-General's opinion.

She did not think that the Bill would have been allowed to lapse if the Governor had not sent it back to the Assembly. Even then the matter would have been kept alive.

The Government would have to take note of statements of Pakistani writers and the fact that large quantities of weapons were being inducted into that country.

"We have been consistently talking in a friendly manner", first with Sheikh Abdullah and then with the present Chief Minister, Dr Farooq Abdullah, she said and added that the Centre had told the Sheikh that individual cases where injustice had been done would be considered sympathetically and this was possible under the existing laws.

"We do not doubt the intention of the people of Kashmir. But if the Bill is pursued it would give rise to certain difficulties for the people of Kashmir also and not just for those in the rest of the country".

The Government was aware of communal organisation in Kashmir and other parts of the country which had been making provocative statements from time to time. These should be met politically. Such elements were active outside the country also. There were consistent efforts to appeal to individuals and groups of people.

These were questions which should be met together strongly and politically, Mrs Gandhi said.

Mr Sharief-ud-Din Shariq, National Conference member, assured the Rajya Sabha that Kashmir was and would continue to be an integral part of India. There was no reason to doubt the integrity of the people of Kashmir, who had been second to none in making sacrifices for the unity and integrity of the country, he added.

Mr P Ramamurthy (CPI-M) who rose immediately after Mrs Gandhi finished her statement said the enactment by the J and K Government was "extremely regrettable".

This would open the floodgates of India to 'spies and undesirable elements' and endanger the security of the country, Mr Ramamurthy said.

INDO-BANGLADESH JOINT COMMISSION TO MEET SOON

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 9 Oct 82 p 1

[Text]

NEW DELHI, October 8.

THE India-Bangladesh joint economic commission (JEC) constituted yesterday is expected to meet in New Delhi early next month.

The Indian and Bangladesh leaders during their two days of talks here decide that no time should be lost in the commission launching upon its work to make up for past neglect in this important sphere of bilateral relations.

The commission, at its first meeting, will give directives to the relevant agencies of the two governments to remove the existing bottlenecks in developing trade, especially increasing exports to India from Bangladesh to remove the existing "trade imbalance."

Trade imbalance, however, is hardly the appropriate expression to describe the present state of Indo-Bangladesh trade. In the last few years, flow of goods has been almost entirely in one direction — from India to Bangladesh.

The first task assigned to the JEC is to correct this situation. The leaders of the two countries went to the extent of identifying the commodities whose export from Bangladesh to India can be increased on a long-term basis. Urea, newsprint, bitumen, wet blue leather, special textiles are items Bangladesh can supply to India. India has been importing from distant sources these items all these years when they are available next door.

There is evidence in the joint communique issued yesterday of India's recognition of the fact that the comparatively more developed of the developing countries have a responsibility to help the others to achieve economic advancement.

India has shown keen interest in such ventures by offering to provide credits to Bangladesh to facilitate launching of such projects. It has offered to provide incentives both to private and public sector enterprises to enter into as many of such joint collaborative arrangements as possible.

The units which India has proposed for setting up in Bangladesh are a sponge iron and steel complex, cement and newsprint manufacture, gas-based products, manufacture of carriage, diesel engines for agricultural pumps, textiles and a wide range of small-scale industries products.

A secretary-level meeting of the two countries will be held shortly to review the existing trade relations with the object of expanding trade between the two countries in a more diversified field.

MAHARASHTRA MINISTRY ENLARGED, NEW ENTRANTS SWORN IN

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 13 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] BOMBAY, Oct 12 (PTI, UNI).

All the new entrants — six Ministers, seven Ministers of State and three Deputy Ministers — were sworn in by Maharashtra Governor I H Latif here this evening, expanding the Bhosale Ministry from 19 to 35.

Two other members whose names were announced yesterday — Mr Ramrao Adik and Mr Gulabrao Patil — were not sworn in while Mr Adik will be sworn in tomorrow, Mr Patil has declined to jion the Cabinet as a Minister of State.

The Chief Minister has reallocated portfolios, retaining for himself, home and general administration and temporarily holding charge of finance and irrigation.

Besides Mr Bhosale and his Cabinet colleagues, among others present on the occasion were Chief Justice D J Madon, Sikkim Governor Homi Taleyarkhan, top officials of the State Government and Cong-I leaders.

Mrs Shalinitai, Patil, former Revenue Minister and wife of All India Congress-I Committee general secretary Vasantrao Patil had earlier decided to join the Cabinet after consulting her husband.

Mr Gulabrao Patil, speaking at Sangli said he was firm that he will not join the Bhosale Ministry.

Asked whether he would continue as PCC-I chief, Mr Patil said generally the Chief Minister and the Pradesh Congress president do not come from the same region.

Both Mr Bhosale and Mr Patil hail from western Maharashtra.

He, however, said that he did not want to link up his refusal to join the Ministry with his holding the post of the PCC-I chief. "I will abide by the decision of the party high command", he added.

Besides retaining home and general administration, Mr Bhosale also holds charge of prohibition, excise, urban land ceiling, information and public relations and any other subject not specifically allotted.

In the reshuffling of portfolios, Dr V Subramanian loses finance and Mr Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar, irrigation. Both the portfolios have remained unallocated.

The allocations for the Ministers of State and Deputy Ministers would be made later.

The following are the allocations:

Mr S M I Aseer — jails, wakf and tourism; Mr B M Gaikwad — agriculture, horticulture, labour; Mr Baliram Hiray — public health, family welfare, medical education and drugs.

Mr Surupsing Naik — tribal welfare, forests and social forestry; Mrs Sharatchandrika Patil — education, cultural affairs, technical education and training; Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar — law and judiciary, dairy development, animal husbandry, sports, youth welfare and special assistance.

Dr V Subramanian — planning, including employment guarantee scheme, energy, transport; Mrs Pratiba Patil — urban development, housing, slum improvement, social welfare; Mr Shantaram Gholap — revenue, rehabilitation, khar lands, fisheries.

Mr Bauro Kale — cooperation; Mr N M Kamble — rural development, protocol; Mr N M Tidke — industries, legislative affairs; and Mrs Shalinitai Patil — public works employment, food and civil supplies.

INDIAN-ROK TRADE TALKS IN SEOUL REPORTED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 13 Oct 82 p 7

[Text]

SEOUL, Oct 12 (PTI) — South Korea evinced keen interest in importing India-made automobile parts during recent talks between the business leaders of the two countries here.

The talks, which got underway after several delays, focused on consolidating the economic relations and the trade balance, which is running heavily in Seoul's favour..

In a series of meetings here, during which the two delegations worked together to identify export-oriented Indian products, automobile parts and chemicals emerged as some of the new items, it was learnt.

A high-power delegation of Engineering Export Promotion Council of India left Seoul today, after concluding talks with its counterpart.

Later a spokesman of the delegation told PTI that the two sides were exploring the possibility of setting up joint ventures in India to export automobile parts to South Korea and elsewhere.

A number of measures including setting up of some joint ventures are under bilateral consideration and are likely to take concrete shape, when a high-power delegation of the Federation of Indian Chamber of Commerce and Industry arrives here on 17 October.

The talks between the two delegations will be followed by a meeting of the standing committee of the Indo-South Korean Joint Business Council in Seoul on 5 November.

A spate of meetings and Seoul's interest in importing more from India, are intended to balance the trade, according to a member of the Indian delegation.

It is only a tip of the iceberg says the member and would swell when the multi-million swell when the multi million dollar contracted offshore equipment is delivered to India in the next two years.

LOK SABHA PASSES IMF AMENDMENT BILL 12 OCT

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 13 Oct 82 p 5

[Text]

THE Lok Sabha on Tuesday passed the International Monetary Fund and Bank (Amendment) Bill, 1982 by voice vote after Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee assured that the measure in no way compromised the sovereignty of the country.

Replying to three-hour debate, Mr Mukherjee forcefully denied the Opposition charge that the Government had changed its domestic policies at the dictate of the Bank.

During the debate the Opposition members said that the Bill was violative of the Constitution and it was the direct result of the Rs 5,000 crore loan from the IMF.

The Opposition members' main objection to the Bill stemmed from a provision which sought to delete the referennce to certain provisions of the Income Tax Act and thus remove the existing limitation to furnishing information and data about any person (which include banks, companies, industrial units etc.) beyond a certain point to the IMF.

However, Finance Minister said there was no question of the Government compromising on its rights and its domestic policies because of the loan.

At present 90 per cent of our development outlay was from domestic savings, foreign assistance formed only two per cent of the total gross domestic product, he said and added. only 10 to 11 per cent of the total export earnings was for debt servicing.

Mr Mukherjee said information on balance of payment, prices, exchange control and regulations provided to IMF by the Government were there already in published documents.

He said the country had gone in for the IMF' loan of its own volition to tide over a difficult financial situation and we have to accept certain disciplines of the Bank.

Asked whether the country was in a position to repay the loan, Mr Mukherjee said the country had not gone to IMF on 'stretcher' but stood on its own legs and it proposed to do so while repaying the instalments.

Mr Mukherjee also allayed Opposition apprehension that the Government had reduced the food subsidy at the instance of IMF.

He said though the IMF agreement was reached in November last year, the fertiliser subsidy for 1982-83 was Rs 446 crore as against Rs 386 crore in the previous year. But it was the policy of the Government to reduce the subsidy gradually. We cannot go on paying premium for inefficiency, he said.

COMMISSION STAND ON TECHNOLOGY IMPORT TOLD

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 11 Oct 82 p 1

[Article by L. K. Sharma]

[Text] New Delhi, October 10.

The plea for bringing technology imports under the open general licence (OGL), backed by industry and some senior bureaucrats in the commerce and industry ministries, has not found favour with the government.

It also notes that the restrictive policy on technology imports has not led to any spurt in the use of indigenous technology by Indian industry. "We have only to look at our passenger cars--their cost, their capabilities and their performance to realise that if new technology is not imported, domestic technology does not fill the vacuum."

Exchange Angle

The commission points out that often a ban on the import of technology as such results in the technology being imported on the shape of products.

Thus, a large variety of machinery items gets imported, not because the capacity to fabricate them is lacking, but because the designs, drawings and know-how are not available. This means that the country not only pays for the technology but also the hardware in which it has been absorbed.

The commission favours "a selective liberalisation of present policies and procedures which will result in the technological uplift of Indian industry and eliminate delays in the present case-by-case approach."

The commission examines the imports policy from the foreign exchange angle and says that the fear that through collusion between importer and exporter, larger payments will be made to transfer resources out of India is unfounded. It is so because, with 40 per cent tax to pay, illicit transfer can be made more cheaply through the Bombay blackmarket than through suppliers of technology.

Pleading for liberalisation, the commission says it is a fallacy to believe that a country can become self-reliant by stopping imports. Yet another factor to be taken into account is that when industry seeks to import technology, it wants not only the fruits of research but the know-how, which is born of actual experience in factory-scale production.

The commission favours free import of drawings, designs and other technical data for producing any capital goods out of the capacity already installed in the country. It notes that much of the machine-building capacity, in the public sector mainly, is under-utilised.

INDIANS REPORTEDLY EXPLOITED IN FALKLANDS WAR

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 11 Oct 82 p 7

[Text] London, October 10 (PTI).

Britain's task force employed Indian seamen under "poor conditions" unacceptable to their British counterparts during the recent conflict with Argentina, the GUARDIAN reported.

A luxury cruise liner, used as a hospital ship during the South Atlantic war, employed 124 Asians at wages which were 15 per cent of those given to British seamen.

Only British nationals were supposed to crew British ships requisitioned by the defence ministry during the Falklands campaign, but Asians had to be employed because of poor conditions, according to the GUARDIAN.

A spokesman of the commission for racial equality (CRE) told PTI that the commission had heard of such allegations but no formal complaint had been received by it. It could consider whether a case for racial discrimination could be made out.

While the GUARDIAN described the seamen merely as Asians without mentioning their nationality, the CRD spokesman said he believed that most of them were indians. They had been recruited outside Britain and had embarked in Gibraltar.

The Indian high commission said it had not received any formal complaint, in the absence of which it could not take up the matter with the British authorities.

The shipping line, whose ship is stated to have employed the Asians, when approached by PTI refused to comment and added that the matter was under investigation of the CRE and that it was not a party to the case.

According to the GUARDIAN telex messages from the general council of British shipping and the agreement signed by seamen joining the ship for the Falklands campaign explained why some Asians had to be retained.

"The vessel is 30 years old. Accommodation is shared and not up to present-day standards of comfort or space available...in view of above it has been necessary to retain a nucleus of Asian catering on board...".

In the current advertising for the luxury cruise liner, the customer is told, "Cabin stewards, dining saloon waiters, bar stewards, lift attendants--all behave as if the clock were turned back."

Complainants were quoted by the newspaper as having said that the shipping company was offering cruises on the pattern of the last days of the Raj, with Asians living in poor conditions on low wages.

One of complainants is said to be a former member of the executive of the National Union of Seamen (NUS) who resigned after disagreements about allegations of racialism against Asian seamen.

The NUS still collects a levy of 30 pounds per head from non-British seamen, mostly Indians, employed as cheap labour on British ships, the GUARDIAN said.

The NUS is quoted by the newspaper as having said that it would not call what happened on the ship "discriminatory". The shipping company and defence ministry were responsible, according to the NUS.

CPI RESOLUTION ACCLAIMS MOSCOW VISIT RESULTS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 10 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] The CPI Central Executive Committee has hailed Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's categorical support to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's declaration not to use the nuclear weapons first.

The executive in a detailed resolution on Saturday warmly acclaimed the results of the Prime Minister's recent visit to the USSR.

The CEC which concluded its deliberations after a three-day meeting in the Capital held that Mrs Gandhi's support to Brezhnev proposal "fully corresponds with the peace-loving aspirations of the Indian people" as well as other peoples threatened by a thermo-nuclear war 'at the hands of US President Ronald Reagan and his other maniacal-aides, allies and accomplices.'

The resolution noted that India had not only expressed its willingness to cooperate with the USSR in achieving the goal of cessation of the arms race, general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as well as prevention of nuclear war, "but has gone a step further on its own" to welcome the Soviet declaration as mentioned above.

Maintaining that the visit was not only of bilateral but global significance, the resolution said both the visit and the Joint Declaration issued on its conclusion constituted a new milestone in development of "relations of friendly cooperation between the largest country of the socialist community and the largest country of the non-aligned world, which is shortly going to head the non-aligned movement."

Both Mrs Gandhi and Mr Brezhnev's "resolve to continue to develop and strengthen their friendly relations" on the basis of the Indo-Soviet Treaty of Peace, Friendship and Cooperation, as mentioned in the Joint Declaration," has given a fitting rebuff to the mischievous propagands of certain rightwing bourgeois circles that India is trying to gradually 'distance' itself from the Socialist Soviet Union in order to curry favour with the imperialist USA," it added.

"Strengthening of Indo-Soviet friendship and cooperation is not only a big factor for peace in Asia and the world, but also provides a favourable situation for the development of our internal struggle for a better life," the resolution emphasised.

The resolution was convinced that identification of new forms of commercial relations to which both sides make a fresh commitment 'will be of immense help to the Indian economy in lifting itself out of the morass of worldwide recessionary crisis of capitalism'. Moreover, it felt that this 'simultaneously strengthens our capacity to stand up more firmly to imperialist pressure and blackmail.'

It explained that the Joint Declaration's 'grave concern' over the dangerous situation in the Indian Ocean and united demand for 'dismantling of all foreign military and naval bases in the area,' recognition of 'Mauritian sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia,' as well as the call for 'early implementation of the UN declaration on the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace' had knocked the bottom out of the 'bourgeois propaganda about the so-called 'super-power rivalry' in the Indian Ocean', the purpose of which is to 'cover up the real expansionist designs and actual aggressive activities of US imperialism by equating it with socialist Soviet Union which is consistently fighting for peace.'

Referring to the Declaration's demand for an end to all forms of colonialism and semi-colonialism as well as restructuring of world economic relations on a just and democratic basis and the establishment of a new economic order, the resolution laid special stress on one sentence of the document: 'Both sides favour the ensuring of fair and equitable prices for exports of developing countries.' This sentence had a particular significance for India, it held, because this country was subjected by imperialist countries to a regime of unequivalent exchange on the international commodity market throughout the second half of the seventies due to which India 'is officially admitted to have suffered a loss of Rs 5,000 to Rs 5,500 crores between 1974-75 and 1978-79' that 'compelled it to seek a loan from the IMF for approximately the same amount.'

'After the IMF loan, the situation has become even more unfavourable, inasmuch as the terms of trade with the Western capitalist countries have declined still further, and India is being pushed into a kind of 'debt-trap' in which the government is compelled to contract more and costlier and new loans in order to pay the old loans,' the resolution pointed out.

But, it said, 'relations of economic cooperation and trade between India and the Soviet Union (as also with other socialist countries) are of a fundamentally different nature.' It explained that 'based on the principles of fraternity, equality and mutual benefit, Soviet aid and trade has made 'significant contribution towards India's efforts to achieve self-reliance in various fields,' as the Joint Declaration states.'

The resolution highlighted the decision by the two sides to examine the possibilities for further expansion of cooperation in such areas as ferrous and nonferrous metallurgy, coal and oil, machine-building and power, as also the Soviet offer to build a 1,000 MW nuclear plant in India which, it noted, was already under the Government of India's consideration along with offers to build a new steel and aluminium plant and modernising and expanding some existing plants.

SAUDIS EXTEND CONTRACT FOR STATE-OWNED BHEL

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 10 Oct 82 p 7

[Text]

Saudi Arabia has entrusted for the fourth consecutive year the operation and maintenance of their Jizan electrification scheme to the State owned Bharat Heavy Electricals Limited (BHEL), reports PTI.

The contract for electrification of Jizan region on a turnkey basis was awarded to BHEL in 1977. The Rs 75-crores contract involved construction of 42 MW central power station near Jizan town erection of 180 kms of 33 KV transmission line and 250 kms of 13.8 KV distribution line and a network connecting 8000 consumers.

BHEL has constructed substations at Jizan Sabya, Abu Arish, new hospital and Hudayrah. BHEL was also entrusted the operation and maintenance of two gas turbines of 15 MW each supplied by M[s. General Electric USA, according to a BHEL press release.

As a sequel to this contract, BHEL was further awarded a transmission and distribution extension project of Rs 17.5 crores of electrifying 66 villages around Jizan town. This project is now nearing completion.

The main Jizan power station was put to commercial operation in March 1980. BHEL has been successfully looking after its operation and maintenance since then.

The operation and maintenance contract has been further years was valued at Rs 12.5 crores.

The operation and maintenance contact has been further extended for the fourth year valued at Rs 4 crores. Nearly 200 Indian nationals will be engaged in the operation and maintenance.

The contract was signed recently by engineer Abdullah Ibrahim Al Jrainy, deputy director general on behalf of Saudi consolidated Electric Company and Mr C N Garg, general manager on behalf of BHEL.

Meanwhile, the BHEL has earned a profit of Rs 74 million during 1981-82. Consequent on this, all the three divisions of the BHEL, Bangalore.—control equipment division electro porcelains division and the industrial system group have declared 20 per cent bonus to their employees.

After the takeover of radio and electricals manufacturing company limited (REMCO) and Mysore Porcelains Limited, two sick units of the Karnataka Government in 1976, BHEL established the control equipment division and later in 1980 merged these two units with it. BHEL also took multi-dimensional measures and diversified the product range and successfully led these industries to greater achievements, the press release added.

SUCCESSES IN JOINT VENTURES ABROAD DESCRIBED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 10 Oct 82 p 7

[Text] India, one of the few Third World countries to have established joint ventures beyond its boundaries, now has about 124 such ventures by the middle of the year with an aggregate equity participation amounting to Rs 30.7 crores (about 43.15 million dollars).

According to a study, most of these ventures are located in Southeast Asia and Africa and the rest rather evenly distributed in Europe, the US, South Asia, Australia and Fiji.

More than 80 additional Indian joint ventures are either planned or being implemented in 28 countries. These will have a total equity contribution by Indian capital of $ 58 million bringing the total Indian equity investment overseas to more than $ 101 million.

The range of products undertaken by Indian companies in joint ventures include the pulp and paper industry, paints, wool and textiles, piping for tin mines, viscose staple fibre manufacture, production of electric pumps and diesel engines and precision tools and electronics.

The partners in the Third World include Malaysia, Thailand, the Philippines, South Korea, Singapore, Fiji, Nigeria, Kenya, Mauritius and Indonesia.

The Birla group of companies, the largest, have an aggregate investment of $ 9.75 million and operates in seven countries with 10 ventures. The Tata group, the second largest, has a stake of $ 6.6 million, with four ventures in these countries.

Nine of the top 20 industrial houses operate in 35 ventures with stake of $ 24.84 million. These comprise 57.4 per cent of Indian overseas capital.

The remaining 89 ventures form the balance of 42.6 per cent.

Of the 83 ventures under consideration, 16 account for 72.33 per cent of total equity participation, each with an average of Rs 10 million ($ 1.06 million). The remaining 67 ventures are much smaller, being 11 times less than the top 16.

According to the study, these ventures have an edge in countries which have labour surpluses and are capital scarce. Where the market is limited and where import-substitution forms the development strategy, these ventures have thrived.

STATEMENTS OF CONGRESS-I WORKING COMMITTEE REPORTED

Statement on Elections

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 10 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text]

THE CONGRESS-I WORKING COMMITTEE HAS CALED UPON PARTYMEN TO PREPARE TO FACE THE ELECTORAL BATTLES AHEAD IN SEVERAL STATES.

In a statement issued at the end of a day-long review of the current national and international scene on Saturday, the CWC-I told party workers to rebuff all attempts to weaken their resolve to obtain a thumping victory in the forthcoming Assembly elections.

The Opposition parties, said the committee, had time and again demonstrated "their futility and their irrelevance to the tasks of nation-building and of economic and social development."

The Congress-I was the only party which was formulating and implementing programmes for reducing social and economic inequalities and it was fully confident of resounding victories in all the States going to the polls.

The statement called upon all secular and nationalist forces to join in a common endeavour to fight communal and divisive forces.

Seeking the cooperation of all forward-looking groups in solving national problems, the CWC-I deplored the recent communal riots in Meerut and urged all partymen and like-minded forces to combat resolutely the propaganda of hate indulged in by the RSS and other organisations.

In an obvious reference to the Khalistan movement, and separatist campaigns elsewhere in northeast, the CWC-I said that patriotic citizens irrespective of political persuasions should foil attempts to disrupt hard-won unity of the country. "Solutions of problems is possible only within the framework of a united country," it added.

Recalling the repeated warnings of Pandit Nehru that communalism 'is fascism in the Indian context," the committee called upon 'partymen and other like-minded forces to combat resolutely the propaganda of hate indulged in by the RSS and other organisations,' adding, 'communal harmony is basic to the progress and unity of our great country.'

The CWC-I met in two sessions with Mrs Indira Gandhi presiding at the forenoon meeting. She did not attend the afternoon session as she was indisposed. She opened the forenoon discussion with a review of the national political and economic scene and the recent international developments including her recent visits to different countries.

The CWC-I also initiated a dialogue with the leaders of the States which are scheduled to go to the poll early next year. To begin with, the committee members heard leaders from Karnataka during the day.

Contrary to hopes expressed by an AICC-I spokesman on Friday, the two top dissident Andhra Pradesh leaders, erstwhile Chief Ministers T Anjiah and S Bhavanam, did not turn up during the day. The committee members will hear leaders from Andhra Pradesh on Sunday. Afterwards, leaders from other States like Jammu and Kashmir will meet them.

GAINS OF ECONOMY

The committee noted the splendid performance of the Indian economy and the fresh gains recorded in 1982-83—six per cent rise in industrial production, improved efficiency in public sector and holding in check inflationary trends—but warned that "there is no room for complacency."

The committee noted with concern the adverse weather conditions in several parts of the country which might affect agricultural production. It called for successful implementation of the 20-point programme and for prudent use of scarce resources and efficient management of the economy.

The Committee said. 'Faced with the prospect of inevitable liquidation at the hands of enlightened electorate,' the Opposition had taken recourse to 'blantantly misleading propaganda' about the Congress-I. It treated this 'with the contempt they deserve.'

It said the Congress-I did not fear the campaign of 'calumny' because it had steadfastly served the people. It would continue to do so under the dynamic leadership of Mrs Indira Gandhi.'

It urged all people and groups who might not wish to join the Congress-I to join in the common endeavour of strengthening national unity and to project issues in the larger perspective and to cooperate in solving national problems.

The Committee expressed its profound symoathy for those who suffered because of floods and drought and commended the efforts at relief and rehabilitation.

The Committee pointed out that the Congress-I had to prepare to face the electoral battle in several States. The Opposition parties had demonstrated time and again 'their futility and their irrelevance to the tasks of nation building and of economic and social development.'

It said that the Congress-I 'is the only party that was formulating and implementing programmes for reducing social and economic inequalities. The Committee said it was fully confident of its 'resounding victories' in all the States going to Assembly elections.

A document on the deliberations of the Working Committee released by general secretaries, G. K. Moopanar and Chandulal Chandrakar was almost like a mini election manifesto reiterating the party's commitment to improve the living conditions of the poor, Harijans and Tribals, women and minorities. The commitment had been reflected in the new 20-Point Programme announced by the Prime Minister, it said.

POLL UNLIKELY

Organisational elections in States slated to go to polls early next year are likely to be postponed, adds PTI.

The Congress-I Working Committee at its pre-lunch session on Saturday is understood to have discussed the organisational elections, the process of which has already begun and members felt that the poll be stayed.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, who presided over the meeting in her capacity as the party president, is also learnt to have concurred with the view that the party elections be postponed in the States where special circumstances existed.

She may constitute a small committee of party leaders to look into this question.

A suggestion was made at the meeting that the AICC-I session should be held in December or early January.

The working committee meeting began with an address by Mrs Gandhi. She is understood to have called upon the partymen to fight divisive and communal forces, threatening the country's integrity.

The Prime Minister reportedly told the Working Committee that she consulted Opposition parties on all important issues. She talked to them on issues like the Assam problem and communal riots.

But, she added, some Opposition parties did not see eye to eye with each other on these issues.

AICC-I general secretary Satya Narayan Rao said that the CWC-I was reviewing the economic and political situation.

Besides the Working Committee members, those who attended the meting included, Mr Rajiv Gandhi, Mr Ramrao Adik, Mr Bhishma Narain Singh and Mr Bhagwat Jha Azad.

AICC-I general secretary G K Moopanar told newsmen on Friday that he had asked some of the Chief Ministers and PCC-I presidents to be in Delhi so that the CWC-I could have the benefit of their personal assessments of the general situation in their respective States. They would be called to the meeting only when necessary, he clarified.

When his attention was drawn to the presence of a number of Congress-I members from some States, Mr Moopanar said they might have come to apprise Mrs Gandhi of the general political situation in their respective States.

Asked whether there would be a reshuffle of the Vijaya Bhaskara Reddy Ministry in Andhra Pradesh, Mr Moopanar said it was purely the prerogative of the Chief Minister.

Statement on Nonaligned Summit

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 10 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] The Congress-I Working Committee has expressed the hope that the non-aligned summit slated for March next year in New Delhi would give "a positive lead" and formulate a well-designed programme to resolve political tensions and economic maldistribution in the world.

In a statement adopted at the day-long meeting on Saturday, the CWC-I said that the non-aligned movement should be strengthened and re-invigorated to play its role in restoring to tension-ridden areas "a sense of perspective of peace and cooperation in the interest of world prosperity and welfare".

The committee welcomed the positive results of Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi's recent visits to the USSR, the US, Japan, Mauritius and Mozambique. The visits the statement said, had raised India's stature in the international arena.

The visits provided an opportunity to explain the significance of India's foreign policy and its commitment to the non-aligned movement. The exchange of views between Mrs Gandhi and the leaders of these countries had led to a wider awareness of the dangers of arms race, specially, nuclear rearmament. India's forceful advocacy of nuclear disarmament had won widespread appreciation.

The CWC-I hoped that work for strengthening policies and actions towards global peace and stability would be carried out with vigour by the great powers who have the primary responsibility in this regard.

The committee strongly condemned the brutal massacre of innocent Palestinians in West Beirut by the Israelis and reaffirmed its unflinching support to brave Palestinian people in their heroic fight for their homeland without which lasting peace in West Asia was inconceivable.

ECONOMIC SITUATION

The Working Committee also voiced grave concern over the deterioration in the international economic situation, resulting in rising debt burden, large adverse balance of payments, growing protectionist tendencies and shifts in terms of trade to the detriment of the developing countries.

It called for renewed efforts to find solutions to the problems of the developing countries by restructuring without delay the basic economic, financial and trade relationships between the developed and developing countries.

RELATIONS WITH LENDING ORGANIZATIONS DISCUSSED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 9 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 8.--The Finance Minister, Mr Pranab Mukherjee, told the Lok Sabha that India had expressed its concern over attempts by certain countries to introduce new norms of lending by the World Bank.

In reply to a number of supplementaries during question hour, Mr Mukherjee declined to name the countries exerting pressures on the World Bank for linking the Banks lending to economic returns.

The Finance Minister said the World Bank had not changed the present norms for lending and assured Mr Madhu Dandavate (Janata) that there was no question of India accepting new conditions for lending by the World Bank. He said he was quite hopeful that the World Bank would not yield to the fresh attempts by the countries to impose new norms of lending.

Mr Mukherjee told Mr Niren Ghosh (CPI-M) that 11% of the country's export earnings went into its debt servicing of all foreign loans and not 50% as referred to by the concerned members.

Mr Mukherjee told the house that the Government was selective in recommending projects for loans from the World Bank and assured Mr Satish Agarwal (BJP) that it would be further careful in future borrowings.

The Finance Minister agreed with the BJP members that India's share in credits from the International Development Association declined from 40% to 36%. Originally, India's share in IDA credits was as much as 56%, but it, itself brought it down to 40%, recognizing the needs of other countries, he said. He told Mr Agarwal that India was not opposed to China seeking assistance of the IDA but it wanted its due share. China was not participating in IDA-6 replenishment. But it would do so in IDA-7 replenishment.

Mr Mukherjee assured a CPI (M) member, Mr Amal Dutta that the Government was doing its best to increase exports and reduce imports, the former having registered a rise of 26% so far, in the current year over the last year's performance in the corresponding period.

PTI adds: Mr Mukherjee said that as a result of the anti-inflationary measures, the annual rate of inflation in terms of the wholesale price index had been brought down 22.5% on January 5, 1980 to 14% on January 3, 1982 and 7.6% on January 2, 1982. The annual rate of inflation was 2% for the week ending September 18, 1982.

Meanwhile, the Deputy Finance Minister, Mr Janardhana Poojary, told the Lok Sabha that the introduction of a two rupee coin and re-introduction of 20 paise coins in aluminium-magnesium alloy are among the steps to be taken by the Government to keep down the cost of manufacture of currency notes and coins. The cost of making a five paise coin is 13 paise and 17 paise for a ten paise coin.

While reducing the dimensions of the 10 paise coin as a measure of economy, the mints would continue to mint five paise coins despite its high manufacturing costs, the Minister added.

PURCHASE OF ANTISUBMARINE HELICOPTERS DISCUSSED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 29 Sep 82 p 5

[Text] THE Defence Ministry is now finalising a deal for the purchase of new anti-submarine warfare (ASW) helicopters for the Indian Navy, reports UNI.

The British firm Westland, has submitted a detailed proposal for the sale of their new version of the Sea King helicopters while the French Aerospatiale have forwarded details of their naval version of the Super Puma helicopter.

The technical rounds of discussions for the purchase of these helicopters with the two firms have been concluded.

Teams of experts from both the countries had recently visited New Delhi and besides submitting their evaluation reports also forwarded their final financial bids to the Defence Ministry.

Defence Ministry sources said before making a final decision which is expected soon, it would take into account the performance of the Sea King helicopters in the recent Falklands war and the experience of other navies of the world with the French Super Puma helicopters.

It is understood British Defence Minister John Nott, who held discussions with the Ministry of Defence and Indian naval experts in Delhi last week had taken up the question of sale of the Sea Kings helicopters.

Westland has offered the Sea King Mark-5 helicopter which is an improvement over the previous mark version which is already with the Indian Navy.

The Sea King Mark-5 which has been ordered by the Royal Navy has an uprated engine with a very advanced radar and a super searcher and is fitted with anti-shipping missiles. The British have offered this as a Sea helicopter with the Automat missile.

The French Aerospatiale have offered the medium-sized as 32 Super Puma helicpoter which is capable of anti-submarine warfare and combat against surface shipping. Both missions require twin-engined helicopters. The Aerospatiale claims these could be performed by the Super Puma which can be embarked on smaller surface vessels or can operate from the shore or from larger vessels.

The Super Puma naval version has all the features of a ship-borne helicopter, compact overall dimensions, mutiple equipment capability — tall pylon and rotor blade foldings facilities, deck harpoon, panoramic radar, sling hoist emergency floatation gear.

DEFENDING SEALANES

Sources said the French have offered the Super Puma with the Exocet missiles, the Argentine air force used the Exocet missile for sinking the British destroyer HMS Sheffield in the Falklands war and Pakistan also has the same missile.

Naval experts said "these factors are very relevant to India".

Experts said the acquisition of these helicopters was not only meant to increase the offensive capability of the navy but also to help it take up its added responsibility of defending the commercial sea lanes of the country.

They said the value of exports by India had exceeded Rs 15,000 crores annually and almost the entire cargo of 70 million tonnes is carried by sea. The navy has to ensure all ports of the country function without any outside interference and that merchant ships are safe and have freedom of movement even during hostilities.

GANDHI'S APPROACH TO MOSCOW SUMMIT TALKS TOLD

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 29 Sep 82 p 5

[Text]

INDIA'S approach to world problems as an independent and nonaligned nation was brought to bear on both the summit-level discussions in Moscow and the nine-page joint declaration signed by Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev, according to informed sources in the Capital, says UNI.

While India shared the Soviet concern about the danger of a nuclear war—in the context of a new theory of limited nuclear war propagated in some circles in the United States—it did not endorse the various proposals put forward by the Soviet side because these were made in the context of the arms race between the US and the USSR.

India put forward its own proposals embodying a three-point plan of immediate suspension of all nuclear tests pending their complete prohibition, a freeze on existing levels of nuclear armaments and non-use of nuclear weapons. Mr Brezhnev's offer to be not the first to use nuclear weapons was welcomed as the first step to prevent the use or threat to use nuclear weapons.

In regard to the collapse of detente and the aggravation of international tension, the Soviet side sought to put the entire blame on the United States, China and Pakistan. Mr Brezhnev charged the US with itching for a confrontation with his country, China with colluding with Washington to achieve its hegemonistic ambitions in Asia, and Pakistan with trying to become a conduit of US arms to Afghan rebels and having cost its lot with the American security system, adding that New Delhi should beware of Islamabad's offer of a no-war pact.

Mrs Gandhi avoided any comment, but on China she said India was trying to normalise relations with little progress because of Beijing's stiff attitude on the border issue. But any normalisation would not be at the cost of time-tested Indo-Soviet friendship.

She recalled Mr Brezhnev's own earlier statement during the discussion that Sino-Soviet normalisation would not affect its ties with India, Mongolia and Vietnam. Pursuing the same studied stance, she also reaffirmed her Government's determination to improve relations with Pakistan despite sour experiences in the past since the destinies of the two peoples were bound together.

At least in two public meetings in the USSR, Mrs Gandhi said India wanted to avoid any collision between the two military blocs.

The main reason for India following a mid-course is that it does not envisage for itself any global role. Its basic approach is to nurture and develop further Indo-Soviet relations for mutual benefit and strengthen its efforts along with other nonaligned nations but without getting involved in cold war approach or entanglements.

The sources also drew attention to the greater stress laid in the Moscow declaration on non-interference in one country by another "in whatever form" as an essential pre-condition for co-existence of nations. This is specifically spelt out in the portions relating to South-West Asia and South-East Asia. The wording are such as to cover interference by any power—the Soviets, the Chinese or the Americans.

DETAILS OF NEW TEXTILE ACCORD WITH EEC CITED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 29 Sep 82 p 7

[Text] Brussels, Sept 28 (PTI)--India has signed a new bilateral agreement with the European Economic Community setting quantitative limits for its textiles exports to the 10 EEC countries in a four year period ending with 1986.

The agreement was signed here yesterday.

The EEC, said in a release that the 'conclusion of this agreement with India as a major Asian textile supplier, reflects the good relations based on the India-EEC cooperation agreement, and is considered by both sides as an important achievement which will contribute to the further development of their relations.'

The agreement comprises a number of quantitative limits. It was negotiated on the basis of the multi-fibre arrangement and its protocol of extension of 22 December 1981. For all garment categories, handloom products are now also included in the agreement the European Commission said.

India, along with other major developing country suppliers had been opposing the EEC insistence on retaining unilateral decision making power to regulate the preferential textile imports and talks in June were adjourned specifically because of disagreement on this issue. Apparently, assurances have been given by the EEC that such unilateral action will be taken after due consultations with the Indian authorities. On quotas, India unlike Hong Kong cannot complain because it has woefully fallen short of fulfilling its quotas for many categories under the previous MFA.

Hong Kong, which accounts for nearly 40 per cent of the EEC textile imports from the developing country signatories to the MFA refused to accept the EEC proposals to cut its quotas--up to 12 per cent for what are called sensitive categories and also opposed vesting unilateral powers with the EEC because the MFA does not provide for any such powers. South Korea, Macao, the Philippines, Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia, Brazil and Argentina joined Hong Kong in the walk-out. The EEC said talks with these countries have been suspended, pending a direction from the Council of Ministers.

GANDHI MEETS WITH KASHMIR CHIEF MINISTER 29 SEP

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep 82 p 1

[Text]

NEW DELHI, September 29: A candid and confident Dr. Farooq Abdullah, on his first visit to the capital as chief minister of Jammu and Kashmir, described his 45-minute meeting with Mrs. Indira Gandhi as "nice and cordial."

Asked whether he had discussed the resettlement bill with the Prime Minister, Dr. Abdullah said: "The bill is the property of the house. The future of the bill has to be decided by the house. However, there are more pressing problems than the bill which the state is facing. I discussed some of these major issues with Mrs. Gandhi today."

Though all concerned are tight lipped, it is understood that both Dr. Abdullah and the governor of J and K, Mr. B. K. Nehru, discussed the issue of resettlement bill with the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister also met Mr. D. D. Thakur, former state finance minister, and discussed the bill and the situation in the state, according to sources.

The Centre would like the state to government to go slow on the bill which is to be discussed during the one-day session of the state assembly on October 4. Mr. Nehru had returned the bill recently to the assembly.

Answering a question, Dr. Farooq Abdullah said he had decided to reorganise his party (National Conference) and announce the changes in a few days.

He said he was committed to seeking an early mandate from the people. A decision regarding holding fresh elections would be taken after the assembly session in the first week of October.

Dr. Abdullah also hinted that the parliamentary board of his party would also have to be reconstituted soon.

'MINI-GENERAL ELECTION' PLANNED FOR NORTHEAST

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep 82 p 1

[Text]

NEW DELHI, September 29 (PTI).

THE country will witness yet another "mini-general election" with an electorate exceeding five crores slated to go to the polls to elect their representatives in five state assemblies within the next six months.

The states to elect fresh assemblies are Nagaland, Tripura, Meghalaya, Andhra Pradesh and Karnataka.

Of the five states, assembly elections in Nagaland will be held on November 10 — 18 days before the expiry of the term of the present assembly.

The present term of the Tripura assembly expires on January 23, of Meghalaya on March 13, Andhra Pradesh on March 14 and Karnataka on March 16.

According to current indications, fresh assembly elections in Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka and Meghalaya are likely to be held towards the end of February. But a snap poll in these states in December — soon after the Asian games in Delhi — is not ruled out.

Agartala: The chief electoral officer, Mr, H. Das said that the state election department was fully prepared to hold the poll at any time and he expected the date to be announced soon.

Meanwhile, the chief minister, Mr, Nripen Chakrabarty, told reporters here last night that his government was waiting for the election commission's decision on the poll date.

The CPI(M)-led left front has a strength of 56 in the 60-member house. Of the four members of the lone opposition party, Tripura Upajati Juba Samity (TUJS), one subsequently joined the newly-formed Tripura tribal areas autonomous district council.

PAPER REPORTS GANDHI TALKS WITH THATCHER

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] NEW DELHI, September 29.

SPECULATION over the recent moves for a new beginning in the Sino-Soviet relations figured prominently in talks between the Indian and the British prime ministers here today.

Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, who made a brief stopover in Delhi after visiting Japan, China and Hong Kong, had a 75-minute meeting with Mrs. Indira Gandhi, who also recalled her experience of the recent visit to the Soviet Union.

Mrs. Thatcher and Mrs. Gandhi discussed bilateral economic cooperation in the context of the recent visits by British business delegations and the official visit by the British defence secretary, Mr. John Nott.

Mrs. Thatcher told newsmen before her departure that she and Mrs. Gandhi had exchanged notes about their respective visits to different countries. "We had a lot of views to exchange about how our respective tours had gone."

Mrs. Thatcher said economic cooperation between the two countries was going "very well". "It is always very good to have talks with Mrs. Gandhi," she added.

Asked about the outcome of her talks in China and the future of Hong Kong, Mrs. Thatcher said a joint communique issued at the end of her visit to Beijing reflected their views. She said: "We had a common aim for the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong."

Mrs. Gandhi's principal secretary, Dr. P. C. Alexander, said the two leaders while discussing major international issues, also touched upon the latest situation in West Asia. They also discussed some important bilateral economic matters.

Mrs. Thatcher expressed satisfaction at the agreement on the Rihand power station, the contract for which was being signed in Britain tomorrow.

The National Thermal Power Corporation and the Northern Engineering Industries of Britain would sign the contract for the 1,000-MW. Rihand super thermal station at Newcastle.

The British offer to construct the power station was agreed in principle during Mrs. Gandhi's visit to Britain in March this year. The cost of the British equipment and services for the power station would be covered partly by British grants and government-guaranteed export credits.

A British consortium is also interested in offering equipment for India's new steel plant in Orissa. An earlier proposal for getting this plant erected by this consortium had been dropped.

Mrs. Thatcher, during her discussion with Mrs. Gandhi, also referred to the agenda before the current session of the United Nations general assembly. The British prime minister suggested to Mrs. Gandhi that the non-aligned countries should not take a confrontationist posture at the world forum.

After the talks which were held over a working breakfast, the two sides described these to be very cordial. Mrs. Gandhi was assisted at the talks by Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, finance minister, and Dr. P. C. Alexander. Mrs. Thatcher was accompanied at the talks by the British high commissioner to India, Mr. Robert Wade-Grey and Mr. Coles, foreign affairs private secretary to Mrs. Thatcher.

Mrs. Thatcher was seen off by Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Mukherjee, the foreign secretary, Mr. Maharaj K hna Rasgotra and Dr. Alexander.

The British prime minister, who arrived shortly after midnight by a Royal Air Force plane, was received by Mr. Khursheed Alam Khan, minister of state for tourism, and Mr. Rajiv Gandhi, M.P.

PLANNING MINISTER REPORTS TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 30 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 29.--Shortfalls had been noted in the energy sector and in foodgrain production and construction schedules had not been kept, while costs had been exceeded in certain industrial projects, Mr S. B. Chavan, Minister for Planning, admitted today.

Speaking to members of the Parliamentary Consultative Committee attached to his Ministry, Mr Chavan said that on the whole, the Sixth Plan had conformed to the cost and time framework. The implementing and monitoring machinery, at the Central and State levels, was being activised to ensure full and timely realisation of plan targets.

Referring to the resources position, the Minister said that compared to the original estimates, the financial resources of the Centre were expected to increase. This was mainly from higher contribution of public enterprises (Rs 615 crores), larger market borrowings (Rs 400 crores), improvement in small savings (Rs 40 crores), increased external assistance (Rs 290 crores), yield from additional resource mobilisation measures undertaken during the past two years (Rs 1,953 crores) and fresh measures (Rs 528 crores) announced during the current year.

However, these improvements were likely to be partly offset by lower estimate of receipts from current revenue (Rs 447 crores) and miscellaneous capital receipts (Rs 316 crores). For 1982-83, the budgetary deficit of the Centre was placed lower at Rs 1,371 crores compared to the last annual plan's estimate of Rs 1,539 crores and the revised estimate of Rs 1,700 crores.

In the case of the States, an increase in their resources for the annual plan for 1982-83, compared to the latest estimates for last year, is expected from market loans (Rs 122 crores), small savings (Rs 55 crores), provident fund (Rs 48 crores), term loans from financial institutions (Rs 47 crores) and yield from additional resource mobilization during the past two years (Rs 609 crores).

Against the annual plan target of additional resource mobilization of Rs 676 crores, the yield from the measures already adopted by the States was estimated at about Rs 513 crores. The Minister hoped that the States would take adequate measures to fulfil the targets fixed under the States annual plan for the current year.

Mr Chavan apprised the members of the sectoral performance. He said that while production of sugarcane, oilseeds and cotton had recorded a substantial increase, the level of foodgrain production was below the target. Efforts would have, therefore, to be intensified to reach the target of 149-154 million tons in 1984-95 by stepping up fertilizer consumption, creating additional irrigation potential and bringing larger areas under irrigation, improving the performance of command areas and improving the flow of credit for agricultural purposes.

SUGAR INDUSTRY TOLD TO IMPROVE PRODUCTIVITY

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 29.

The Union Industry Minister, Mr. N. D. Tiwari, today called upon sugar technologists and sugarcane experts to take steps for improving the productivity of cane and reducing the cost of sugar production.

Mr. Tiwari, inaugurating the annual convention of the Sugar Technologists' Association of India, commended the sugar industry's performance this year in achieving 130 per cent capacity utilisation and making the country the world's largest sugar producer.

According to him, the production of 84.5 lakh tonnes of white sugar in the current year meant 9.27 million tonnes in terms of raw sugar, compared to Brazil's production of 8.4 million tonnes and Cuba's 8.2 million tonnes, which so far had been the first and second in the world.

Capacity to go up: Mr. Tiwari said the installed capacity was expected to go up from 64.8 lakh tonnes to 73 lakh tonnes when the 52 new factories licensed started functioning. During the Sixth Plan period more licences were being issued and the capacity would increase further.

To meet the cane needs of all these factories, he felt that cane productivity should be stepped up. The highest average yield achieved was 56.8 tonnes a hectare with an average sugar content of 12.5 per cent in some States, but the productivity had been much below the average figures in individual fields. There was thus scope for improvement in productivity through introduction of scientific practices.

Mr. Tiwari said that in the sugar factories there was scope for improvement in milling methods to extract the maximum quantity of sugar from the cane crushed.

He commended the efforts of technologists to develop low cost bagasse drier which would help reduce the moisture content of mill wet bagasse from 50 per cent to 35 per cent and increase the calorific value. Saving of bagasse, he said, would help sugar industry generate more steam and produce surplus power which could be used to meet the power needs of ancillary units or for limited rural electrification. He also suggested greater use of bagasse for paper production.

Mr. Ranjit Puri, association president, recounted the strides taken by the industry in improving operational efficiency at various stages of conversion from cane to sugar and said that in the context of the problems the industry faced in respect of uncertain cane supply, indifferent quality of cane, small holdings of cane growers, inadequate finance, and high rates of interest one could be proud of the technical standards obtained.

The sugar industry was poised to make available raw material--bagasse--for paper industry and surplus power to be fed into the national grid. He regretted there had been reluctance on the part of the State Electricity Boards to exploit this source of power.

COMMERCE MINISTER CONCERNED OVER HIGH TRADE DEFICIT

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 1 Oct 82 p 5

[Text]

Union Minister of Commerce Shivraj Patil on Thursday expressed great concern at the country's high trade deficit of Rs 5,778.72 crore in 1981-82 and said every effort should be made to increase exports in order to narrow the trade deficit, reports PTI.

Addressing the 28th annual general meeting of the State Trading Corporation of India Limited in Delhi, Mr Patil said at this critical juncture the state trading organisations in the country in general and STC in particular would have to come forward in promoting exports and utilising foreign exchange on imports in an optimal manner.

Mr Patil asked the board of directors of STC as well as its employees at all levels to pay added attention to export development and develop an export culture in the organisation.

He said STC should lay more emphasis on infrastructural assistance to its associate manufacturers and suppliers as well as on market development overseas. It should consider augmenting the country's export surplus in key areas by promoting export-oriented ventures in the country. "STC should also diversify its product range and markets and evolve a long-term plan to achieve the objective of increased exports", he said and added that it should utilise its buying strength in the international markets to promote exports of agricultural and value-added goods.

Mr Patil also commended the role of STC as a canalising agency in import and distribution of essential products like edible oil, newsprint, cement, chemicals and drugs.

He said it was noteworthy that the year 1981-82 did not witness any serious shortages in those items within the country.

He said he was pleased to note that STC had achieved a record sales turnover of Rs 1,869 crores during 1981-82, which is close to 10 per cent of India's total foreign trade.

Congratulating STC for its performance, Mr Patil hoped that it would continue to maintain its leadership in the foreign trade of the country.

He noted that STC had earned a profit every year since its inception in 1956 and its total profit so far amounted to Rs 304 crores.

ANALYST TELLS INDIAN VIEW ON MIDEAST PROBLEMS

Madras THE HINDU in English 21 Sep 82 p 7

[Article by G. K. Reddy]

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 20.

The non-aligned countries, which are greatly agitated over the behaviour of Israel, are exchanging ideas on what they could do to force the big powers to stop the genocide in Lebanon.

There is sharp criticism in the non-aligned circles here that not only the U.S. but even the Soviet Union had not done much to prevent Israel from dividing and destroying a helpless neighbouring State, already hit by internal strife.

But the Arab countries which had done precious little to use their collective influence and ease the pressure on Lebanon, are in no position to accuse others for their inaction. So they are depending more on India to take the initiative in mobilising the world opinion against the savagery of the Israeli militarism.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, has been requested to take up this issue with Mr. Brezhnev and nudge the Soviet Government to pressure the U.S. to compel Israel to withdraw from Lebanon. As the leader of a country who has been speaking out quite strongly against Israel's barbarous conduct, Mrs. Gandhi requires no prompting from other non-aligned States to voice grave concern over the macabre tragedy that is being enacted by Israel in Lebanon.

But India cannot act in isolation without the active cooperation of the rest of the non-aligned community including the Arab States. The External Affairs Minister, Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao, will consult the Foreign Ministers of other non-aligned nations when he goes to the U.N. in a few days to attend the General Assembly session.

Indian view: The Indian view is that there is little that the non-aligned community can do in the more immediate context to make Israel behave better, unless the two superpowers are prepared to act in concert to restrain it. But in the long term a lot could be done to make Israel feel an international outcast that has forfeited its right to be accepted as a civilised and responsible country.

As India will be inheriting the leadership of the non-aligned movement, the Prime Minister has to think from now onwards on what it should do to uphold the legitimate claims of the Palestinian people. Any resolution adopted at the forthcoming summit to assail the Israeli conduct will have to be backed by concrete steps to ensure that there would be no repetition of the same sort of senseless slaughter elsewhere in West Asia.

The Indian officials dealing with West Asia maintain that the non-aligned countries should take advantage of the deep embarrassment of the West over the outright Israeli rejection of the Arab proposals for a settlement, which are quite consistent with the American peace plan, to step up their own campaign for a reasonable solution. It is with this objective in mind that the non-aligned countries are ready to support any joint initiative by the U.S. and the Soviet Union, either through the U.N. or independent of it, to restrain Israel from further provocations.

The Prime Minister expressed her anguish at the senseless massacre of the Palestinian refugees in Lebanon, before she left for Moscow this morning. It was followed up later today with an official statement condemning the cold-blooded slaughter of innocents and calling upon all parties to the evacuation of the PLO from Lebanon to ensure immediate cessation of the renewed Israeli aggression.

TEN FOREIGN FIRMS OFFER TO BUILD POWER UNITS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 29 Sep 82 p 6

[Text] New Delhi, September 28 (UNI).

Offers for supply of plants and building new power projects received from as many as ten developed countries and overseas companies are now being examined by the energy ministry.

The offers cover financing through government credits, suppliers credit and commercial loans, according to energy ministry sources. As most of the offers are for setting up power projects on a turn-key basis, the government will have to study them carefully before taking a final decision on a selective basis.

Firms from countries, which have made offers for setting up power projects, are West Germany, Switzerland, France, Italy, Sweden, Poland, Yugoslavia, Japan, Austria and Canada.

The spurt in foreign offers for setting up power projects in India is mainly attributed to the recession faced in the domestic economies of many of these countries. Moreover, many of them are interested in getting a share of the expanding power plant equipment market in India.

The ten offers now being examined are in addition to the two offers already accepted by the government--one from a consortium of British industries for setting up the 1000 MW capacity Rihand super-thermal power station in UP and the other from the Soviet Union for setting up the 1260 MW capacity Vindhyachal thermal power station in Madhya Pradesh.

W. German Offer

A West German firm has offered to set up a 2000 MW thermal power station on turn-key basis at Chandrapur in Maharashtra. It is indicated that 85 per cent of the foreign exchange portion of the cost could be met from export credit, with repayment in 12 years. The local costs could be met by Eurodollar credit at interest rate of 8.5 per cent, repayable in ten years. Two units of 500 MW are suggested in the first stage of the project.

Offers from two Swiss firms contain engineering, supply of equipment, erection and commissioning of a thermal plant with maximum utilisation of local supplies and services. Export credit is to be arranged to cover 85 per cent of the cost of equipment supplies by the Swiss company.

Two French companies have offered to finance and build one large hydro-electric project and another thermal power plant with units of 500 MW each.

It is indicated that loans could be negotiated on a government-to-government basis. In this case, 50 per cent of the foreign exchange portion will be covered by government loan to be repaid in 30 years and the balance 50 per cent would be arranged through export credit to be repaid over a period of ten years after the commissioning of the plant.

It is also indicated that Eurodollar credit could be arranged for meeting the local costs of the project.

Of the two Italian offers, one suggests the setting up of a 600 MW thermal station with development of associated coalmine, supply and installation of mine equipment and power plant. The financing indicated is $320 million suppliers credit at an interest rate of 7.75 per cent.

Further, it is also indicated that $230 million could be arranged as market loan at an interest rate of 14.5 per cent.

The other Italian offer is made for execution of a large hydro-electric project of about 1000 MW on turn-key basis. The financing could be a mix of export credit to meet foreign exchange costs and commercial loans from international banks at prevailing market rates to cover the local costs.

The Swedish company has offered turn-key installation of a coalfired thermal power station of 400 MW. The finance of the project costing about Rs. 320 crores could consist of 25 per cent aid fund, 25 per cent soft loan and 50 per cent commercial loan.

Technical Aid

A Polish offer contains the setting up of a thermal plant of 210 MW or 540 MW on turn-key basis. Full financial and technical assistance for development of associated coal mines is indicated. Necessary agreement can be reached between the two governments about long-term credit arrangement for meeting the project costs.

Yugoslavia wants to supply units for thermal plants up to 300 MW. It is indicated that 80 per cent of the cost plant equipment could be arranged on credit.

A Japanese company has offered a complete package for setting up a 1000 MW power station with two units of 500 MW each. The total project cost is estimated at $900 million. The financial package includes foreign exchange and local costs to be covered by soft credit from the Japanese government to be repayable in 30 years and export credit to be repayable in ten years.

Austria has offered to supply equipment, erection and commissioning of a complete hydro-electric plant for the proposed Doyang project in Nagaland. Long-term loan on easy terms would cover 85 per cent of the foreign exchange costs and local costs are to be covered by Eurodollar market loan.

Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) has identified two hydro-electric projects--Chamera 540 MW in Himachal Pradesh and 300 MW Dhauli Ganga in U.P. A mix of soft credit from CIDA and export credit is indicated in the execution of both projects.

STATISTICS ON TRADE WITH U.S., USSR COMPARED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 29 Sep 82 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Sept. 28.--Despite the rise in exports of engineering goods during the past few years, India's two major trading partners, the USA and Russia, continue to use mainly primary and agricultural products from this country, while manufactured items constitute just a token amount in their import list.

Engineering goods now account for about Rs 800-crore-worth of exports, or roughly about 12% of India's total exports. Yet, the top 10 exports, both to the USA and Russia, remain traditional agricultural goods and semi-manufactured items.

In the case of the Soviet Union, the 10 major exports are rice, tea, cashewnuts, leather, cotton textiles, tobacco, woollen knitwear and hosiery, jute bags, coffee, and drugs and pharmaceuticals. Of these, only cotton and woollen textiles, jute bags and drugs come in the category of processed items.

The top 10 export items to the USA are diamonds, ready-made garments, gum, coffee, jute fabrics, peanuts, carpets and rugs, leather and leather products, marine products and precious stones. Of these, only garments and jute fabrics are processed or semi-processed items.

In value terms, total exports to Russia in 1981 were worth Rs 1,601 crores and to the USA $1,202.1 million (roughly Rs 1,200 crores). So together, they account for nearly a third of India's total exports, much of them primary goods.

Import Items

On the other hand, both Russia and the USA export large amounts of sophisticated and manufactured goods to India (with the crucial exception of crude oil and wheat). Russia's main exports to India are crude, petroleum goods, urea, newsprint, non-ferrous metals, sulphur, asbestos, machinery and equipment, machine tools and power generation equipment.

The U.S. list of exports to India includes wheat, fertilizers, aircraft, spacecraft, specialized industrial machinery, cereal preparations, vegetable oils, miscellaneous industrial machinery, professional and scientific equipment, metallo-ferrous ores and metal scrap and inorganic chemicals and products.

In 1981, India's total imports from Russia were worth Rs 1,277 crores--leaving a balance of Rs 324 crores in favour of India--and from the USA about Rs 2,100 crores, giving a balance of around Rs 500 crores in favour of the USA. Both together account for a third of India's total imports.

All imports from the USA are paid for in convertible currency, while those from the Soviet Union--now India's single-largest trading partner--in goods or rupees. Nearly 80% of the imports from Russia consist of crude and petroleum goods.

LOK DAL PROTEST--Calcutta, Oct 3 (UNI)--Lok Dal leader George Fernandes, MP, today protested against the early summoning of the winter session of Parliament. To call the session one and a half months before schedule only to 'accommodate' Asiad in November'is an act of denigrating Parliament', he told newsmen here. There could not be any greater degradation of Parliament, the supreme panchayat of the country, than to subordinate its interests to a mere sports event, he said. "This is part of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's overall design to make Parliament irrelevant. I lodge my emphatic protest against it," he added. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 4 Oct 82 p 1]

SOVIET OFFICIAL'S VISIT--Soviet Deputy Minister for Land Reclamation and Water Management Boris G Shtepa arrived in Delhi on Monday on a 13-day visit to India, reports UNI. Mr Shtepa will attend the session of the executive committee of International Commission on Irrigation and Drainage to be held in Delhi. The session will discuss problems of protection of the environment besides exchanging views on organisation matters. Mr Shtepa said he would get himself acquainted with the irrigation and land reclamation programmes in India. He would also visit Bombay, Hyderabad and Bangalore in this connection during his stay in India, he noted. [Text] [New Delhi PATRIOT in English 5 Oct 82 p 8]

FIJI STAND TOLD--Prime Minister Indira Gandhi has decided not to attend the Commonwealth Heads of Government Regional Meeting (CHOGRM) scheduled to begin in Fiji on 14 October. External Affairs Minister P V Narasimha Rao will head the Indian delegation and he is leaving for Fiji on 12 October, official sources stated on Saturday. Mrs Gandhi's decision not to attend the CHOGRM comes in the wake of strains that have currently developed in relations between India and Fiji with the present Fiji Prime Minister's repeated public utterances against former Indian High Commissioner in Fiji Mrs Soonu Kochar and her husband. The Fiji Premier hurled unsubstantiated allegations against the two to the effect that they were grossly interfering in Fiji's internal affairs. The Government of India promptly lodged a strong protest against such wild accusations by the head of Government of Fiji with which India has all along desired close and friendly relations, and continues to do so. An advance party of officials led by Secretary (East) in the External Affairs Ministry K S Bajpai is leaving on Monday for Tiji in preparation for the meeting. SRV TROOPS SAID TO FACE SEVERE FOOD, MEDICINE SHORTAGES

Bangkok BAN MUANG in Thai 6 Sep 82 pp 1, 16

[Text] An investigation showed that 10 million baht was spend to make purchases. The goods were transported across the Mekong River to Ban Huai Sai.

Vietnamese troops in Laos are suffering severe shortages. They have spent 10 million baht to purchase food and medicines in Thailand illegally. The goods were smuggled across the Mekong River. An influential Haw Chinese in the locality gave support while officials tried to arrest them.

A news report from Chiang Rai Province states that the Chiang Rai [office] of the ISOC learned on 25 August that Vietnamese troops stationed in the Lao People's Democratic Republic were suffering great hardships because of the shortage of food and medicines. Thus, they had Mr Thongdi and Mr Thip Sriwilai, who are both Lao, take 10 million baht and sneak across the border to purchase consumer goods and medicines from Thailand.

From a news source, it was also learned that a Haw Chinese named Changfu Laofu helped them purchase goods by arranging to trasnport the goods they wanted to Ban Ton Bung in Chiang Rai Province. From here, the goods were taken by motorboat across the Mekong River to Ban Huai Sai on the Lao side.

The report also said that Region 3 Border Patrol Police have reported this to the Third Army Area. At the same time, they have sent forces to constantly monitor the activities of the Vietnamese troops.

EDITORIAL DISCUSSES INCREASED REVENUES, FINANCE PROBLEMS

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 8 Sep 82 p 1
['Editorial': "Be Determined to Fulfill the New Phase of Financial and Banking Obligations"]

[Text] Finance and banking is an indispensible means which we cannot do without in guiding our economic expansion. It is both a lever and a yardstick to measure the quality and efficiency of production in all economic sections.

Since 1976 our government has announced many policies concerning financial control, taxes, credit, cash, foreign currency controls, etc. We have transferred privately owned banks to government ownership. We have set up a financial and banking system from the center to many different localities. We changed Vientiane kip and circulate the Liberation Kip, and reformed the currency at the end of 1979. We have unified the salary system and implemented a new salary system in early 1980, along with a salary subsidy plan in early 1982.

Up to now the finance and banking services nationwide have made a great effort to fulfill their responsibilities. They have set the actual method to guide investment by short-term credit and long-term cash and foreign currency controls, and to widely facilitate payment without using cash in the national economic base, to maintain the normal value of the Bank Kip, and to use it as an important instrument for pushing forward in production. However, the future financial and banking goals are still difficult. The government revenue in 1985 will exceed that of 1980 by as much as 73.5 percent. This includes domestic revenue which will increase 88.2 percent, and 65.5 percent for foreign revenue. This requires that the finance and banking sections increase their role of reinforcing investment management, and to press forward on production, construction, and business for economic efficiency. In one aspect, finance and banking must be linked with production and must go through currency in order to organize and guide production, and to organize and mobilize physical labor because only production will greatly increase capital. In another aspect they must go to currency in rural and factory areas in order to control and return cash back to the bank. This is because the rural areas are a primary base that functions in serving and expanding production in factories and many different agricultural organizations. It is a source of capital from production. The most important matter is direct and regular guidance in the [same direction] along with the party committee and administrative authorities of all levels with respect to finance and banking. Cadres and the party committee must be up to date and have a deep understanding of the significant role of finance and banking. They must consider it an indispensible tool for guiding economic expansion.

To ensure the success of the financial and banking business, we all must pay attention especially to balancing savings and expenses, which is one of our party and government's big plans. Meanwhile, our actual duty is to strongly press forward in production, increase production ability, and to save in production and consumption. In order to accumulate savings [we should] mobilize the use of domestic ally produced goods and limit imparts. All these are primary elements in gloriously advancing and succeeding in the new phase of our finance and banking.

CHAMPASSAK-STUNG TRENG TWIN PROVINCE RELATIONSHIP DESCRIBED

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 8 Sep 82 pp 3, 4

[Article: "Champassak-Stung Treng Friendship Store"]

[Text] In the midst of a joyous atmosphere the parties, armies, and the people were all emulating each other to make the plenum of the Third Congress of the LPRP become reality. There was also a brand new achievement to greet the upcoming seventh anniversary of National Day on 2 December. In Champassak Province of the LPDR a new event has occurred concerning the relationship with its twin province, and Champassak Province has made a lofty resolution in carrying out its international duty toward its friend and twin privince of Stung Treng of the PRK. In the past 3 years it has done and is continuing to do all it can to sincerely help its friend in moral support and materials, especially in 1981-1982 when Champassak Province helped in repairing a big store for its twin province Stung Treng at no charge. It was started on 5 June 1981 and finished on 22 July 1982. On the afternoon of 14 August 1982 at the store that had been repaired in the middle of the municipal area of Stung Treng Province there was a ceremony to officially transfer the shop. There were decorations of Lao and Kampuchean flags and slogans written in Lao and Cambodian. In general this rperesents the special solidarity between Laos and Kampuchea, and specifically it represents the solidarity between Champassak and Stung Treng Provinces.

The honored Lao guests at the ceremony were Mr Thongin Thammakot, assistant secretary of the party committee, and chairman of the provincial administration committee of Champassak Province, and those in the Champassak Province delegation who attended the ceremony. As for the Kampuchean delegates, there was Mr Khamphan Thivong, assistant chairman of the provincial administrative committee of Stung Treng Province, along with the party committee, the administrative committee, different service chiefs subordinate to Stung Treng Province, and over 1,000 people from Stung Treng Province.

In the glorious ceremony Mr Khampheuy, committee chief of Champassak construction, read a report on the achievement. He said that the repairs on this store started on 5 June 1981 and were completed on 22 July 1982. The width is 25.40 meters, and the length is 26.40 meters. All together there are 7 rooms, and the repairs totalled 661,146.99 kip.

After that Mr Thongin Thammakot, the party's assistant secretary and also the chairman of the Champassak Province administrative committee, and Mr Khamphan Thivong, assistant chairman of the Stung Treng Province administrative committee, took turns giving speeches to give and accept the store. Both of them pointed out the close solidarity between the people of Laos and Kampuchea as well as between the people of the twin provinces of Champassak and Stung Treng. Mr Thongin Thammakot said that in order to maintain the fine heritage of friendship in the special militant solidarity of the three nations in Indochina in general, and specifically Laos and Kampuchea, and Champassak and Stung Treng, we signed our agreement of friendship and cooperation on 17 March 1980, and the relationship has been improved. The communication and cooperation between the two provinces has borne fruit. Even though our enemies have tried to separate these two nations and provinces, their tricks have always been destroyed by the people of the two provinces of the two nations. Based on the spirit of proletarian internationalism and the special solidarity Champassak Province has made an excellent decision in carrying out its internationalist duty toward our friend Stung Treng Province. The repair of this shop was a fruit of our special solidarity. It was an action to steadily and solidly increase the special solidarity. Meanwhile, Mr Khamphan Thivong on behalf of the party committee, the provincial administrative committee, and the people of Stung Treng made a speech in which he proudly accepted the store to the applause and approval of the masses who attended.

On the evening of the same day a joyous atmosphere was provided by the Champassak performing arts. The rhythm and style of dancing shows the heritage of solidarity and friendship between Champassak and Stung Treng Provinces that has existed since long ago.

EDITORIAL NOTES TRAINING OF JUDICIAL PERSONNEL, MENTIONS CONSTITUTION

[Editorial: "Intensify the People's Democratic Administrative Power"]

[Text] Our administrative power is of the people, from the people, and for the people. It is a tool to bring about the exercising of the right of ownership of the workers in order to carry out the two strategic duties of the party: the protection and construction of the nation. Administrative authorities at all levels should increase and strengthen all of their tools of dictatorship including the improvement and building up of national defense, the public security forces, judicial organizations, etc. This is to carry out measures of dictatorship toward enemies, to guarantee the workers their democracy, and to maintain order in the country.

Meanwhile, administrative authorities of all levels are also obligated to increase the number of organizations responsible for building up and controlling the economy, expanding culture, protecting society, etc, taking no aspect lightly. However, the economic movement is a base for other movements, and should be considered especially important. Besides the work mentioned, in order to reinforce and expand the legitimacy of our revolutionary administrative power we still must move quickly to increase many works, e.g., socialist laws, forming a socialist constitution, and increasing propaganda and training techniques so that cadres, party members, and the people can understand the different kinds of laws they are presently carrying out and seriously carry them out with high awareness.

Another important problem is to build and facilitate schools for training and improving cadres who are involved in administrative power as well as control cadres, such as training and improving cadres who are responsible for important and primary duties in the administrative committees, public prosecutor courts, inspection organizations, and the administrative committee staff office sections. This is to form and improve the inspection organization under many levels of the administrative committee, and to assign duties for all mass organizations, labor union members, youth union, and women in order to perform their roles of inspection, to control and protect the administrative authority, and economic and cultural organizations. This is to give administrative authorities of all levels a strong mechanism and efficient cadres, and also to help the administrative authorities carry out their duties effectively.

However, in order to intensify the people's democratic administrative power while at the same time building up and effectively improving the administrative authorities of all levels, we still have to determinedly resist the disease of privilege of those who abuse their power, are greedy and extravagant, and who also violate the people's rights of collective ownership. This is because these diseases are all against our new regime, and they also serve to distance our administrative authorities from our people. This does not serve the people, and we will not be able to carry out the strategic duties in the transformation and construction of our socialist party and government.

Therefore, the building up and improvement of administrative authorities at all levels to be clear and effective is considered necessary for the new phase of our revolution. We all must strive to protect and encourage our administrative authorities to advance and be strong in all aspects.

ELECTRICITY PRODUCTION, EXPORTS, DOMESTIC EXPANSION DESCRIBED

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 4 Sep 82 p 2

[Article: "Electrification Is Being Expanded to Production Bases"]

[Text] Electricity is an important [source of] energy for production and is also an indispensible demand in society. With this in mind, cadres and workers of the Lao State Electrification Enterprise attentively and actively carry out their work.

Comrade Mouy Maokhamphieu, assistant chief of statistics and planning for the Lao State Electrification Enterprise, told us that in 1982, according to the plan, the Lao State Electrification Enterprise will try to produce 798,585,910 kWh including 89,128,000 kWh for domestic use and 667,617,000 kWh for export.

After actively and creatively doing the actual work in the first 6 months of this year, they were able to produce 402,808,300 kWh of electricity, 40 percent over the plan. Of this, 47,128,000 kWh was used domestically as planned, and 326,699,000 kWh were exported, 19 percent over the expected level.

For the second 6 months of this year, according to the plan they will have to produce 464,461,414 kWh of electricity, including 42,000,000 kWh which will be used domestically and 394,922,850 kWh for export. In only 9 months of carrying out the plan they were able to produce 77,983,800 kWh, 16 percent over the monthly plan. Of this, 9,030,000 kWh was used domestically and 63,798,000 kWh was exported.

At the same time, production cadres and workers of the Lao State Electrification Enterprise also attentively took care of machines to guarantee their normal operation.

As for the expansion of electricity to serve rural areas, Comrade Mouy Mouankhamphieu said that in 1982 they expanded electricity into the Na Phok [rice strains] center of Settlement 23 Veunkham. In the City of Vientiane alone 5 km of high voltage electric network was added. In the rural electricity project they are now extending electricity into Nasaithong and Toulakhom Districts, and in Toulakhom District alone the installation of poles was completed.

Up to now in Vientiane Province and Vientiane Capital alone, electric power has been installed to run approximately 30 water pumping stations which ensure thousands of hectares of agricultural production.

The expansion of electrification is important for economic expansion as well as for increasing the standard of living of society in our country, in order to ceaselessly advance along the path to socialist construction.

COMMENTARY URGES URGENT REPLANTING, NOTES MEASURES TO GUARANTEE CROPS

['Talking Together' Column by S. Thibthiangchan: "Carefully Look After the Wet Rice Paddies"]

[Text] Up to now farmers in many localities throughout Vientiane Capital have completed much of their wet rice paddy planting. We can almost say that 95 percent of the whole area has been completely planted. Normally our wet rice paddy season does not last to the end of August as it has this year, but because of weather conditions such as the drought which occurred in the middle of the rainy season this situation has dragged on and prolonged the farmers' planting season until now. However, it is not yet considered late, and this month's rains are most useful to our farmers. It is most important that our farmers now must be feverishly and attentively planting. They must hurriedly put all their energy and vehicles into finishing their planting before the end of August. If the situation drags on such as seeds having to be resown they must finish planting by early October. The most important thing is not to leave any areas empty by not putting in any rice plants. For this matter the administrative authorities must attentively inspect ricefields in each place with the people. For example, districts must cooperate with cantons, leading production units in inspecting and guiding, and leading the people to increase their attention to finish their wet rice season planting promptly in line with conditions. The planting must be done over absolutely the entire area. This means that no ricefields will be left empty. Wherever there are empty ricefields [the authorities] must guide and lead the people to replant. Another thing is to seek short-term seed rice such as mixed strains or short-term local strains. Agricultural cadres must be the primary driving force in solving this seed rice problem for the people. As for the [planting], an entire village can form itself into one unit, a labor solidarity unit or a labor exchange unit. Private and scattered techniques should be avoided because the labor does not meet the needs and will lead to delays in planting. One thing we should pay special attention to is the sowing technique to ensure fast planting and healthy and strong young plants. The agricultural service must send its specialized task cadres to guide the people in the localities for which they are responsible. They must use the new advanced scientific production system, otherwise it will not guarantee good crops.

Besides the planting problem, another important problem farmers should pay attention to is to insure that the rice plants are of good quality. First of all they must increase their energy to protect the plants such as by weeding, maintaining the water system, keeping out pests, worms, insects, crabs and livestock. They must pay special attention to applying fertilizer, either chemical or traditional fertilizer. Concerning the use of fertilizer, the agricultural service besides being the ones who provide equipment such as chemical fertilizers to respond to the needs of the farmers must also be the driving force in guiding and leading the people to do it. For example, what kind of traditional fertilizer should be used? What chemical fertilizer should be used? When, and how? This is because most of our farmers are used to engaging in rice farming the natural way which they know best, and are superstitious. They engage in rice farming without any calculation. This is very harmful in delaying the expansion, and contradicts modern advanced technology and science.

The local administrative authorities are obligated to mobilize and lead the people to do the actual work; they must increase their mobilization and propagandize widely and deeply, encourage production forces especially conversion to agricultural co-ops, encourage and improve the existing agricultural co-ops, and make them an example to effectively persuade the people and farmers to join and convert to agricultural co-ops. Based on the set plan, we should especially guarantee the figures set for Vientiane Capital this year, i.e., to make the expected rice production figure of 105,000 tons for all wet rice paddies, dry season rice, and swidden rice.

Reinforce the production forces by paying attention to the season for dry season rice for the people. Especially pay attention to agricultural co-ops and cultivation areas to ensure a production of from 2.5 to 3 tons per hectare. It must be at least 3 tons wherever there is an irrigation system. Conduct emulation within each canton and village. Cadres must attentively contact production bases. They must inspect, and lead seriously in the bases. As for dry season rice, in the coming season for dry season rice they must put all their ability onto farming the entire area and into the efficiency of the irrigation system. In the case of the actual production there must be a calculation of the age of the wet rice paddies, i.e., figure out the time from the day of planting until the harvest day, and replant immediately after the harvest. There must be advance preparation to sowing seeds, and rice must be planted twice a year or three times a year (production seasons).

The administrative authorities must be concerned with the standard of living of the people. They must clearly accept that happy and prosperous people are cadres. Thus, our cadres must be a string driving force. They must convert all work into the production bases, and encourage and lead the people to attentively increase their production, cultivation, and animal husbandry. This time they must pay attention to planting and take care of the plants in order to make the expected figures a reality.

DIFFICULTIES WITH COFFEE PRODUCTION NOTED

Vientiane VIENTIANE MAI in Lao 4 Sep 82 pp 1, 4

[Article: "Coffee Factory Starts to Produce Again"]

[Text] Because of some problems with raw materials which at one time did not meet the needs of the factory, the factory temporarily halted its production; however, at the present time it is back to its normal operation.

Comrade Phouthon Nalat, acting chairman of the board of directors of the coffee factory, which is subordinate to the industrial, handicrafts, and forestry section of the capital, told VIENTIANE MAI that now the production of the coffee factory has been back to its normal operation since 1 September 1982. Comrade Phouthon said the reason for the temporary halt was because the raw materials could not meet the needs in time. This caused some difficulties and the production stopped. It does not mean that business stopped completely, but only that a small amount was produced. The primary cause of the problem was the raw materials which the factory bought from the Lao Trade Corporation. The plan for 1982 production is as much as 60 tons. These 60 tons will be ready-made coffee. The purchase plan for the coffee beans was expected to be 86 tons, but now it has not met the needs. Comrade Phouthon continued by saying that now the Lao Trade Corporation attentively rushes to send dry coffee beans to the factory in order to make the expected plan become reality.

As for the distribution of the factory production which is ready-made coffee, previously as well as now it is distributed all over the province and the capital by the trade service. Moreover, it also responds to the needs of offices, organizations, and companies. The present level of production would be 500 kilograms per day if the raw materials met the need.

UN ASSISTS IN RICE MILL CONSTRUCTION

[News Column by Saban Dongden: "Modern Rice Mill Construction in Sanakham District"]

[Text] Everyone knows that Sanakham District which is subordinate to Vientiane Province with its border adjoining Sayaboury Province is well known as a land of plentiful food. It is not less so than in other areas that are considered plentiful. In terms of rice the Sanakham District people have never heard the word "hunger."

Of course, the flat land surrounded by mountain ranges is indeed plentiful. So when the country was liberated the party and government could see the significance of this district as a complete rice and water granary and a land of rice production. Thus the modern rice mill construction project became reality.

Comrade Silia of the committee responsible for this modern rice mill construction in Sanakham District told us that this modern rice mill was being built in the name of Vientiane Province and Capital with the funding assistance from the United Nations' UNICEF organization in which gave the actual capital in the amount of 160 million kip. This rice mill is completely equipped with modern machinery. It is able to produce a total of 16 tons of rice per day. The entire construction is the responsibility of the Lao Vieng State Enterprise Contractors; it will take 8 months for the construction and 2 more months to install a complete set of machines. This means it will take 10 months for the construction and machine installation to be complete. There were also the party committee, and the district administrative committee along with the contracting committee, and it was especially the party committee and the provincial administrative committee who have given close guidance and encouragement and have helped to make this construction a reality as planned. The Sanakham District administration committee itself fully facilitated the construction such as at the construction site, the construction workers' living conditions, places to stay, and their welfare. Meanwhile, they also assisted in giving lumber, gravel, sand and other construction materials.

At the present time the actual construction has been carried out dealing with surveying, soil testing, digging for reinforced concrete for the poles, and finishing the repair of residences as normal. Construction materials such as steel, cement, and roof tiles were brought to the construction site, and other equipment will arrive gradually.

The purpose of this rice mill is to mill rice bought directly from the people in Sanakham District. It will get the rice paid as agricultural tax to serve as Sanakham District's food supply and for supply to Vientiane Province and capital. These significant products will create a new face and a new atmosphere for Sanakham District. Under the old regime none of the ruling administrators or any level of reactionary power ever mentioned this district's name. Now the administrative authorities clearly can see the importance of Sanakham, a district of Vientiane Province, that has a plentiful food supply, especially rice. The higher echelons have encouraged and planned this rice mill to make it become reality. When it is finished it will give farmers all over Sanakham District a new step and face; in particular, it will increase production, especially of rice. It will make Sanakham District an example for rice growing, encourage the progress and an increase in the standard of living for the people, and give the people of all nationalities and races all over this district new bright faces and let them step up to be side by side with the Lao people in other areas all over the new Laos.

CAUTIOUS OPTIMISM EXPRESSED ON PROSPECTS FOR ELECTIONS

Peshawar MASHRIQ in Urdu 25 Aug 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Necessary Clarifications Regarding Coming Elections"]

[Text] Mr Mahmud Haroon, federal minister of the interior, has made some clarifications regarding the coming elections. First of all, the coming elections will in all probability be held in accordance with the new Islamic political structure. Second new elections will be held after the municipal elections, and preparations are under way for municipal elections in September next year. Third, elections will be held only on the basis of adult franchise, and furthermore "local bodies" will not be used as electoral colleges during the next general elections. Fourth, an election commission has started compiling and revising the electoral lists. Thus, preparations have already begun for holding first the municipal and then general elections at an opportune time.

The minister of the interior made these clarifications on the basis of various statements made by the president, who has time and again asserted that just like other aspects of our life, our political structure should also be based on Islamic principles. This is why the president, in accordance with his mission of introducing Islamic principles, would like to give the country a political structure worthy of an Islamic state and hold elections on the basis of these principles. In all of the constitutions worked out in the past, by introducing resolute objectives, Pakistan has beyond any doubt declared itself to be an Islamic state. But under none of these constitutions has Pakistan ever been given a practical Islamic structure. This may be attributed to the fact that in the past we have followed the Western pattern of politics and Western democracy, as a result of which the country had no leadership that could seriously consider the introduction of an Islamic system in the country.

The present government was the first to introduce the process of Islamic principles inPakistan, and it naturally desires that this process should be continued in the future. This is why it is inclined to change the political and electoral structure of the past into a political system that would guarantee the continuation of the Islamic process in the country. As against this, the secular and socialist elements in the country, who are opposed to the process of introducing an Islamic system, insist on holding elections according to the old political and electoral structure. Unfortunately, even some of the parties imbued with Islamic ideologies have started demanding that elections be held immediately on the basis of the 1973 constitution, even though many of these parties would like the new elections to be held not on that basis but on the basis of separate deputation and proportional representation. Similarly, they would also like Islamic moral virtues to be made binding on the electoral candidates. In other words, these political parties, while insisting on the sanctity of the 1973 constitution, at the same time repudiate its established principles.

We believe that if these parties are really loyal to Islamic ideologies, they should without any reservation acknowledge that the 1973 constitution, despite being practical and acceptable, is Islamic in name only; keeping intact the democratic and federal structure of the constitution, it is highly essential to work out a new political structure that will be an effective guarantee as for molding our political and governmental institutions into the Islamic way of life. Pakistan has already been declared an Islamic Republic under the 1973 constitution. As such, it goes without saying that democracy in Pakistan should be constituted not on Western but strictly on the basis of Islamic principles, particularly when in the past we have already recognized the shortcomings of Western democracy. This assessment makes it clear why the present government is delaying the coming elections until the formation of an Islamic political system.

The timing of the introduction of the new Islamic system constitutes a major issue. The president in his speech on 14 August indicated that the new Islamic system will have taken shape before the next Independence Day. In this connection, some work has already been done and some work is in the process of being carried out. It is evident that a political system in complete agreement with Islamic principles cannot be obtained ready-made from some place. The work of designing a structure based on the spirit of Islamic teachings and dictates of the present age will have to be achieved by our experts in Islamic, legal and constitutional affairs. It is the president's desire that the new political structure be worked out in accordance with the unanimous approval of the people, so that later on it will not become the subject of contention and debate.

Moreover, the government is right in its decision to hold municipal elections first and the general election later. This conforms with the correct and gradual procedure of restoring democracy. Since preparations for holding municipal elections in September next year are already under way, it is certain that the general election will be held at an opportune time thereafter. These clarifications should suffice to set at rest the anxieties of the political parties, which during the transitional period, instead of wasting their time on unnecessary slogans and pulling each other's legs, should do the homework that could be the basis of their success during the general election. We call on the supporters of the ideologies of Pakistan and Islam in particular to start working now to create unity of throught and action among the rank and file within their party and refrain from joining hands with secular or socialist elements.

WASTEFUL SPENDING, CONSUMPTION IMPEDE SOCIAL REFORM

Peshawar MASHRIQ in Urdu 27 Aug 82 p 2

["Column Thoughts and Events" by Dr Abdussalam Khursheed: "Wasteful Consumption--A National Plague. What Is the Remedy for This Chronic Disease? Administration Makes Laws But No One Complies With These Laws."]

[Text] Hakeem Mohammad Saeed writes the following in an editorial in the Journal HAMDARD SIHAT:

--Whenever the egotism of a nation declines and its moral ethics weaken, then the turn of events that takes place can be seen in the following:

--The People of Pakistan spend 650 rupees on foreign tea; and

--The People of Pakistan spend 180 million rupees on foreign beverages.

Dr Khalid Farooq, president of public health education, in an earlier interview with DAWN, brought the following facts to light:

--1.2 billion rupees are spent annually on the manufacture of cigarettes in Pakistan;

--Pakistan spends 800 million rupees for health services and diseases connected with the consumption of cigarettes;

--Pakistan earns an annual income of 70 million rupees from cigarette advertising of which Pakistan Television Corporation gets 20.2 million rupees.

Everyone knows that we are dependent on foreign formulas and foreign companies for manufacturing ice cream, cosmetics, soap and toothpaste, and that our inferiority complex has increased to such an extent that we use the TV even to publicize a water cooler, proudly declaring that we have acquired German technology or that we have adopted American technology.

We have established makeshift markets throughout the country; in other words, we have set up centers for smuggling. If a person bringing some goods from abroad is not able to convince customs officials, he is declared a smuggler and action is taken against him. But we have opened centers everywhere for selling illegally imported goods free of customs duty, and there is no restriction on this publicly committed crime.

Our ministers preach about the ideology of Pakistan everyday, but have they ever pointed at the issues we just discussed and have they ever denounced these evil acts? Have they ever said what is being done to do away with these ills. Propagating the ideology of Pakistan means not merely raising slogans, nor is it a tactic for overwhelming adversaries. It has many aspects, one being to inculcate self-respect and self-reliance in the people of Pakistan and to promote efforts to improve public health.

This issue has two aspects. One consists of wasting financial resources on things without which only simple subsistence is possible, but which could also help in improving public health. The other aspect is that if we cannot build planes and tanks or do not have the capability of making high quality electronic equipment, we should at least be able to manufacture toothpaste, soap and cosmetics, which we were making during the British rule. This country was well-known for its cold beverages for centuries. During the British period we make soda, lemonade and other kinds of cold drinks. What is the big calamity facing us now that we have given up old beverages and are not making new ones and are dependent on foreign countries for our beverages, thus wasting the country's valuable financial resources. India with a population of 600 million people on the other side of Wagah manages to live without foreign beverages and has successfully made new kinds of national cold drinks; why can't we do the same?

A third important factor is smuggling. If smuggling is against the law, then full scale action should be taken against it. If it is legal, then announcement should be made to this effect. Let us take VCR as an example. If by any chance a member of the general public tries to smuggle a VCR into the country and thereby earn an income, legal action is taken against him. But it is an open secret that almost all the families in high society own smuggled VCRs, smuggled Indian films and smuggled blue films, which constitute a source of pleasure and enjoyment to congregations held in those households. It is now being demanded that the VCRs already inside the country be legalized.

Now let us take the case of makeshift markets. There is one located in a free tribal area in the vicinity of Peshawar. Their very existence is objecitonable. The propriety of their presence can be explained by the fact that some traditions in the free tribal areas are different from ours and that certain conditions require that no action be taken against them. But the important question is: why are Pakistanis buying goods from makeshift markets convicted as criminals and why are they forced to ask for the assistance of influential officials to buy goods? What could possibly be the basis for establishing makeshift markets in Rawalpindi, Lahore, Quetta and Karachi is not yet clear. It is most surprising that law and order is openly challenged and government regulations are violated and no action is taken. Smuggled goods sold in shops in fashionable and other areas sometimes do attract attention and everyone knows the reason. Despite official raids on these shops, nothing is heard of any subsequent action. In other words, nobody knows the punishment meted out to the smugglers.

The government has taken measures to reform society. Earlier, action was taken against obscenity. What you might call obscenity, i.e., publishing large photos of women, is not considered abscenity in the eyes of the law. It was said in particular that action would be taken against newspapers found quilty of violating the law of the land. But we believe that newspapers that were acting very cautiously in the matter were doing so voluntarily. (Now this caution is slipping away.) Otherwise, unless legal action is taken against newspapers in accordance with the law of the land for publishing large and colored pictures of actresses and models the desired results will not be achieved. It must be borne in mind that men can be involved in obscenity as much as women. Obscenity is really the perpetration of evil actions, such as bribery and corruption, dishonesty, falsehood, hypocrisy, nudity, smuggling, lack of national self-respect, attachment to foreign products, violation of law and order, looking upon illegally acquired wealth as a sign of honor and pride, vanity and affectation. Here we are reminded of a phrase used by the late Maulana Abul A'la Maudoodi: "When an edifice soars high, moral ethics and character sink lower." Therefore, in order to reform society, an all-out Jihad will have to be declared against obscenity in all its forms, and virtuous deeds will have to be encouraged. As long as we do not learn to respect virtuous people and change our attitude of appreciating evil when it comes before us disguised in the cloak of wealth, any movement designed to reform society is bound to fail.

In connection with the subject of pomp and show and respect for law and order, we have on numerous occasions drawn the attention of the authorities to the fact that the laws passed by the former government about marriages are impractical. For example, how can it be possible in these days of inflation to spend 5,000 rupees on dowry and wedding gifts or to arrange dinner for participants in a marriage procession or marriage feast for 2500 rupees? In the beginning, people were frightened and brought dowry and wedding gifts earlier than scheduled at the appointed places, while some people distributed the participants in marriage processions to nearby houses and served dinner separately. But soon the fear disappeared and people started giving extravagant and sumptuous banquets openly. One famous banquets was attended by 6,000 guests. Most of the wedding dinners are usually given in hotels and everyone knows the huge expenses incurred for these functions, but no action is taken. One of the decrees prohibited illuminations during we-ding ceremonies, but no one complied with this regulation. Illuminations during wedding ceremonies sometimes last for 3-4 days and no action is ever taken against this breach of law.

What is the use of these regulations when no one complies with them? Some time back it was said that the government was reviewing these regulations and wanted to make them practicable. But nothing has been heard on this matter since then. This is a pious wish. A person who loses his way in the morning but returns home at night cannot be said to have gone astray. The best thing would be to do away with all the ineffective restrictions. This does not mean that people will spend lavishly on marriages. The wealth and the rich who have been extravagant will continue to spend extravagantly. People who were previously poor will remain poor and will continue to spend according to their means.

PRO BHUTTO SLOGANS--Karachi, 23 Oct (Staff Reporter)--An unpleasant incident took place here today when, at tea time after the defunct PPP leader Mr Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi's address to the members of the Karachi Bar Association, one of the Bar Association members, Mr Mushtaq Ahmad Advocate, was prevented by the chairman of the Association, Mr Hafiz Lakho, and his supporters from asking Mr Jatoi a question. Unable to ask his question, Mr Ahmad remarked: "So this is democracy and these are its champions!", and became quiet. Later Mr Ahmad said that in the lecture hall also during the question hour he was prevented from asking a question. After the proceedings a group of young men accompanied Mr Jatoi to his car and shouted slogans like: "Bhuttoism zindabad" ('Long live Bhuttoism'); "rahbar aur rahnuma--Shahnawaz Murtaza" ('Our leaders: Shahnawaz and Murtaza'); "masail ka ek hi hal--guerilla jang, guerilla jang: ('Only one solution to our problems: guerilla war, guerilla war'); "Pakistan ki taqdir--Benazir, Benazir" ('Pakistan's fate? SHIFT IN DEFENSE PLANNING STRATEGY, SEPARATION FROM U.S. REPORTED

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 6 Sep 82 pp 6-8

[Article: "Supreme Commander Tells the United States That Thailand Will Depend On Itself"]

[Text] After the war in Indochina came to an end in 1975 and the painful defeat of the Free World side forced the United States to withdraw from Asia, the high-level military cooperation between Thailand and the United States, which had once been very close, began to dissolve. This growing estrangement resulted in both Thailand and the United States becoming uncertain as to what the other wanted concerning the expansion of communist influence in this region. The United States was not sure how strong Thailand was, and it was not certain about whether Thailand had the will to fight the communists. This greatly affected its decisions on supporting Thailand. At the same time, Thailand was not sure if the United States realized the importance of Thailand or whether it wanted Thailand to remain a part of the Free World. This greatly affected Thailand's strategic planning.

The Supreme Commander's Tour: Improve Understanding

Restoring military relations and building understanding between high-ranking Thai and U.S. military officers began when General Saiyut Koetphon received an invitation from General John W Vessey, the chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff (which is the highest military position in the united States and second to the president), to visit the United States as a guest of the Department of Defense. This invitation given to a high-ranking Thai officer showed that the United States was again interested in Thailand and wanted to find a way to solve the problems in this region. At the same time, the United States wanted to probe Thailand's attitude through conversations with high-ranking Thai officers. This can be seen from the fact that he was accorded great honor on his arrival. When the supreme commander arrived in Hawaii, which is the forward part of the United States, on 29 July, there was an honor guard there to welcome him and an 18-gun salute was fired. There was a welcoming banquet attended by high-ranking officers. And when General Saiyut and his party reached Washington and went to the Pentagon, which is where the offices of the U.S. Department of Defense are located, the United States arranged a large honor guard composed of members of all four armed services. There was an 18-gun salute and the chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff awarded a high U.S. decoration to the Thai supreme commander without informing him in advance of this. And the United States arranged a schedule that called for the Thai supreme commander to meet with important U.S. security officials such as General John W Vessey, the chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, Mr Richard Armitage, the deputy secretary of defense for Southeast Asia and the Pacific, General Charles Gabriel, the chief of staff of the U.S. Air Force, Admiral William Small, the deputy chief of naval operations, General John Wickham, the deputy chief of staff of the army, General Robert Barrow, the commandant of the Marine Corps, Admiral Harry Train, the Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic and commander of the Atlantic Command, and many other high-ranking U.S. military officers.

Diplomatic circles who followed his meetings with important U.S. military officers observed that the U.S. officials had given attention to and studied the problems ahead of time. Thus, when the Thai supreme commander stated the Thai point of view, the two sides were able to get to the heart of the matter quickly and understand each other well.

A Necessary Change: Thailand Will Depend On Itself

In the period prior to 1975 when the United States still had great influence in Southeast Asia, Thailand's national defense strategy was greatly influenced by the United States in the direction of having a strategy of depending on the United States. Thus, it was also necessary to follow the path, or interests, of the United States. But when the United States withdrew its troops from Indochina and Southeast Asia, there was much talk, both in Thailand and in the United States, to the effect that Thailand would "go communist," meaning that Thailand would be the next to become communist after Indochina. But Thailand has maintained its independence to the present. This shows Thailand's capabilities in defending the country by itself.

During his visit to the United States, General Saiyut made it clear to the United States that Thailand intends to maintain [the security of] the country and that it is capable of doing so without having to rely on others as before. In pointing this out to high-ranking U.S. military officers, Thailand's supreme commander pointed out that, even though the population of Indochina is greater than that of Thailand, the population of Vietnam by itself is not much greater than that of Thailand. Besides this, Vietnam is still experiencing many domestic problems. Thus, when compared with Thailand, Thailand still has an advantage on several fronts.

Concerning the fact that Thailand will stand on its own feet, the supreme commander pointed out that Thailand has clearly developed its national defense strategy, such as the total strategy.

As for the internal security strategy, the people-civilian-police-military (PCPM) way of thinking is being used. It has been shown that this is capable of maintaining internal security. All of this confirms that Thailand is capable of maintaining [the security of] the country by itself.

U.S. aid: Only Weapons and War Materials; a Binding Treaty Is Not Involved

The supreme commander told everyone that he met that Thailand has sufficient will, resources and manpower to develop security. But it lacks equipment and weapons. And Thailand cannot spend much money to stockpile such items for use when necessary since they are very expensive. Thailand has considered things and decided that, concerning military development, we must not spend so much money that this would affect economic development. The policy of the United States is to help countries maintain their independence, sovereignty and freedom. Thus, the views of the two countries are in harmony because Thailand wants to maintain its independence, sovereignty and freedom by relying on itself. Thus, the United States should give weapons and equipment to Thailand but then allow Thailand to solve the problems itself instead of doing things like it did in the past. In the past, the United States acted "bossy" and stipulated policies for other countries. It signed binding military treaties with various countries and sent troops to some countries. This is outmoded and other countries, even small countries, cannot accept this.

Thus, at a time when the United States does not want to get bogged down in this region like it did during the Vietnamese War and at a time when it is facing a serious situation in Europe, the Middle East and elsewhere, since Thailand wants to stipulate its own policies, it would be good if the United States helps Thailand by just providing various types of aid without making strong military commitments.

In response to Thailand's attitude of self-confidence, the United States tried to bring up the old treaties that had been made with Thailand, such as the Thanat-Rusk Treaty and the Manila Treaty, in order to give assurances to Thailand. Concerning the matter of a treaty, the supreme commander said that this may have meaning just for the United States since it is a matter that the U.S. government can explain to the people of the United States. But the important thing for Thailand is not whether there is a mutual treaty. The important thing is whether [the United States] gives concrete support, meaning weapons and war materials. And we have not asked that these weapons just be given to us. We will pay for them. The Thai supreme commander told the United States that the help to be provided by the United States should consist only of sending items to Thailand in accord with the plan in which Thailand needs the weapons for use in defending the country and in accord with the plan in which it needs weapons for immediate use. On this occasion, the supreme commander presented weapons requirements plans for various periods so that the United States can ready the items in accord with Thailand's needs. All of this requires advance planning so that the two sides are in harmony. These statements [by the supreme commander] gave the United States a better understanding of Thailand's problems. A plan was formulated for sending weapons needed by Thailand in normal times. And in emergencies, the united States must quickly ready additional weapons and send them right away.

Besides the support with weapons and equipment, General Siayut reached an agreement with the United States concerning the matter of credit. This will keep Thailand from having to pay large sums of money in advance when purchasing weapons since we have to spend much money in other sectors. The United States realizes the situation Thailand is in and so it agreed in principle that Thailand will pay only a small premium in advance. When Thailand receives the weapons, it will gradually pay off the balance. But this will be a long-term loan at a low rate of interest.

Since the principles of weapons support were stipulated like this, Thailand's supreme commander took this opportunity to ask to purchase Bowpipe and Harpoon rockets in advance since it was felt that the United States does not want to release these types of weapons to other countries and the United States itself still has a great need for these types of rockets. It was explained that Thailand quickly needs to stockpile highly-efficient weapons in order to make Thailand's enemies think hard about invading Thailand. This should result in the United States agreeing to send Thailand these two types of rockets at the beginning of next year. This will increase Thailand's strength beginning from the next dry season.

An Historical Change In Strategy

In summary, previously, it was the United States, and not Thailand, that made almost all the plans for defending this region. This was the case from the time Seato was formed until troops were sent to the battlefields in Vietnam. But now, Thailand has clearly told the United States that we will no longer alow others to think for us. Thailand will formulate its own strategies, including foreign affairs and military strategies. This will enable Thailand to stipulate strategies or policies by holding to the interests of the country. Thus, how the United States sets its own strategies is its business. The United States does not want Thailand to become communist but it is not ready to send troops to this region again. At the same time, Thailand wants to stand on its own legs and stipulate its own strategies. These are mutual desires that give Thailand bargaining power and that allow it to ask for support, without any commitments, in order to build up the security of the country.

This trip by General Saiyut Koetphon has resulted in the United States now having to follow the plans made by Thailand rather than our having to stipulate national defense plans in accord with plans made by the United States, which mav not be in line with Thai interests. This has resulted because we have self-confidence and have proven that we can stand on our own feet.

INDOCHINA TRADE BAN BLAMED ON U.S.

Bangkok SU ANAKHOT in Thai 29 Aug-4 Dep 82 pp 22, 23

[Article: "Thai-Indochinese Relations: Politics Leads the Way, Trade Follows"]

[Text] Ever since Vietnam displayed its power and sent troops into Thailand at Ban Non Mak Mun in Aranyaprathet District in June 1980, relations between Thailand and Vietnam have continually deteriorated. And it is certain that this will affect trade between the two countries, which is already small, and bring all trade [between them] to a halt.

The Thai government at that time announced that it was prohibiting the sale of war materials to Vietnam. There are very few types of goods that Thailand can sell to Vietnam. The things that have taken place have also affected the other Indochina countries that are satellites of Vietnam. Trade between Thailand [and these countries] has gradually declined too.

But suddenly, in the middle of August, there were reports in one foreign-language newspaper in Thailand that Thailand would repeal the ban on sending rice, which is considered to be one type of war material, to Vietnam. It finally reached the point where Mr Arun Phanuphong, the deputy minister of foreign affairs, had to issue a statement denying this.

At the same time, Mr Danai Dulalampha, who became the director-general of the Department of Foreign Trade only recently, confirmed that Thailand definitely does not have a policy of selling rice to Vietnam. And concerning the reports that 40,000 tons of rice will be sent to Vietnam, actually, this rice will be sold to the Soviet Union. If the Soviet Union wants to send this rice to some other country, we cannot stop them from doing so.

This is confirmation that the 40,000 tons of rice that the Soviet Union purchased from one Thai rice trading company, that is, the Thai Fa 2511 company, will definitely be sent to Vietnam.

"Private companies have the right to trade with any country they want. The only exception is South Africa. This is in accord with a U.N. resolution. It is only natural that, when a rice trading company exports rice, there are no restrictions on which countries the rice can be sold to after it is purchased from Thailand," said Mr Danai. He also said that:

"Last year, the Soviet Union purchased 277,000 tons of rice from Thailand. We don't know whether they gave this rice to Vietnam or not since the Soviet Union purchased the rice FOB, Bangkok, and transported the rice on their own ships. We don't know where they sent the rice."

As for trade between Thailand and the Indochina countries during the past 5-6 years, a recent report issued by the Department of Business Economics said that the value of this trade is very small. It looked as if trade would expand in the period 1977-1979. But after that, trade declined. In 1980, when the Non Mak Mun affair occurred, trade declined 138.4 percent. And trade declined ever further in 1981. Last year, the value of imports and exports between the two countries reached only 18 million baht. Thailand exported to Vietnam goods valued at 9.5 million baht and imported from Vietnam goods valued at 8.5 million baht. This can be compared with 1980 when the value of the goods reached 276 million baht. Thus, the value of the goods declined 258 million baht, or 93.5 percent.

Thai exports to Vietnam during the past 5 years, that is from 1977 through 1981, were as follows: Exports in 1977 were valued at 245.4 million baht; exports for 1978 were valued at 239.1 million baht; exports for 1979 were valued at 448.2 million baht; in 1980, they were valued at 254.1 million baht; and in 1981, they were valued at 9.5 million baht. Concerning the types of goods exported by Thailand to Vietnam, in addition to rice, Thailand exported motorcycles, scooters, butter, paper, cardboard and meat.

As for imports from Vietnam during this 5-year period, Thailand imported more goods from Vietnam every year, with the exception of 1981 when imports declined. In 1977, imports were valued at 2.2 million baht. In 1978, there were valued at 10.1 million baht. Imports for 1979, 1980 and 1981 were valued at 12.5, 21.9 and 8.5 million baht respectively. The main item purchased from Vietnam was coal.

In looking at Thai exports to and imports from Vietnam, it can be seen that Thailand had a very favorable balance of trade with Vietnam every year, with the exception of 1981, when there was little trade and Thailand's favorable balance of trade was only 1 million baht.

As for the other Indochina countries, such as Laos, the value of trade with Thailand is several times greater than that with Vietnam because Laos must depend on Thailand for all types of goods. For the period 1977 to 1981, Thailand exported goods worth 291.2 million baht to Laos [in 1977] and the value of the goods exported reached 910.5 million baht in 1980. But in 1981, the value of the goods exported fell to 586 million baht. Laos purchases mostly yarn, textiles, sweetened condensed milk, glutinous rice, corn and tobacco from Thailand.

The items purchased by Thailand from Laos include various types of timber for construction, such as ormosia, dipterocarpaceae, and lagerstroemia, animal horns, animal bones and hides. But the value of the goods imported from Laos is not very great. In 1977, Thailand imported goods worth 48.3 million baht. In 1978, the value of the goods imported was 56.4 million baht. In 1979, 1980 and 1981, the value of the goods imported was 53.9, 37.2 and 17.5 million baht respectively. Looking at the balance of trade, Thailand has had a favorable balance of trade with Laos for the last 10 years. Looking at the figures, [it can be seen that] the year with the most favorable balance of trade [for Thaialnd] was 1980 when Thai exports exceeded imports by 873.3 million baht.

Another country that has historically been both a friend and an enemy of Thailand is Kampuchea. Kampuchea has been in a turmoil for several years. There was little trade in 1977 and 1978. Trade increased in 1979. Thailand exported goods valued at 170.3 million baht to Kampucha. But Kampuchea did not export anything to Thailand. The best year for trade between Thailand and Kampuchea was 1980. Kampuchea purchased goods valued at 659.1 million baht but Thailand did not purchase any goods from Kampuchea. But in 1981 trade declined to only 101 million baht. Thailand was the exporter. Kampuchea exported to Thailand goods valued at only 200,000 baht.

Looking at the balance of trade between Thailand and the Indochina countries, Thailand had a favorable balance of trade with each of the countries. But it has not been possible to carry on trade fully and this has allowed other countries to snatch these profits. This has resulted because of the ban on selling certain types of Thai goods to Vietnam. The countries that have taken over and carried on trade in place of Thailand are friends of Thailand in Asean. Mr Lee Kuan Yew, the prime minister of Singapore, once said that he was a real enemy of Vietnam. But he has allowed Singaporean merchants to take this opportunity, in which Thailand has implemented a policy of prohibiting tradewith Vietnam, to purchase goods from Thailand and then sell them to Vietnam.

"If Thailand does not trade with Vietnam and allows Singapore to act as a broker in our place, we will be put at a disadvantage. We must change this policy," said a high-ranking official from the Ministry of Commerce about this.

At present, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has begun to see the disadvantages in this. But this is an international political policy that must be changed by the government."

"It was proper for the government to ban trade with Vietnam after Vietnam invaded Thailand. But now, the situation has changed. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs is ready to open a way. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has a farsighted view and feels that the economic problems are most important," said the high-level news source from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

"This matter may be discussed in detail at this week's conference of the Joint Government-Private Committee for Solving the Economic Problems."

However, this may be a simple problem that is very difficult to solve. Because besides the fact that Thailand has a firm agreement with the other Asean countries, in the bachground there may be strong pressure from the United States. The United States wants to exert pressure on Vietnam to get Vietnam to do what the United States wants. For example, it wants Vietnam to provide information about the American soliders listed as missing in action in the Vietnamese War. And it is known that Thai policies concerning Indochina are stipulated by the United States. The United States is clever and has not played an open role. But it is the one behind the various policies of Thailand.

Since the situation is like this, it is not expected that there will be any changes in the policies concerning trade between Thailand and Indochina. The situation will probably remain as it is.

If nothing can be changed, we will have to continue to let Singapore be the one to make all the profits from trading with Indochina.

COLUMNIST VOICES DISGRUNTLEMENT OVER RELATIONS WITH MALAYSIA

Bangkok DAO SIAM in Thai 6 Sep 82 p 5

Sunday Criticisms column by Taphaya: "What's Going On Between Thailand and Malaysia? Senior People Are Muttering"]

[Text] It has been 20 years since Thailand and Malaysia agreed to cooperate in eleiminating the terrorists who operate along the border between the two countries.

This has been 20 years of misunderstanding. Twenty years of failure. Twenty years in which Thailand has been taken advantage of. And 20 years of mutual suspicion.

What is behind the misunderstanding? The leaders of the two countries have not talked to each other in an understandable or sensible way. One side has spoken Thai while the other has spoken the language of Malaysia. How srange!

And now Lieutenant General Han Linanon, the commanding general of the Fourth Army Area, has loudly expressed his dissatisfaction over the results of the meeting of the Thai-Malaysian Border Committee, which just concluded its meeting several days ago.

[He is dissatisfied] because Malaysia is not sincere and does not intend to cooperate in the suppression operations.

Malaysia, on the other hand, has charged that Thailand is supporting the Malaysian communist guerrillas. And during this meeting, Malaysia did not mention the bandit terrorists, who have run rampage along Thailand's southern border. The Malaysian communist guerrillas speak the language of Malaysia and they regularly cause trouble in Thailand.

Besides this, the bandit terrorists also receive weapons support from abroad.

But there is more to the disharmony between Thailand and Malaysia than this.

Malaysia has been given permission to send troops across the border several kilometers into Thailand in pursuit of terrorists. But Thailand does not have permission to pursue terrorists into Malaysia. What are the senior people in the Thai government thinking?

But if it is said that the purpose is to show them how honest we are, this hasn't happened. Recently, Genral Saiyut Koetphon, the supreme commander, muttered in response to a reporter's question concerning this matter that "their government is still new. It just came to power and so it doesn't understand."

Yes. Thais always view others in a good light. But Thailand is frequently viewed in a bad light.

We will try to find proof for them so they understand, said Genral Saiyut.

Thais get hurt, but they never remember. And when will we speak to each other so that we understand each other?

HIGH-RANKING INTERIOR OFFICIAL PROFILED, PREM LINK NOTED

Bangkok SU ANAKHOT in Thai 29 Aug-4 Sep 82 pp 11, 12

[Article: "Keep an Eye On Phisan"]

[Text] Phisan Munlasatsathon, age 53, is the son of Mr Munlasatsathon and Mrs Phaka. He was born in Surin Province. In his youth, he was a boxer. Although he is not too well known, one of his younger brothers is a boxer who is well known to boxing fans as the "Earth Mover of Surin." He graduated from a provincial high school and then continued his education at Thammasat University. He then studied political science at Chulalongkorn University, or Sing Tam, Class 1. He began his government career as the deputy district officer in San Kha District, Surin Province. He served as deputy district officer in several districts before becoming the district officer of Muang District, Surin Province, in 1958. In 1967, he served as the assistant provincial governor of Surin. In 1968, he became the assistant governor of Phetchabun Province. Later, he was transferred to serve as the assistant governor of Nakhon Phanom Province and then made the deputy governor of this province in 1973. In 1974, he served as the governor of Sisaket Province. In 1975, he was the governor of Nakhon Phanom Province. In 1977, he served as the governor of Udorn Ratchathani Province before being moved to the position of director-general of the Department of Local Administration at the end of 1980. After serving in this position for 4 months, he was appointed undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior. But before he could take this position, the coup of 1-3 April 1981 broke out. He was appointed to the position of head of the interior section in the National Peacekeeping Directorate. When things returned to normal, he became the undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior and a senator.

Concerning the matter of Phisan Munlasatsathon changing course from being a minor official of the Ministry of Interior who was hidden in local administration, particularly in the northeast, and taking a central administrative position as the director-geneal of the Department of Local Administration, and then rising to undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior in just 4 months when the former undersecretary, Damrong Sunthonsarathun was transferred to the Office of the Prime Minister to await the investigation of the local printery case, besides the fact that this is viewed as having occurred because of his closeness to General Prem ever since they served in the northeast together, the political role of Phisan has began to attract attention. He is being viewed as the Political "wheel" of General Prem. In particular, during each crisis, Phisan has played an important part in the mass movements to generate support for the prime minister in the form "anything, but it must be General Prem."

The close relationship between Phisan and General Prem was formed during the time General Prem was the commanding general of the Second Army Area and Phisan was the governor of Nakhon Phanom Province in 1975. In that perio , Phisan implemented the policy of the commanding general and formed the first Thai Village Self-Defense Volunteers unit in Nakhon Phanom Province. Later on, the idea of establishing a people's army in the border areas to counter the Vietnamese, who had begun to invade Kampuchea, grew much stronger in the northeast. Then in 1978 during the time of the first Kriangsak government, an act disbanding the scattered forces was promulgated. The only groups left were the Village Scouts, the Regional Security Volunteers, the People's Volunteeers for Development and Self-Defense and the Volunteer Defense Corps.

Concerning the special qualities of Phisan, in addition to the fact that he is a very personable man, during the time he was governor he got along well with the people because he is a very capable person in carrying on mass activities, encouraging and comforting people and assembling people. As undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior, his role is to go with General Prem into the countryside. Since the middle of last year, there have been periodic reports that General Prem will run for election as a member of the Democrat Party or Social Action Party. And an image of General Prem as the only person fit to be prime minister has been created. In considering these things, an eye must be kept on the role of Phisan. Because concerning the demonstrations that have helped General Prem each time, mass activities have frequently been the method used. Regardless of the mass forces used to welcome him, they usually carry posters supporting General Prem for election. This has been the case in Songkhla, his birthplace, and Korat, where he served as the commanding general of the Second Army Area at the Suranari Camp and in other provinces. There was the postcard affair of the people in Songkhla who support General Prem for another term as prime minister. And there was the matter of extending his term as RTA CINC, when Thawee Kraikhup went out and sent postcards to the MPs.

"Concerning the fact that Undersecretary Phisan often accompanies General Prem, this is because he is a government official and has to act in accord with the policies. When the prime minister calls on him to perform various tasks, these are orders from the prime minister and he cannot refuse to carry out the tasks," explained a younger Sing Dam graduate who is close to Undersecretary Phisan concerning why Phisan has had to work closely with General Prem. He also talked about why Phisan is thought to be the person who assembles villagers to cheer General Prem. "The charge that whenever Phisan goes on an inspection tour with the prime minister, he must assemble villagers to support the prime minister is an ordinary matter of political scheming by politicians in general. On a visit to some area, if it seemed that the people were indifferent, this would have been unbecoming. General Prem has many "kun Su" [advisors]. He has to let them do such things. Undersecretary Phisan could not do this by himself," said the same person to SU ANAKHOT.

Even though it was a close associate of Phisan who said this, there is the matter of the explosion at Prem's Si Sao house. Tens of thousands of Village Scouts and Volunteer Defense Corps members held parades to show support for General Prem in order to reverse the situation and turn it in his favor. Such demonstrations were held in Surin, Nakhon Phanom, Sisaket, Kalasin and several other provinces. In addition, [there were demonstrations] by the same groups of people in Ratchaburi who had once demonstrated to show support for Thawee Kraikhup, the deputy minister of commerce, during the time parliament questioned him about distributing money to MPs to destroy the constitution. General Prem had to welcome all these people and so he finally had his secretary telephone undersecretary Phisan and tell him that it was not necessary for villagers to come here and that they could simply demonstrate their concern in their own province. As for the problems that followed, besides the fact that it was Phisan who recruited villagers to show support for General Prem, some people have said that he was the one who created the entire situation in order to win votes and sympathy for General Prem.

"Concerning his recruiting villagers, we can see the game he was playing. The members of the Volunteer Defense Corps who came that day were all Prem men. It took only one telephone call to get them to come. The high-ranking officials in the ministry are all aware of this. And concerning the explosion, look at the manner in which the grenade was thrown. A terrorist would have been well aware of the fact that he could not have caused any damage because there are three palm trees blocking the way," said a news source in the Ministry of Interior. However, the reasons for charging that this situation was orchestrated intentionally are rather weak since there was no reason to do such a thing. "Why would Phisan do this? This is just not true. General Prem and Phisan are on the same team. If he did this, General Prem would be the loser. The reason that the Volunteer Defense Corps went to give support was because they wanted to eliminate the troubles of General Prem. It was not necessary to create a situation. Its a life and death matter for the nation," said a news source close to Phisan when SU ANAKHOT asked about the matter of Phisan being charged with having created the situation.

About a year ago when Phisan was serving as the undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior, his skill at mass activities left him with little time to spend at his office. He frequently had to make trips to the provinces in order to carry on psychological operations and security activities. Others had to carry out his other duties for him. Government officials began to complain that there was rarely anything new to do. However, Phisan has never had conflicts with any group in the ministry. One of his good administrative principles is that he tries to involve other institutions and does not limit things to just the Sing Dam or Sing Daeng. Phisan seems to be very afraid of "playing favorites." The Sing Dam group is unhappy about Phisan limiting their role. Because what has been happening is that the competition between the two institutions has become more intense. It has reached the point where, if the undersecreary belongs to one "sing," he will try to suppress the role of the other "sing."

Even though some people think that Phisan is connected to the various events and feel that he has played a rather great political role recently, in the eyes of the military, Phisan does not have any great role and is not really worth keeping an eye on. The only thing is that his image was tarnished slightly by the events of 1-3 April. Phisan went on television and made an appeal side by side with Colonel Charuai Nimdit, an officer in the psychological operations section of the Second Army Area. One commander who helped suppress the young turks that time said that "he is too much of an actor. He doesn't come across as being sincere."

Another turning point has about been reached. General Prem is moving forward to hold the political reins for another term. That is, [he wants] to be prime minister for another term after the election in 1983. Unless there is a coup beforehand, Phisan will continue to play a vital role for General Prem.

And since there is another person who is the political and military heir apparent, General Athit Kamlangek, who will probably become the RTA CINC, will have to give attention to forming new relationships, even though the RTA CINC has said that he does not like to do such things.

COLUMNIST NOTES DISSENSION IN SUPREME COMMAND REORGANIZATION

Bangkok BAN MUANG in Thai 16, 17 Sep 82

[16 Sep 82 pp 4, 5]

[Text] Geneal Saiyut Koetphon, the supreme commander, has initiated something of historical importance by having the commanders in chief of the army, navy and air force serve concurrently as deputy sumpreme commanders.

General Prem Tinsulanon agrees. General Athit Kamlangek has reservations. General Kriangsak Chamanan not only disagrees but has proposed that Supreme Command Headquarters be abolished.

The idea of building up the military so there is greater unity has been floating around for many years. Soldiers and scholars once did a study and proposed that the military be improved. But unfortunately, such things always come to a sudden stop everytime there are political changes.

The Thai political system has no standards. None of the popularly elected governments has ever finished its 4-year term. This is just the opposite from those who bear arms, who have gained power without having obtained the approval of the people. These people just stay in power until they are driven out with guns.

The political shifts have made it necessary for the military system to have to rely on itself. And since it relies so much on itself, a rigidity has set in which makes it difficult for [soldiers] to get along with others, regardless of whether it is groups with economic power or the political parties. Thus, the military has also taken on the responsibility of administering the country.

And in the military, it is the army that stipulates everything. The navy and the air force just implement the policies given to them.

This has resulted in the balance in the administrative system tilting toward the army. This is not good for the country as a whole or even for the army. Because, this is not normal.

The experts in the army may be experts in maintaining security, in waging war and in using power to govern the people in the country. But there is more to the country than this.

The growth and progress of the country depends on skill in many fields, for example, the economic and financial system, agricultural development, stratagems in foreign affairs, community development, control of the education system and so on.

To carry out the tasks in each of these sectors specialists in each of these sectors msut be relied on.

If just the professional soldiers try to do everything, the country will not make progress. In the beginning, the Thai military had a top-down structure flowing from the prime minister (or leader of the Revolutionary Council) to the minister of defense, undersecretary of defense and commanders in chief of the army, navy and air force. After the coup in 1958, the United States came and changed the structure. A supreme command was established, which was in imitation of the U.S. military system.

Initially, Supreme Command Headquarters was established for the purpose of controlling the three armed services. But problems arose because the standards of the Thai and American militaries were different. In the U.S. military, everything is done according to the system and according to firm standards. But in the Thai military, things are bent and twisted because we rely on individuals more than the sytem.

In the past, the supreme commander was often the head of the Revolutionary Council, the RTA CINC, the prime minister and the minister of defnese all in one.

Military leaders did not dare disperse power because they would have risked having power seized from them.

Thus, the American principles were beautiful words. But they were useless in practice. The Thai military and political systems have constantly gone through cycles of collapse and regeneration. Everybody is aware of this but no one has dared take action. No one has dared stand up and point out that doing things this way is wrong. General Saiyut Koetphon is the first person to do so.

This action by General Saiyut Koetphon is correct. Every faction should support this so that the development of the Thai military succeeds, so that it is strong and so that it has a system.

When the military has standards, we can begin to hope that politics will follow the standards of another system and that Thailand will make rapid progress. Individuals cannot be more important than the system.

[17 Sep 82 pp 4, 5]

[Text] According to the general structure of the military as pointed out by General Saiyut Koetphon, the chain of command, in decending order, is as follows:

The prime minister, the minister of defense, the undersecretary of defense, the supreme commander, and the commanders in chief of the armed services (army, navy and air force). This is a tight structure.

There will be problems at the level of the undersecretary of defense. As for the old image, which is a very tiresome matter, of sending people to the "graveyard" of defense, there is little hope that an administor at the level of undersecretary will be able to give orders to the supreme commander. The old structure of the military stipulated that the undersecretary of defense was to be a sort of "housewife" responsible for administrative tasks and a link between the minister, who is a politician, and the soldiers in the three armed services, who are government officials.

In the past, the undersecretary of defense was a modest and unassuming individual who played a very small part in things. He just carried out the orders of th minister. How good a job he did is another matter. In such a situation the undersecretary of defense is a bureaucrat who is bound by regulations, laws and orders.

Thus, there is a question of how much flexibility he will have if he is given the task of supervising the supreme commander. The position of supreme commander is a position that has special qualities. The regular activities are combined with politics. Some of the tasks cannot be carried out with regulations or carried out in a normal way.

However, this new structure initiated by General Saiyut is suited to the situation of the military, which is constantly growing larger.

Previously, the activities in the military were very limited. Combat was in the form of sending soldiers to fight abroad. The war materials were limited by the small amount of money available. Security activities, mass psychological operations and military development activities were not carried on widespreadly.

It was the Ministry of Interior that was responsible for everything. It was responsible for everything from maintaining order in the country and developing the communications to digging canals and promoting village occupations.

But now the Ministry of Defense is involved in just as many tasks. The undersecretary of defense should be responsible for the administrative tasks, which must be carried out in accord with the regular work chain. He must supervise all the units to see that the regulations are obeyed.

The supreme commander should be responsible for all staff tasks and military operations.This includes making decisions on some political matters.

If the tasks of the two are clearly divided like this, the supreme commander should be directly responsible to the minister of defense. He should not have to go through the undersecretary of defense, which would only complicate matters. And this would greatly reduce the levels.

In the present period, the commanders in chief of the army, navy and air force have specific duties stipulated by law. A single person must not hold several positions like a god or superman sitting working among his underlings who does not have a chance to get in close touch with the facts.

If the positions can be separated, with the prime minister, minister of defense, supreme commander and RTA CINC each holding just one position, and a single person can be prohibited from wearing several hats, the military and the country will make great progress.

And when those in the military act as examples, people in other professions will definietly have to develop too. This inlcudes the political parties and the groups with economic influence.

Those who go against this and involve themselves in things outside their role will no longer be able to live in society.

This is a wonderful picture and is viewed from a good angle. As for whether it will be possible to actually carry this out, we will just have to wait and see.

Those who govern the country must work as a team under a correct legal system. Everyone must respect the rights and duties of others and obey the rules that have been made.

Maintaining the system of clinging to individuals will quickly destroy the country. The lives of people are short. For the country to make progress, the importance of the system, which will endure longer than an individual, must be stressed.

LACK OF NEUTRALITY ON KHMER COALITION ASSAILED

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 6 Sep 82 pp 13, 14

[Article: "Announcement...Announcement: Thailand Must Serve Sihanouk Again!"]

[Text] After Sihanouk received support from the Thai Ministry of Foreign Affairs and a Khmer coalition government was formed, with the Thai government providing great support on all fronts, Sihanouk and his cohorts took what had been accomplished and split away in great glee.

Thailand and the Thai people cannot go anywhere. We must take responsibility for the problem.

The problem concerns the troubles that have followed in the wake of the Kampuchean people fighting for state power. Concerning the Heng Samrin group, Vietnam is supporting it on all fronts, inlcuding helping the Kampucheans to kill each other. Vietnam is trying to eliminate the other Khmer groups that will not surrender. The main [opposition] groups are the Khmer Rouge (that is, the Pol Pot communists), the Moulinaka faction (Sihanouk's group) and the Khmer Seri (Son Sann's group), or Khmer Coalition Government as they are called. These groups are being supported by Red China and the United States.

Said differently, they have sponsors and all are equal.

The Khmer coalition has taken over an area near the Thai-Kampuchean border. They flee here from the attacks of the Khmer-Vietnamese group in order to purchase essential items and weapons that sympathetic Thais smuggle in and sell to them. Besides this, when they are attacked by the Khmer-Vietnamese group, they flee into Thailand. The Khmer-Vietnamese group [supposedly] cannot follow since it does not dare violate [Thai] sovereignty by crossing the border. But this is true only occasionally. Many times, they have pursued them across the border and gone several kilometers [into Thailand]. Sometimes, they withdraw without clashing with Thai soldiers. But many times there have been clashes because we have had to defend our territory. We cannot allow our sovereignty to be violated. As for those who flee here, Thai soldiers push them back across the border.

In addition to the close combat, the Khmer-Vietnamese group often uses support weapons such as artillery and rockets. Sometimes, these land in Thai territory, occasionally causing destruction. This happens frequently and Thais, who are not involved, have frequently experienced losses. As for those who are involved, they do not live along the border and so they do not have to suffer like the villagers.

The fact that the Khmer coalition groups have settled down near the Thai border is a matter of intention. That is, they want the forces of the Khmer-Vietnamese group to clash with Thai soldiers. In many cases, it is thought that clashes resulted because of inducements by the Khmer coalition. Or the Khmer coalition created the situation. The members of the Khmer coalition and the Khmer-Vietnamese group resemble each other physically, unlike Asians and Europenas, and so all they have to do to transform themselves is change clothes.

The Khmer-Vietnamese group frequently charges that, if Thailand had really been neutral and had not given support to the other Khmer groups, the Khmer-Vietnamese group would have been able to suppress the other Khmer groups several years ago. But to date, this charge has not been substantiated since the evidence is too weak.

They have made such charges for a long time in order to point out that the situation has now changed since the Sihanouk group has had the "good fortune" to have Thailand as a propaganda tool. Because this confirms that Thailand has sided with the Khmer coalition and is interfering in the internal affairs of Kampuchea. The entire world knows this.

Thus, if the Khmer-Vietnamese group takes action against Thailand or the Thai people, no one will sympathize with us. Or stated plainly, this is not proper. And the Thai people, including monks, novices, nuns and the common people living along the Thai-Kampuchean border, will continue to have to "keep their heads down" and flee the danger as newspaper photographs have shown. And if their luck is really bad, they may be killed or lose their property at any time because of the intentional and unintentional actions of the various Khmer groups.

Concerning the latest reports of minor troubles experienced by Thai people, who were hit by nine 107-millimeter rockets, 14 K82 rounds and six RPG rounds, which resulted from a battle in Kampuchea on 17-18 August, this shows that the fact that Thailand has [forsaken] real neutrality and gotten involved in the internal affairs of Kampuchea by supporting the formation of the Khmer coalition government has not helped reduce the troubles of the Thai people, troubles that have arisen because of foreigners.We continue to have to shoulder the burden of helping Sihanouk. For example, there were reports that, on 17 August, 272 armed Khmer Rouge soldiers crossed the border into Thailand in the Ban Mai Pa Hong, Ban Khlong Nam Sai and Ban Salong Khrong areas in order to join the Moulinaka gorup under the leadership of Sihanouk. Thai officials disarmed them and let them stay at the Khao I Dang refugee center while waiting for word from the Sihanouk group as to whether or not they would accept them.

Why? Thailand is independent. Sihanouk is the president of the Khmer [coalition government]. Those are Kampucheans. If they want help, let them help each other. Why does Thailand have to get involved?

Concerning these reports, if it is said that we are not helping Sihanouk, what else can it be called?

The previous time, Sihanouk sent a telegram to the Thai minister of foreign affairs asking him to keep Kampucheans from being sent, as was reported by PATINYA.

Such things have never happened before, and it is not known how much longer we will have to be the servant of Sihanouk.

Actually, these 272 Kampucheans may have been fleeing from the intense suppression operations of the Khmer-Vietnamese group.

The correct thing to do (regardless of why these 272 Kampucheans crossed into Thailand) is to expel them from Thailand. We should not continue to take care of them at the refugee center.

But this is probably not possible since, concerning the Kampuchean matter, we have constantly done the wrong thing.

The thing that has become clear is that, concerning the countries that supported the formation of the Khmer coalition government, which includes the members of Asean, Red China and the United States, their soldiers do not have to undergo hardships and their people do not have to experience the fate of the Thai people. And these countries do not have to be the servant of Sihanouk like Thailand does.

Being a Thai in the present period is really painful.

EDITORIAL URGES SUPPORT FOR PALESTINIAN STATE, CAUTION ON PLO

Bangkok SIAM RAT in Thai 28 Aug 82 p 3

[Editorial: "The PLO: What Is Best?"]

[Text] In his capacity as a foreign affairs official of the PLO, Mr Ali Fayyad, a representative of the PLO, visited Thailand as a guest of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He met with Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, the minister of foreign affairs, and with high-ranking officials of other ministries in order to discuss a still undisclosed matter. But it is known that this PLO representative came in order to make several requests of the Thai government. Otherwise, Mr Asa Sarasin, the director-general of the Political Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, would not have said that requests were made and that we will consider them.

Formerly, Mr Fayyad was the PLO ambassador in Hanoi. His duties concerned activities in Southeast Asia.

Unless we misunderstand, the PLO representative made this trip to Thailand in order to ask for Thailand's support and to get Thailand to recognize this organization as the representative of the Palestinian people, who are presently scattered about the various Arab states, such as Jordan, Syria, Iraq and Tunisia, and along the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

Concerning this political struggle by the PLO to get countries to recognize the PLO as the government, or representative, of the Palestinian people even though the Palestinian people do not have a place to establish a country, it is understood that this is in preparation for the next meeting of the U.N. General Assembly, which will take place at the end of next month. And at this meeting, some of the Islamic countries will probably submit another motion demanding an initial U.N. resolution on the formation of a Palestinian state just like Israel. Because from the time Israel was established in 1948, the Palestinians have not been able to form a state. Political and military pressures have constatnly blocked them and this is why the Palestinians still do not have a country of their own.

Even though Israel is presently trying to destroy the political and military structure of the PLO by driving them out of Beirut (which is going on right now), the camps of the PLO are still intact and it is understood that they will join together in order to liberate their country.

Concerning this, we feel that the Thai government should carefully consider whether recognizing the PLO would have a positive or negative effect on the country. Because if the effect is more negative than positive, we should remain passive for now instead of rushing to recognize this organization.

But from a humanitarian standpoint, SIAM RAT, as a part of the mass media, agrees that a Palestinian state should be established. This is because we feel that this is the only way to bring peace to the Middle East.

COLUMNIST DISCUSSES PLO REPRESENTATION ISSUE

Bangkok SIAM RAT in Thai 30 Aug 82 p 2

[Article by Kasem Atchasai: "Will a PLO Information Office Be Opened?"]

[Text] Several days ago, a representative of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, Mr Ali Fayyad, visited Thailand as a guest of the government. It appears that the government gave him a warm reception in accord with his position.

The fact that the Thai government welcomed a representative of the PLO may make some readers wonder whether Thailand has now accepted a representative of the Palestinian terrorist organization.

The thing worth noting is that there has been little news about the visit by Mr Fayyad and few newspapers have printed any stories about this. Actually, government officials should do something to make the people understand the difference between the PLO and the terrorist organization. And they should clearly explain why the PLO has sent a representative.

I remember that, not too long ago, Mr Yassir Arafat, the leader of the PLO, visited Hanoi in the position of one who had received support form the Soviet Union too and as a national liberator.

Based on this alone, it can be surmised that, in the socialist world, the PLO has received great support.

But in the free world, or Western countries, or the West, the PLO's image is more negative than positive, regardless of how much sympathy they have received.

The reason is that the countries that are pro United States, which inlcudes Thailand, feel unsure about what position to take concerning the PLO's request for cooperation in establishing an information office in Bangkok. From the standpoint of news, this should be beneficial because, at present, Thailand gets information from the West only.

The thing that must be discussed first is: What does the Thai government think the position of the PLO is and if it allows the PLO to set up an information office here, will this make the United States, Israel's backer, unhappy? Because if the information office is opened and Israel gets upset and protests to the United States, it may use its influence to strike back at us.

Thus, the Thai government must discuss this matter with the United States first.

Second, why do we (that is, the Thai government) have to take an interest in the PLO?

Actually, we do not have to take any interest in this matter if we think that this organization is a representative of the Palestinian terrorist organization that has caused trouble all over the world.

But Thailand does have to "care" because, even though the PLO is not the government of the Palestinian people at present, this organization has the support of the Islamic states, particularly the countries in the Middle East that have great influence among Third-World countries. In particular, [it is supported by] Iraq, which is trying to be the prime mover in arranging the conference of non-aligned countries to be held in Baghdad next month.

The oil-rich Arab countries such as Iraq have great influence in the United Nations and can do what they want because of their great financial power. And they can easily swing 90 Third-World country votes to make political moves.

M.L. Phiraphong Kasemsiri, the Thai ambassador to the United Nations said that it is true that we want to please, or humor, the Arab countries because, when we have asked for their help in submitting motions on the Indochina problem, they have constantly supported us. An example is the matter of preserving the seat of the government of Democratic Kampuchea in the United Nations.

Thus, concerning this visit by Mr Fayyad, it is understood that he has come to ask for repayment of the "capital" (which all the Arab countries have given to Thailand).

Since this is the case, it will be very difficult for the Thai government to refuse the request.

Actually, the United States recently expressed an attitude of wanting to talk with the PLO, which would be tantamount to recognizing the existence of this representative of the Palestinian people.

But it is not known whether the United States has now made changes in this policy since the plan to destroy the PLO structure in Beirut succeeded so well.

There are rumors that the foreign affairs subcommittee of the Thai House of Representatives is afraid that opening a PLO information office in Thailand will cause turmoil. But it is not understood how this could be the case.

Thus, the government must announce what action it actually intends to take on this matter.

PROMOTIONS OF SENIOR COMMANDERS, 1981 COUP LINKED IN SHUFFLE

Bangkok MATICHON SUT SAPPADA in Thai 19-25 Sep 82 pp 4-6, 38

[Article by "an Ordinary Reporter": "Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy, Classes 1 and 5: The Future Strength of the Royal Thai Army"]

[Text]"Eighty percent of the soldiers agree with this year's appointments," said General Prayut Charumani, the RTA CINC who will retire in just a few more days, with confidence. "Especially [with the choice] for the position of RTA CINC."

Why did General Athit Kamlangek become RTA CINC relatively easily?

The answer given by General Pathom Soemsin, the assistnat commander in chief of the army, who graduated form the Army Preparatory School, seems to be the one most on target.

"If General Athit has not been on hand during the events of 1 April, I don't know what would have happened. People who do a good job must be praised," said General Pathom. "General Athit does not have any blemishes. He speaks well and is understood by people at all levels. I think he talks like Mr Samak."

The First Problem For the New RTA CINC

"It is said that people do not like him. I do not think he smiles very much and so it seems like people do not like him," said General Pathom to MATICHON. "But I think that the faces of professional soldiers are like this."

In the view of General Prayut Charumnai, the reason that people do not like General Athit stems from the resoluteness of General Athit.

However, one high-ranking army officer told MATICHON that a survey among soldiers showed that General Athit was accepted by the soliders, especially by the combat units. And General Athit has leadership capabilities.

"But things will not be perfect," he said. "There will be a 'cold shoulder' situation. That is, they will give him the cold shoulder."

This officer gave an example and explained that if General Athit gives a party and invites officers to come, those who can avoid going will do so. This is because some officers want to see things done based on seniority.

Pamot-Athit, Love Understands Love

Before this year's appointment of the RTA CINC, there were many rumors and these caused much confusion. A MATICHON news source from the Army Special Operations Center confirmed that lower-ranking soldiers, both those near General Patmot and those near General Athit, gambled a lot of money.

That is, as the time for the announcement approached, they were not sure whether their "man" would win or lose. But the rumors surprisingly caused confidence.

"My father knew 7 days in advance," said the daughter of General Pamot to a reporter. "He said he would stay in his old position."

During an interview, General Prayut made the short comment that General Athit and General Pamot each have their own talents. One is skilled in operations and the use of force. The other is skilled in planning.

"Both men know themselves well. I think that if they both help each other according to their individual talents, things will improve in the army." This means that both General Athit and General Pamot will work jointly for [the good of] the army and the country.

"You can go write the criticisms yourself," said General Pamot. "Competing is useless. He just sat and laughed too."

Army Preparatory School Class 5, a Glow For Several More Years

Concerning the commanding generals of the various armies, with the exception of Major General Phat Urailoet, the commanding general of the First Army Area, all of these men are members of Army Preparatory School Class 5.

In the First Army Area, the two deputy commanders, Major General Sinthu Koetsombun and Major General Kasaem Sumanan, are both members of Class 5. Besides this, Major General Wanchai Ruongtrakun, the chief of staff of the First Army Area, is a member of Class 5 too.

The deputy commanders who are most senior are all members of Army Preparatory School Class 5.

In the First Army Area, the deputy commander who has greatest seniority is Major General Sinthu Koetsombun, the former commander of the 9th Division. The man who is second in seniority is Major General Kasem Sumanan.Both are members of Class 5.

In the Second Army Area, the deputy commander with the most seniority is Major General Loet Kanitthanakha, a member of Class 5.

In the Third Army Area, since Major General Phong Siripho, a member of Army Preparatory School Class 3, has been transferred and attached to the Office of the Undersecretary [of the defnese ministry] with [the pay scale of] a lieutenant general just as was Major General Udom Titthasiri, who was formerly the deputy commander of the Fourth Army Area, the most senior person is Major General Thiep Kromsuriyasak, the former commander of the 9th Division.He has served as the deputy commander of the Third Army Area since 1978.

In the Fourth Army Area, the deputy commander with the most seniority is Major General Pricha Chawiphat, a member of Army Preparatory School Class 5. He can be called a "lion of the south." That is, in 1978 he served as the commander of the Songkhla Military Province. In 1979, he was the commander of the 5th Division, and in 1981 he was the deputy commander of the Fourth Army Area.

While Major Geneal Pricha is the most senior person, another deputy commander is Major General Wanchai Chitchamnong, who graduated first in his class at the Armed Forces Staff College.

In next year's promotions, the position of commanding general of an army area will be the final goal, and it is expected that the figures will turn out as expected. The exception is one able officer from Class 5, who may act like some in Class 5 [sic] such as Lieutenant General Yutthasak Khlongtruatrok. It may be difficult to move to a higher position.

Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy Class 1, the Strength of the Future

Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy [CRMA] Class 1, an important member of which is Major General Chawalit Yongchayut, has few members but at present, they command very important forces and sectors.

This can be seen from the following list: Major General Sunthon Khongsomphong, the commander of the Army Aviation Center, Major General Chaichana Tharichat, the commander of the 1st Cavalry Division and Major General Wanchai Ruongtrakun, the chief of staff of the First Army Area [sic], Major General Somkhit Chongphayuha, the commander of the 9th Division, Major General Charuai Wongsayan, the commander of the Second Army Circle, Major General Saphrang Nutsathit, the director of the Office of Research and Development, and Colonel Ngamphon Nutsathit, the acting director of the Directorate of Intelligence, which is a very important position.

As for Major General Chawalit Yongchaiyut, he has been moved from the position of director of operations to the position of assistant army chief of staff for operations. The path of this general is open and he can either become a commanding general like Lieutenant General Han Linanon or become the chief of staff.

Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy Class 5, the Men Who Will Take Over Later On

In this year's transfers, the first three members of CRMA Class 5 to be promoted to general are Colonel Suchinda Khraprayun, the new director of operations, Colonel Isaraphong Nunphakdi, the new commander of the 6th Division, and Colonel Wimon Wongwanit, the new commander of the 1st Special Combat Division.

A news source in the army told MATICHON that if nothing changes for Colonel Isaraphong, in the next several years he will return to 1st Division headquarters again.

Thus, it can be said that, after those in Army Preparatory School Class 5, the next class of soldiers who will be promoted will be CRMA Class 1 of Major General Chawalit Yongchaiyut. Those next in line will be the members of CRMA Clas 5.

Looking ahead to what will happen in the next decade, the next RTA CINC after General Athit will probably come from CRMA Class 1. The next one after that should come from CRMA Class 5.

The commanders In Chief of the Three Armed Services Are Deputy Supreme Commanders

Concerning the proposal to have the commanders in chief of the armed services also serve as deputy supreme commanders, a high-ranking news source of MATICHON confirmed that this was not the innovation of General Saiyut Koetphon. Rather, it was the creative idea of an army officer who is making a great leap for an officer of the rank of "major general."

Concerning the reasons and purposes in establishing this position, first, it just happens that all three deputy supreme commanders retired this year. Second, during the past period, General Saiyut Koetphon has tried to bring the power of the commanders in chief of the three armed services under the control of the supreme commander somewhat by holding joint conferences every month. This seems to be a major matter but none of the commanders in chief have been very cooperative.

"It can be said that they have turns," said a news source coldly. "Because this will have no effect on commanding the forces."

This position was proposed in order to give the meetings a more definite shape so that General Saiyut Koetphon, the supreme commander, does not get too upset.

Finally, this was done in order to take this opportunity to arrange the supreme command system in a proper way as was once planned by General Krit Siwala. It is expected that the next supreme commander will come from the air force. After that, it will be the navy's turn, and then finally the army's turn once again.

The Three Armed Services, New Signs

Ever since the events of 14 October 1973, there has been criticism about the fact that military officers play too many roles at one time. For example, General Athit is the president of the Telephone Organization, the commander in chief of the air force is the president of Thai International and Thai Airways and the commander in chief of the navy is the president of the Port Authority of Thailand.

Another sign is that the new officers who have taken command in the three services have studied at other schools besides the military academies. They have studied military science and other subjects and they have studied abroad.

Their educational backgrounds are different from those who held command positions from the time of the 1974 coup to 14 October 1973. That is, the knowledge of these older officers was limited to domestic matters. They had little chance to observe good examples from abroad. Thus, they preferred to have a dictatorship and to destory democracy.

But most of the officers who hold command in the military today, particularly those at the level of major general and lieutenant general, are professional soldiers who are not involved in business activities involving privilege and influence. At the same time, many of them have earned MA degrees from abroad and some have served as military attaches abroad.

As for the army, this situation provides good soil in which General Athit Kamlangek, the new RTA CINC, can plant the seeds of democracy and develop the army with the goal being to have democracy.

"Deep Cracks" In the Army, the First Task For Him

Ever since the events of 1-3 April and the military promotions in September 1981, the words to the effect that there is great solidarity and unity in the army have been just "mouthwash" in order to give a good appearance. But actually, it can be said that "deep cracks" have arisen in the army.

Concerning these deep cracks, as the person who put down the rebellion and as the person who has risen in rank faster than anyone else, General Athit Kamlangek is closely involved in this.

But by virtue of the duties of the RTA CINC, General Athit must be creative in solving this problem quickly before these cracks cause someone in the army to fall into the crack and get lost in the darkness there.

Toadies Will Hurry to Come All the Time

When General Athit became the commander of the Capital Guards, toadies who follow in the tracks of the soldiers, toadies who had once joined the Thanin government and caused his downfall, tried to ingratiate themselves and become advisors to General Athit Kamlangek.

These people have caused General Athit to be talked about unfavorably and it will take awhile before he can escape the stench of these people.

Because if General Athit relies on these people, his future will not be that of a "small Sarit" but rather that of a "small Thanin."

Regardless of the fact that the paths of RTA CINC and prime minister have been so intertwined in the past, for General Athit, how high he will be able to climb while serving as RTA CINC will decide his future.

Some political advisors are trying to build up General Athit's image to make him appear like Field Marshal Sarit or have him speak like Mr Samak.

The lesson of history is that the advice of others, including politicians and soldiers, should be given attention. But the thing that will build a bright future for him is for him to "be his own man." Knowning how to coordinate interests and knowing how to use the good things from the past and look far into the future are the only things that will enable a leader to move forward.

And to endure, what is very important is to love the people and follow the path of democracy with honor.

KHAISAENG SUKSAI DISCUSSES UDOM SISUWAN THEORIES, PARTY AFFAIRS

Bangkok MATICHON SUT SAPPADA in Thai 19-25 Sep 82 pp 20, 21

[Interview with Mr Khaisaeng Suksai, the former leader of the Socialist Party of Thailand: "A Person Like Udom Sisuwan Has the Masses"; date and place not specified]

[Text] [Question] Would you give us some detailes about the background of Mr Udom Sisuwan when you joined the KPCP in the jungle? Is there anything of interest that is connected to or in line with his surrender?

[ANswer] Mr Udom has to be studied. He is a writer. He is courteous and modest. And in particular, he has great hopes for the country. He used to travel all over the world to attend peace conferences and writers' conferences. Once when he returned, he was jailed by the Sarit government. We were jailed together in 1958 and spent 7-8 years in prison. At that time, the people in jail inlcuded Mr Udom, Mr Isara Amantakun and Mr Utthon. They charged one, Mr Udom, with being a communist. But looking at the way he conducted himself in prison, he is a man worth studying.

He arranged his prison life very systematically. He read, wrote and played sports and music. He never boasted or got angry with anyone. He spoke very little.

Later on, when Mr Udom got out, he went to work for the Office of the VOICE OF ANG THONG, a newspaper. I got out around the same time and Mr Udom invited me to work there too. He asked me to come manage the VOICE OF ANG THONG printery. I was the manager at that time. He would come and sit with me. He is the one who gave me this job, saying that I would have to find sponsors, wear a necktie, wear clean clothes and wear good shoes. He said that I wuld have to travel about looking for sponsors and that I would have to carry a "James Bond" briefcase since we would be in good society. He gave people good ideas and was a person you could trust. He and his girlfriend were living with me and so I knew how much they loved each other. For their wedding, he asked me to be the best man. Then, 1 day after the wedding, Udom disappeared and I did not see him again.

[Answer] Around 1965 or 1966. I thought about why Udom had done this. I learned only later that....The person who had fought for independence and democracy and who had been jailed could not stay. I learned that he had gone into the jungle. I thought about why he had gone into the jungle. Did he leave as one who has a chance to help the country make progress? Did he go to join friends in the jungle? We were very happy. We wrote books. We had an office. Things were very comfortable for us. Giving up this life to live on roots and live among the bugs was not an ordinary matter. This shows that he had to have very good intentions toward the country.

I continued on with my life and did not hear anything about Udom. By chance, elections were called in 1968. The constitution had been written in the time of Field Marshal Sarit. When Field Marshal Sarit died, it took Field Marshal Thanom until 1968 to write another one. Elections were then held in 1969. I ran as a candidate and was elected MP. As an MP, I waged many battles. But as we had once discussed, we couldn't do anything. We couldn't defeat them because, at that time, the constitution stated that the only duty of the MPs was to submit motions and ask questions. We could not serve as deputy secretaries secretaries or ministers. I saw that whenever we said anything, the only opposition parties were ourselves and the Democrat Party. But we could never defeat the United Thai People's Party of Field Marshal Praphat and Field Marshal Thanom. I felt discouraged.

After the events of 14 October 1973, I ran for election in Nakhon Phanom. The Socialist Party won 15 seats. Even though they tried three times to appoint me minister, I refused since I wold not have been able to solve the problems. The opposition could not do anything. We could not defeat those with money and power. Also, people were trying to kill me and so I decided to flee into the jungle. Of course, the person I looked for in the jungle was Udom since I knew he was in the jungle and since we had been friends. I looked for Mr Pluong since he had gone into the jungle first.

[Question] What were things like when you first went into the jungle?

[Answer] When I went in, I was warmly welcomed. In the jungle, he was master. Everyone had faith in him. To smoke, he rolled banana leaves. He was quiet. He had no more than 15 baht on him. He earned 15 baht a month. He was very frugal in his habits. Sometimes friends came and gave him some coffee. This is what his life was like. But, at the same time, he was educated. He could write in English, Chinese and Russian. It was then that I learned that he had been a revolutionary for a long time. We were always together. We were friends and trusted each other. His personal life is really worth studying.

[Question] What were Udom and Pluong like when you were in the jungle together? Is there anything that would suggest that he was going to defect too?

[Answer] Concerning things in this world, if there was anything worth uniting for at that time, it was to solve the problems. When I was there, conflicts arose, people became selfish and people took advnatage of others. It is a Buddhist principle that if people take advantage of others and are selfish, there will not be solidarity. Thus, regardless of where it is, everyone will be like this.

Pluong and Udom both felt that their way, which had good hopes for the country, and that of their party, which has a Political Bureau, both had good intentions toward the country. But when the two began to disagree and lost faith in each other, when the students fled there and called for democracy to no avail, when politicians fled there and asked that things be democratic, again to no avail, and since only the old things were held to, he could not put up with this. He had to go along with the majority because no party is bigger than the people. The people are bigger than any element in a party. Thus, his defenction means that it is clear that there were repeated conflicts over the problems. When he lost, he had to leave. And this did not just happen.These conflicts had to have been going on for a long time.

[Question] Did he ever talk with you about this?

[Answer] The communist party is very disciplined. He never told me anything.

[Question] During the time of the united front organization when Mr Udom coordinated activities, Mr Udom never said that he had tried....

[Answer] Coordination. He constantly said that he had tried. He wanted to use the ideas of the united front in order to help our country become independent and have a perfect democracy.

[Question] Did he say that he had failed and had not reached the goals?

[Answer] No No. No. He said that the party was debating matters. There was a Political Bureau and a Central Committee. [He said] it was not a matter over which he alone had power. Thus, both Udom and Pluong were attacked by the students and politicians. Because those people spoke as one; they were all communists. But we were democratic and had various views. If people didn't believe us (laughs) today, never mind. We would try again tomorrow. This is how things were. Whatever their group said was believed. But our group was not like that. We were really democratic. Using slang, it can be said that the "horse was not tied." If the horse is not tied, it will run and run. This is real democracy. We went and joined the communists. And the communists could not put up with our ways either. Because if they had followed us, they would have been unhappy too. This is because their party is very disciplined. Our party was a free party. Really free.

[Question] There were reports that because Udom was responsible for the northeastern zone, in the northeast, students and intellectuals began agitating for greater democracy and for a greater voice in things. But high echelons were not willing to carry on a movement and so this put pressure on them to hold a conference. And when pressure was applied again, Udom finally had to make the decision to leave.

[Answer] I think this played a part.This was very important, because Udom was involved in the united front with the students and with the politicians from the various parties. When he forwarded proposals to higher echelons, they were rejected. Since they were always rejected, where could he hide is face. The students, politicians, the Socialist Party and the united front parties were all democratic and had an adequate mass base. But their [views] were not followed. They did not agree. This shows that he accepted the truth. If you get involved in shoring up things when things are falling apart and insist on supporting things at a time when the communist party is doing the wrong thing, you will be tainted too. He had to leave. Why. For something better. This is only natural.

[Question] Has the CPT had to make any changes, since this had a great effect?

[Answer] They don't have to. The communist party must rely on the masses. A person like Udom Sisuwan has his own popular support. Mr Khaisaeng has his own followers. And similarly others. Although there are people from all professions, they all have good intentions toward the country. Is there anyone who can unite the people of the country and not look at people as this or that? How serious is Order 66/1980, which was issued by Prime Minister Prem? Prime minister Prem will also have to concretize this order. Previously, we looked at each other and were friends. Now we do not look at each other. This one looks left. That one right. Previously we all loved each other and were united. Where has that previous age of well-being gone to? Now there is only discontent.

There is no other country that is better than Thailand. No Thai has seen a country better than his own. And there is no land anywhere that is as soothing to a Thai in both life and death as is Thailand. There is no climate anywhere that is as refreshing as that in Thailand. Thailand is a final refuge that we must hold more dear than our own life. And when people come back like this, we must hurry to embrace them and give them comfort. There is only one way. He has friends. He is a good man. He is not a drug trafficker, and he does not traffick in weapons. He is a patriot. But to have everyone be patriotic, everyone must be the owner of the coutry and the country must belong to everyone. This is the final word for the patriotism of all Thais. Don't monopolize things. Don't monopolize things. If people monopolize things, [the masses] will spurn them and drive them out. History teaches us not to monopolize things.

[Question] Do you think any more high-ranking people will leave the party?

[Answer] A party will have conflicts. All parties in the world have conflicts, both large and small conflicts. There are now conflicts within the communist party. We don't know whether they will change their attitude or not. But what has been lost is men of the caliber of Mr Udom and Mr Pluong. The communist party must be very sad. Not just slightly, but very sad. I think [the party] must be very sad at the defection of these two men because these were the only two men in the communist movement who could communicate with the democrats. The others do not speak the same language.

[Question] Will the light begin to go out on the future of the CPT?

[Answer] I did not say that the light was going out. It may get ever brighter. Since these two have defected, I think matters are serious [for the party].

[Question] What is Thong Chaemsiri like?

[Answer] He is a very good man. If he leaves, things will be even worse.

CYCLE OF DROUGHT, HARDSHIPS IN NORTHEAST SEEN AS UNENDING

Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 3 Sep 82 p 5

[Article by Withayakon Chiangkun: "The Northeast, a Drought In Both Water and Good Will"]

[Text] I received a report of drought in the northeast and some parts of the north from development circles. I think that the data are very interesting and so I would like to report them and also express some of my views.

This report is divided into two parts. The first part is a collection of press reports published during July and August. The second part is data that were obtained from northeastern development officials and villagers.

The Northeast and North, Little Water

The first part can be summarized as follows: There is drought in 22 provinces in the northeast and north. The five northeastern provinces that have been hit the hardest are Surin, Udorn Thani, Loei, Nakhon Ratchasima and Yosothin.

Other provinces affected include Kalasin, Khon Kaen, Sakon Nakhon, Nong Khai and Udorn Thani [sic]. The total area affected is approximatley 7.3 million rai.

As for the north, most of the affected areas are in the lower north. Provinces that have been hard hit include Phichit, Phitsanulok, Nakhon Sawan and Sukhothai. Other provinces affected include Kamphaengphet, Tak, Phetchabun, Phrae, Lampang, Uttaradit, Phayao and Uthai Thani.

In some areas in the northeast where it has not rained for 2 consecutive years, the people are in such a dire situation that they have had to go out and beg and they have had to eat grasshoppers and lizards (Khon Kaen). The people in several northeastern provinces have come to Bangkok seeking work. In Kamphaengphet, more and more people are illegally felling trees and selling the timber to merchants.

No Water, No Sympathy

Besides encountering drought, the people in the northeast have also encountered people of ill will. Not only have these people not provided help, they have even taken advantage of people.

At Ban Phraeng in Dan Khun Thot District, Nakhon Ratchasima Province, local investors have used their influence to take possession of public land, which inlcudes a large swamp that is a source of water for the villagers.

In some areas, people have gone and tricked the people into paying them to make artificial rain, or royal rain, which both have the same meaning.

In some places, officials have alloted money to purchase water tanks but because of the corruption, tanks of the wrong size have been sent.

Those who have come to Bangkok looking for work have been cheated and taken advantage of. It is not known how much they have been underpaid for their labor.

The government has alloted 200 million baht to help solve the drought problem. The money is to be used for such things as purchasing water tanks, providing water pumps and producing artificial rain. But this has not helped much.

As for artificial rain, a report says that there is a shortage of equipment. Thus, only some places can be helped. And the cost of producing artificial rain is 40,000 to 50,000 baht per day.

Farmers Are Not Stupid

As for the second part of the report, these are data that were provided by the villagers.

The villagers to whom the development officials talked with are not stupid as the government seems to think. They know there is drought because the trees have all been cut down. Previously, there were many trees. They helped absorb the moisture. And so, even though there were droughts, they were not as severe as they are today.

"Officials say that the absence of trees has caused the drought. They have encouraged villagers to plant trees and told them not to fell trees. But the officials cut down many trees. Owners cannot fell the trees but those who do not own them can. They have felled many trees."

The villagers said that, previously, there were never droughts this severe. At most, there was drought in the high fields. The lower fields could be worked. Enough rice could be harvested to carry them through the year. Previously, they were able to grow enough for themselves and didn't have to purchase any.

If necessary, they could ask to share things. Food, such as frogs, oysters, crab, fish and forest products, was plentiful. And it didn't require much fertilizer to grow crops.

But now, besides the fact that the droughts are more severe, they have to purchase everything. And if they do't have the money to purchase things, they must borrow money at high rates of interest. To work the fields now, fertilizer must be used and this has increased their troubles.

How Much Has Artificial Rain Helped the Villagers?

The troubles being experienced by the people have made it necessary for them to struggle. There has been more quarreling and theft. Some have given up and tried gambling, which has made things even worse for them.

As for artificial rain, here is what one farmer had to say:

"How can artificial rain help? Since there aren't any clouds, you can't produce artificial rain. This isn't really producing rain. It just helps make it rain faster. Where does it rain? It rains in the cities and 400-500 million baht is wasted. On the radio, I have heard them say that it has rained here and there. But when I have asked poeple from those places about this, they said that it didn't rain. They have been lying."

Conclusion, Capitalism Consums People

Concerning the data from this report, I would like to summarize things and make the following observations:

1. Drought is not a matter of nature entirely. It has occurred because people have destroyed the forests and the environment. And the ones who are most responsible for the destruction of the forests are the capitalists and influential people.

The villagers have felled trees too. But they have done so because of pressure from the expansion of the capitalist economy. This has made it necessary for them to struggle in order to survive.

2. Because Thai agriculture still depends mainly on rain water (80 percent of agricultural area) and because there is insufficient investment in irrigation, during a drought, the farmers suffer serious losses since they cannot obtain water from other sources. Actually, modern agriculture does not need to wait for nature.

3. Government aid is not timely or sufficient. The economic system in which those with the most power take the biggest share has enabled people to take advantage of the farmers and the government has not been able to control matters. Sometimes, government officials are involved in exploiting poeple (for example, the corruption involving the money alloted to help the farmers).

4. The expansion of the capitalist economy has resulted in the destruction of the environment. Subsistance production and the gathering of food found in nature has delcined. Farmers have turned to producing crops to sell. Everything must be purchased. Since more chemical fertilizers and insecticides are used the soil is becoming less and less fertile and more and more strange insects are appearing. This in turn makes it necessary to use even more fertilizer and insecticides.

The farmers must rely on a credit system. They are at a disadvantage in the trade relationship. They are falling deeper and deeper into debt.

5. The drought has thus added to the farmers' problem of being exploited. They have to sell their produce at low prices while capital and interest rates are high. This has put the farmers in a very bad situaiton. There are more and more broken homes. This is not just an economic problem. It is also a social problem.

What is worse than drought is the ill will of those who have constantly exploited the farmers to the present time.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN PRESS DECRIED

Bangkok DAO SIAM in Thai 29 Aug 82 p 5

[Sunday Criticisms column by Taphaya: "Just Awake?"]

[Text] Since the fall of Phnom Penh, Kampuchea has had a communist system of government. And more and more people with bad intentions toward Thailand have come to make a living in Thailand. They have come in the guise of reporters and photographers.

At present, Thailand is filled with such people. There are countless such people here. Many information offices have been established.

There are so many reporters for foreign newspapers, including both Thais and foreigners, that even those in the same profession can't remember who works where. What are they doing here, particularly the caucasians and other foreigners?

Usually, they are treated with great respect by Thai officials. They are treated with greater respect than are the Thai people!

This can be be seen from the fact that reports that are sent abroad are sent faster and more promptly than are reports in Thailand. These people have even received permission to go to the battlefront along the border.

And what have these people ever done for Thailand? They have just taken since they use Thailand to send their reports, which contain both facts and lies, to their offices abroad. They do not give any thought to Thailand, which has provided them with a place to live and work. They are not interested in nor do they care how much damage they cause the Thai people or the Thai government in the eyes of people abroad.

No action has ever been taken against these people. [Officials] just act as if they are greatly afraid of them. The Thai mass media is given strong warnings. For minor matters,the Thai media is given warnings and closed down.

No Thai reporter would print stories harmful to the country. They too have to have a place to live.

But sometimes it is necessary to print strong articles since it is not possible to put up with the great corruption.

May I speak frankly? How many times have Thais betrayed their country?

But have the foreign reporters shown such good intentions toward Thailand that they deserve to get such great privileges? Our neighbors have erroneous views of our country. Have these reporters ever been called in to set them straight or revise their reports?

Will Thailand continue to allow these people to work and live in Thailand? Besides taking jobs away from Thais, they also cause other losses for Thailand.

As General Athit Kamlangek said, how can foreigners know what is going on in Thailand better than the Thais?

Thailand is not the slave of anyone. No foreign embassy can force us to accept people who will do things harmful to the cuntry.

These people have never shown any appreciation for what we have done for them. All they know how to do is create trouble for the country where they are living.

Thus, I wonder why the Thai government allows them to stay in Thailand. Have they ever done anything that benefited our country? Are these people so important that we have to fear them?

Concerning the damage they have caused Thailand, General Athit said that these people are not our father.

Yes. Hasn't the time come to put a stop to the actions of these people? Or will we allow them to continue harming our country?

Those senior people in Thailand who have constantly said that the foreign newspapers are good and that they are correct will soon be eating foreign dung.

BRIEFS

ENVOY TO EEC, BELGIUM--Canberra, 18 Oct (AFP)--Australian ambassador to the United Nations in New York for the past 4 years has been appointed Australian ambassador to the European Economic Community and to Belgium and Luxembourg. He is David Anderson, 59, one of Australia's most senior diplomats who served Australia as observer to the Vietnam peace negotiations in Paris between 1968 and 1970, and was Australian ambassador to France from 1973-78. The Australian Government in making the announcement today said that Australia's relations with Belgium were long and warm. The visit to Australia next year by the king and queen of the Belgians would be a landmark of this relationship. [Text] [BK190609 Hong Kong AFP in English 0704 GMT 18 Oct 82]

CHANGE OF PARTY NAME--The junior partner in the federal coalition government, the National Country Party of Australia has changed its name. At the party's Federal Council meeting in Canberra, delegates have voted by 27 to 14 in favor of dropping the word country from the party's name. The party's federal leader, Mr Anthony, says the change to the National Party of Australia comes into force immediately. Mr Anthony says it is only fitting that the federal party has followed the lead of its three main state branches which already call themselves the National Party. He says the party will now be seeking the votes of people in provincial cities who previously identify the party only with the rural community. [Excerpt] [BK190609 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 16 Oct 82]

WHEAT PRODUCTION FORECAST--Australia's forecast for wheat harvest this year is the lowest for a decade and barley and oats are in the same position. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics says hopes for spring rains have failed to break the drought which is affecting grain growing areas in the southeastern states. The bureau says this year's winter cereal production is likely to be around 11.5 million tons--10 million tons less than last year. [Text] [BK141333 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 13 Oct 82]

WHEAT EXPORT LEVELS--Australia has been able to maintain record levels of wheat exports despite the drought presently affecting much of the country. The Australian Wheat Board says wheat exports for 1981-82 have been second only to the record shipments of 1979-80. By next month, the board expects to have shipped just under 13 million tons of wheat. A spokesman for the board says a record yield for the first 6 months of the year helped to boost the smaller drought affected crop in the last half of the year. However, the board announced on 19 October that for the first time since 1957 it would import wheat to ensure supplies of stock feed to drought-affected areas. The board said this would allow Australia to continue servicing markets reliant on its wheat and prevent other countries such as the United States and Canada moving into those markets. [Text] [BK211500 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 20 Oct 82]

ANTIDUMPING TRADE AGREEMENT--Australia will later this month formally come under the provisions of a revised international code against sending surplus goods to foreign markets for sale at low prices. The antidumping code was negotiated in 1980 under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and replaces a 1976 antidumping agreement. The minister for trade and resources, Mr Anthony, says the revised code contains a more precise definition of injury to local industry through dumping practices. JAPANESE SHARES INVITED--An offer has been made to two of Japan's biggest companies to buy 17-percent share in the big northwest shelf natural gas project off western Australia. Managing Director of Woodside Petroleum (Charles Allen)--his company is the main Australian partner in the joint venture--said on 26 October the offer had been made to the Mitsubishi and Mitsui companies. He said they had been offered 17 percent share in the production, shipping and sale of the natural gas. [BK261625 Melbourne Overseas Service in English 0830 GMT 26 Oct 82]

STREET DEFENDS GOVERNMENT'S FOREIGN POLICY--Minister for Foreign Affairs Street has defended Australia's involvement in the Western Alliance. In a speech to the Institute of International Affairs in Brisbane, Street said that through the alliance, Australia was better informed about the issues affecting world peace. He said the challenge was to strike a balance between a policy of alignment and an active, working relationship with the nonaligned world. Street said nonalignment would make it harder, if not impossible, for Australia to make any effective contribution to the thinking of American policymakers establishing priorities for stability and peace. He said a policy of nonalignment would not save Australia from the consequences of any collapse of the existing international order. FORMER GOVERNOR DISCUSSES 'NEW POLITICAL GAME' IN BALUCHISTAN

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 4 Oct 82 p 8

[Article by Azhar Masood]

[Text] ISLAMABAD, Oct. 3: The former Governor of Baluchistan and the Chief of Bugti Tribe, Nawab Akbar Khan Bugti has said politics and the politicians have become redundant. "A new game is unfolding and the game will have new players and a new playfield", he added. In an interview with 'The Muslim' in Quetta on Sept. 22, Nawab Bugti discussed a number of issues. Some excerpts:

Q: What is the political situation in the country in general and in Baluchistan in particular?

A: There is no political situation because there is no politics. There is a vacuum. Similarly, there is no politics in the province. There are no political trends here. Nobody is interested in anything. People have dissociated themselves from everything. They are looking after their personal matters.

Q: You call it 'dissociation'. This attitude of the people can also be considered as co-operation with the present Government.

A: The administration is at liberty to consider it any way it feels. The administration would like to consider everything in its favour. If it feels happy about it why should we deny this happiness.

Q: What does the Baluch leadership think of the present situation; the situation generally prevailing in the country and in this province?

A: I can't say about others. I can only speak about myself. I have repeatedly said that the politics of Pakistan what you and I and other look at—is that we knew something of. The politics which prevailed in the country is finished. The politics which has been going on in the country for the last 30 years is finished. That is over. The political parties and their so-called leaders are still around—one hears their statement now and then; they are redundant. As I have said a new game, new players and a new play field is unfolding. When you will see it you'll understand what I mean.

Q: Nawab Sahib, what exactly you mean by new game—new players a and new playfield?

A: As the events are rolling, a picture of a new game is clearly emerging. I am not talking of cricket or hockey. The game is of course politics and players, of course, the politicians. The so-called politicians have played their game according to the rules of the old game. They do not know the new game which is unfolding. The new game will be played by new players. New players—people perhaps you do not know—they will come up in the playfield. Had we ever heard about Khomeini or Bani Sadr or the guy just executed Sadegh Qotbzadeh. Perhaps, a little. They are all new players in Iranian politics. When there is a new game the old players vanish. New game brings its own new players.

Q: How are the people of this province reacting to the latest development? There is apparent peace and calm here.

A: There is no action. So there can't be any reaction. You know the game is over. If you react, you would be reacting to the old game which is no more there. The old political game is over. If you react today you'll be reacting to the old game which is finished.

Q: During mid-seventies many people left the province. They left for Afghanistan. Now the administration says that most of the people are coming back. What are your views on the subject?

A: Well I can't give you any exact number or figures of those who left this province for Afghanistan. But the number can't be less than 10,000. Many of those who left the province are still out.

Q: How do you view the revolution in Iran? How far the Iranian revolution has affected Baluchistan? Or de you think the Marxist revolution in Afghanistan and Islamic Revolution in Iran can spill out into Baluchistan?

A: The eyes of Baluch are focused on North. I mean Afghanistan. The Iranian Revolution has not affected the Baluchs politically. However, about 17.000 Iranian Baluchs have come to Baluchistan.

Q: If elections on non party basis are held in the country what will be the response of this province?

A: After the elections of 1970 which were held free and fair I said at a Press conference that these were the first free and fair elections in the history of Pakistan and probably the last. So from 1970 to 1982, I have not been disproved so far. And I don't hope to be disproved in the future. If partyless elections are held, they will not be elections but a selection. In selection you are free to do whatever you feel like. This regime cannot hold elections, it will only hold selection with 'predetermined' results. Selection can do no good to the country or the province. These selections cannot advance the interests of the country.

Q: How far it is true that certain Sardars are in one way or the other been pacified by the government?

A., Yes it is true. This time the element of carrot was perhaps more effective. But this time some Sardars have gone to the government but they could not take their people with them. Those Sardars who are co-operating with the administration they are doing it in their individual capacity.

Q: Nawab Sahib what you think of MRD?

A: Well, MRD is MRD. We can't prevent people hoping against hope. We wish them best.

Q: You mean they are kicking a stone wall?

A. No. If your blow is stronger you can even knock down the stone wall. But as I have said earlier these people are trying to play the old game which is no more there.

Q: Nawab Sahib how far is it true that Ahmad Nawaz Bugti is serving as a bridge between you and the administration?

A. Ahmad Nawaz Bugti is in PNP. If at all he is bridge—he is a bridge between the administration and the PNP and not a bridge between the administration and myself.

CONGRESS-I OFFICIAL CRITICIZES MANEKA GANDHI

BK100824 Delhi INDIAN EXPRESS in English 28 Sep 82 p 5

[Text] New Delhi, 27 Sep--The AICC-I [All-India Congress Committee--Indira] Treasurer, Mr Sitaram Kesari, on Monday hit out at Mrs. Maneka Gandhi for seeking opposition support, and said that with this she had even "forfeited" her right to the surname--Gandhi.

In a frontal attack on Mrs Maneka Gandhi, the bitterest after she walked out of the prime minister's house this year, Mr Kesari said that since she had aligned with her late husband's sworn enemies like Mr H. N. Bahuguna and Mr L. K. Advani, in all fairness, she should now revert to calling herself "Miss Maneka Anand."

The recent firing incident at Gauriganj in Amethi, in which a Sanjay Vichar Manch worker dies, had brought out both the opposition and Mrs. Maneka Gandhi in their "true colours." "It is not the Sanjay Vichar Manch but a Maneka-Akbar Manch," Mr Kesari said.

According to Mr Kesari, Mrs Maneka Gandhi is "so well exposed" that she behaved like a doll in whose mouth all shades of opposition leaders put things as they liked. She had not yet learnt how to talk to decent people.

At a specially called press conference, in which Mr Kesari was present, the AICC (I) general secretary, Mr G. K. Moopanar, said that Mrs Maneka Gandhi was surrounded by the very forces who wanted to crush Sanjay Gandhi when he was alive.

Mr Moopanar, who read out a carefully worded statement, condemned the way Mrs Maneka Gandhi was "abusing" Sanjay Gandhi's memory to further her own political interests. When did Mr Raj Narain, Mr Bahuguna, Mr Advani and Mr Korpoori Thakur become adherents to the five point programme of Sanjay, he asked. The RSS [Rastriya Sayamsevak Sangh] leader, Mr Angre, and the BJP [Bharatiya Janata Party] leader, Mrs Vijaya Raje Scindia, were now posing as dedicated followers of Sanjay Gandhi.

He said the very idea of forming the Sanjay Manch was to destroy the "goodwill and respect" that Sanjay enjoyed. The first act of the manch was to help Mr Raj Narain win the Rajya Sabha election, but they failed in this too, he said.

He said that although he had not commented on the firing incident so far, he was forced to do so now because it was already being given a political colour to malign the Congress (I). Mr Moopanar said Mrs Maneka Gandhi, who had met her workers in jail, did not visit the bereaved family of the dead man. According to him, this showed her true intentions.

ERSHAD VISIT YIELDS POSITIVE RESULTS

BK161528 Delhi INDIAN EXPRESS in English 9 Oct 82 p 7

[Editorial: "Statesmanlike Accord"]

[Text] Gen Ershad's visit to Delhi has produced a major and statesmanlike accord for which both sides need to be congratulated. Important as are the individual agreements reached under different heads, transcending them is a wider political understanding which suggests the determination of the two countries to live and work together as good neighbours and to evolve a framework of cooperation. Without such a frame the other accomplishments might never have come about or must remain fragile. There is a wall of mistrust and misunderstanding that has divided India and Bangladesh over the past several years. This is hopefully in the process of being demolished.

India's inability to live up to the 1974 boundary agreement and transfer in perpetual lease to Bangladesh a mere dot of territory, Tin Bigha, had created avoidable bitterness and suspicion. The transfer agreement signed on Thursday amicably resolves this issue and paves the way for implementation of other outstanding boundary issues. Local opposition to the transfer of Tin Bigha had been blown up by certain political elements to extraordinary proportions. The agitation is based on a total misunderstanding since the perpetual lease to Bangladesh of this tiny area of a few hundred square metres will not deny access to local Indian residents. Indeed, a small subway or an overbridge might provide an additional and convenient link. Opposition to the transfer now would be totally unwarranted as there is really nothing that should divide the local residents of the two countries. The establishment of a joint commission at ministerial level should give a boost to trade, transit and other commercial relations while discussions on New Moore Island and the maritime boundary are to be pursued.

The understanding reached on the river water question appears to constitute something of a breakthrough. The 1977 accord on the sharing of the lean flows of the Ganga from January to May has been extended for 18 months, through the dry seasons of 1983 and 1984, with marginal variations in the time distribution of the available flows. Meanwhile, both sides are committed to considering the long-term proposals for augmentation which they had put forward earlier but which were stalemated with neither side being willing to consider the other's proposal. It is now agreed that the Joint Rivers Commission [JRC] will undertake and complete within 18 months technical and "prefeasibility" studies of both packages. India has proposed monsoon storages on the Brahmaputra (and Meghna) and a transfer of some of the surplus to the Ganga through a link canal. Bangladesh in turn favours storages of the Ganga system in the Nepal Himalaya. Whereas previously India was chary of associating Nepal, since it feared additional complications in a tripartite exercise, the JRC now has a mandate to look at the concept of storages in Nepal bilaterally in techno-economic terms, it being implicitly assumed that Nepal might be consulted at a later stage. This is a rational and practical approach and provides a means of processing the two proposals expeditiously. Joint examination might soon reveal the larger truth that Nepal storages and Brahmaputra storages with a link canal are not really alternatives but complementary, since both countries need both--and more.

A political understanding is of the essence and this is what Gen Ershad and Mrs Gandhi have happily achieved. West Bengal need have no fear that its interests have been sacrificed or will suffer. On the contrary, it should be a major beneficiary from the strengthening of Indo-Bangladesh relations and the unfolding of the latest accord.

MP ON UN VOTE ON KAMPUCHEA SEAT--The chairman of Commission I of Parliament--in charge of defense and security, foreign affairs and information--Ismail Hasan Metareum, has said that the success of the Democratic Kampuchean Government in retaining its seat at the UN General Assembly is reaffirmation of ASEAN's correct stand in rejecting the presence of the Heng Samrin regime, which is actually a mere puppet of a foreign power. In the UN General Assembly voting, the Democratic Kampuchean Government received 90 votes, 13 more votes than in 1981. Answering questions on the Middle East problem, he said that the Arab side is now showing a relatively moderate attitude, thus giving indirect recognition to the existence of the state of Israel in the Middle East. Ismail Hasan Metareum said that it is time for the United States to play its role in realizing a just and lasting peace in the Middle East by settling the Arab-Israeli conflict in a comprehensive way. The United States must convince Israel not to allow such a good opportunity to pass by. [Text] [BK280904 Jakarta Domestic Service in Indonesian 1500 GMT 27 Oct 82]

AGRICULTURAL REPORTAGE FOR 11-17 OCTOBER

[Editorial Report] BK180649--Monitored Kampuchean media have reported the following agricultural developments for the reporting period 11-17 October:

Kompong Cham: Phnom Penh SPK in French at 0405 GMT on 11 October reports that peasants in this province have planted rice on 129,500 hectares or 86 percent of the plan norm. Memot and Ponhea Krek districts have fulfilled their rice production plans of 11,600 hectares and 28,100 hectares respectively. The province has grown 11,900 hectares of industrial crops including cotton, jute and sugarcane. It has also erected dikes and dug canals for irrigation purposes. More than 600 hectares of ricefield were saved from drought with the aid of the provincial agriculture service which sent water pumps to the farmers in time. In the coming dry season, the province plans to plant 21,000 hectares of rice, 8,000 hectares of corn and 14,000 hectares of subsidiary crops.

Kompong Chhnang: Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian at 0430 GMT on 11 October notes that Kompong Tralach District has transplanted more than 11,500 hectares of various types of rice and planted 1,000 hectares of subsidiary crops and 233 hectares of industrial crops. The radio at 1300 GMT on 12 October adds that in Rolea P'ier District, from the beginning of this rainy season up to the first week of October, peasants planted rice on 11,247 hectares.

Kompong Thom: SPK at 0400 GMT on 13 October says that by the end of last month, this province had planted 109,860 hectares of rice or 90 percent of the plan and grown 7,000 hectares of subsidiary crops, half of which were corn. Despite floods, Sandan District has fulfilled its rice production plan of 7,390 hectares. The provincial agriculture service has assisted the people in clearing 14,200 hectares of land. The veterinary service has vaccinated 1/5 of the cattle estimated at 242,000 [figure as received] head and 7,600 pigs. In the coming dry season, Kompong Thom plans to grow 6,000 hectares of rice. Phnom Penh Radio at 1300 GMT on 13 October says that by early September, Stoung District had planted more than 15,500 hectares of rice and 560 hectares of subsidiary crops and vegetables. In Santuk District, the radio at 1200 GMT on 14 October adds, by early September, 13,450 hectares of rice had been transplanted and 600 hectares of subsidiary crops planted. Meanwhile, Kompong Svay District had planted more than 21,130 hectares of various types of rice and grown 790 hectares of subsidiary crops, according to the radio at 0400 GMT on 15 October.

Takeo: At 1435 GMT on 13 October SPK reports that by the end of last month, peasants in this province had planted 112,000 hectares of rice--39,300 hectares more than in the corresponding period of last year--and 6,760 hectares of subsidiary crops and 550 hectares of industrial crops. The province has supplied the people with 920 tons of IR-36 seeds, 500 tons of floating rice seeds, 6,640 tons of chemical fertilizer, 19,900 liters of insecticide, 35 tons of rat poison, 24 sprayers, 3,200 plowshares, 1,750 mould-boards of ploughs and 400 motor pumps. In the next dry season, the province plans to cultivate 133,000 [figure as received] hectares of rice. It has erected dikes 13,080 meters long, dug canals 28,560 meters long and built 2 pumping stations, one near the provincial town and the other in Tram Kak District. Phnom Penh Radio at 0430 GMT on 16 October mentions that in Kirivong District, peasants have completed sowing, planting and transplanting rice on 27,900 hectares. The radio at 1300 GMT on the same day adds Kaoh Andet District, by early October, had transplanted 15,000 hectares of later rice, ordinary rice, early rice and floating rice. This is 68 percent of the plan norm. More than 3,200 hectares of fallow land had been reclaimed and 164 hectares of rice harvested. The district's rice production target for the coming dry season is 3,000 hectares.

Battambang: By early October, Battambang Province had fulfilled its rice production plan of 282,870 hectares, according to SPK at 0400 GMT on 15 October. The news agency adds that in the third quarter of this year, the provincial veterinary service vaccinated more than 9,000 head of cattle and 1,600 pigs against infectious diseases.

Kampot: Radio Phnom Penh at 1300 GMT on 16 October reports that by the end of last month, Angkor Chey District had planted more than 6,900 hectares of rice and 974 hectares of subsidiary crops. The district peasants are striving to fulfill the rice production plan of 10,000 hectares.

Kandal: At 0430 GMT on 17 October, the radio notes that by early this month, Phnom Penh District had planted 8,807 hectares of various types of rice, including 650 hectares of IR-36 rice. The total acreage is 127 hectares above plan.

Prey Veng: SPK at 1430 GMT on 17 October says that by mid-September, Prey Veng Province had transplanted 109,400 hectares of rice compared with 95,600 hectares achieved in the same period of last year. The acreage included 22,300 hectares of IR-36 rice strain. During the first half of this year, the provincial veterinary service vaccinated 47,480 head of cattle against infectious diseases, particularly in Preah Sdech District. The province has cleared 3,600 hectares of land. Meanwhile, peasants have been preparing chemical fertilizer, insecticide, seeds and strengthening hydraulic works for rice cultivation in the coming dry season.

With the aid of motor pumps, scoops and chain pumps the provincial people saved 4,740 hectares of rice from drought. They have harvested 1,100 hectares of the 11,200 hectares of early rice. In the forthcoming dry season, the province plans to cultivate 2,800 [figure as received] hectares of rice. Phnom Penh Domestic Service in Cambodian at 1300 GMT on 21 October says that Samraong Tong District, by mid-October, had transplanted nearly 13,200 hectares of various types of rice and harvested 797 hectares of early and IR-36 rice. The district plan for the dry-season rice production is 1,200 hectares. The radio at 1300 GMT on 22 October adds that Oudong District, by early October, had transplanted nearly 10,000 hectares of rainy-season rice, including 228 hectares of the IR-36 strain, grown over 400 hectares of subsidiary crops and raised over 9,000 head of cattle and buffalo. SPK at 0359 GMT on 20 October notes that during the rainy season the people of this district received from the provincial authorities 290 tons of chemical fertilizer, 50 tons of IR-36 rice seed, 200 liters of insecticide, 200 kg of rat poison, 26 moor pumps and agricultural tools. The plan for the dry season is 45,000 [figure as received] hectares of rice.

Battambang: Phnom Penh Radio at 0430 GMT on 18 October reports that by 10 October, the province had cultivated rice on 281,000 hectares or 100.66 percent of the plan. The districts that have overfulfilled the plan include Battambang, Sisophon, Mongkolborei, Preah Net Preah and Sangke; those having fulfilled more than 90 percent are Moung Russei and Phnum Srok, while Ratanamondol and Thmar Puok have lagged behind schedule. The radio at 1300 GMT on 23 October adds that Phnum Srok District, by early October, had planted 15,100 hectares of rainy-season rice, 320 hectares of subsidiary crops and 250 hectares of industrial crops.

Kompong Cham: According to Radio Phnom Penh at 0430 GMT on 18 October, Tbong Knmum District by the end of September had transplanted over 17,500 hectares of various types of rice and grown 5,500 hectares of subsidiary food crops. The radio adds at 0430 GMT on 20 October that Prey Chhor District, by early October, had transplanted 14,300 hectares of early, late and slash-and-burn rice and grown more than 460 hectares of subsidiary crops.

Kompong Chhnang: Phnom Penh Radio at 0430 GMT on 18 October carries a station correspondent's interview with (Chhun Thoeun), permanent member of Kompong Chhnang Provincial People's Revolutionary Committee, on development achieved in all fields of Kompong Chhnang Province. In agriculture, he notes that in 1981-82, 44,208 hectares of various types of rice have been planted, including the transplant of 13,841 hectares of late rice, 12,874 hectares of ordinary rice, 8,394 hectares of early rice, 690 hectares of slash-and-burn rice and 3,092 hectares of highland rice [all figures as heard]; 5,274 hectares of floating rice broadcast; 3,362 hectares of subsidiary crops and 472 hectares of industrial crops planted; and 11,174 hectares of ricefield reclaimed.

Takeo: SPK News Agency at 1503 GMT on 18 October reports that Kirivong District by early October had planted 24,900 hectares of rice or 4,000 hectares more than planned, including 370 hectares of intensive agriculture, especially the IR-36 strain, and grown 400 hectares of subsidiary crops. The district has harvested 4,360 hectares of high-yielding rice of the IR-36 strain and reclaimed 2,700 hectares of wasteland and repaired weirs and canals totaling 9 km. In the coming dry season Kirivong District plans to grow 5,000 hectares of rice including 300 hectares of the IR-36 strain. Phnom Penh Radio at 1300 GMT on 24 October adds that in Prey Kabbas District, by the end of September, peasants had transplanted 10,822 hectares of rice. The local power provided them with 50 tons of IR-36 rice seed, chemical fertilizer and motor pumps, according to SPK at 0408 GMT on 22 October. With the aid of motor pumps supplied by the Ministry of Agriculture, Takeo Province saved 2,076 hectares of rice from drought, the news agency adds at 1430 GMT on 24 October.

Svay Rieng: Phnom Penh Radio at 0430 GMT on 30 October reports that in Rumduol District, by mid-September, the 15,000-hectare plan had been overfulfilled by 792 hectares of rice transplanted; 130 hectares of subsidiary crops had been grown.

Kompong Thom: Radio Phnom Penh at 0430 GMT on 21 October notes that by mid-September, Kompong Thom Province had transplanted almost 110,000 hectares of various types of rice and grown over 7,000 hectares of corn, bean and potato as well as over 1,000 hectares of vegetables. Earlier, at 0430 GMT on 18 October, the radio says that in Baray District, by 27 August [as heard], the 24,600 hectares of floating late, ordinary, early and slash-and-burn rice had been planted and over 2,870 hectares of subsidiary crops planted.

Kandal: SPK at 1430 GMT on 24 October reports that Kaoh Thom District has obtained 760 tons of paddy and 5,580 tons of corn. In this main rice production season, despite floods the district has cultivated 2,480 hectares of rice or 70 percent of the plan and 3,550 hectares of corn.

SOLDIERS JOIN GUERRILLAS--On 4 October, 13 fraternal Khmer soldiers, including a regimental commander, who were forcibly drafted by the Vietnamese aggressors into taking up weapons in their service at the Nimit position of the Sisophon battlefield south of Route 5, Battambang Province, fled to the side of our guerrillas. They brought with them seven assorted weapons: a pistol, a B-40, an M-79 and four AK's. They told our army and guerrillas that they could no longer serve the Vietnamese aggressors, who continued to indiscriminately arrest and massacre our innocent people in a bid to exterminate our Kampuchean race. They were determined to join with our nation, people and national army and guerrillas of Democratic Kampuchea in the struggle against the Vietnamese aggressors to safeguard our Kampuchean nation. TRADE UNION MANAGEMENT, LEADERSHIP DESCRIBED

Vientiane HENG NGAN in Lao 16-31 Jul 82 pp 14, 15, 20

['Trade Union Problem Study' Column: "A Number of Problems of Theory and Lessons Learned Concerning Trade Unions in a Socialist Revolution. Part IV"]

[Text] Orgainzational system and working principles for trade unions.

A. Organizational theory. Trade unions are set up based on the principles of democratic centralism. All levles of the trade union administrative committee from the base level up to the Central Federation of Trade Unions are democratically elected, and do their work according to leadership principles as groups and individuals, and are responsible for the trade union resolutions of that level.

The highest office of any level of trade union is the trade union congress of that level. Representatives who attend the congress for all levels must be elected from the lowest levels on up. The election of trade union administrative committees of all levels must be carried out by secret ballot, and to be elected one must receive more than half of the votes. The trade union congress will decide the number of members of the trade union administrative committee for its level.

All government offices, the offices of economic, cultural, science and technology sections, factories, mines, construction sites, agricultural settlements, forestry settlements, government shops, hospitals, schools, ports, transportation vehicles divisions, government-private enterprises factories, and private capitalists' factories have a [base] trade union. (Government factories serving the national defense must be considered equal to other government factories in general, except for a number of special factories that need separate regulations.)

Base trade unions that are organized in production units, business, task, and administration are unified in sections and localities.

Trade unions in production, business, [task] or service expand into a system for specialized tasks and then form a local trade union service or unite themselves under a central trade union commerce trade union, transportation trade union, education trade union, etc.)

Local trade unions organizations include trade union bases in production units and economic services. Local task administration under the area of the provincial committee is unified according to the local trade union organization.

Trade unions at the central schelon, local trade union organizations, and all trade union units are subordinate to and unite themselves into the central labor union organization which is a member of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

B. Leadership principles and working techniques

In the trade union system, all levels must work consistently with the unified regulations that lead people in groups and individuals to be responsible. This principle clearly specifies the rights and powers of the groups which are the highest rights and powers. All actual work will be divided up after the group committee explains, discusses, and unaminously agrees.

It is necessary to firmly grasp the most basic principle of the trade union movement which is the mass movement. The trade union base must determinedly attract workers and government employees to the trade union movement network so it will steadily expand. It is necessary to set up the primary and important mass movement in each base unit.

This is the way to mobilize, organize, train, persuade, and have friendly contact with the masses. The technique of carrying out the mass work starts from the principles for setting up the trade union based on the awakening and voluntarism of the trade union members who must clearly show two characteristics: mass and the trade union class. This technique opposes all use of orders to force the masses, and is against being arrogant, careless, and rude towards the trade union members. It is also against the disease of power, when people work at their desks and do not closely relate with production and the standard of living of the masses. This technique is aimed at training people in many aspects concerning political ideology, acknowledgement of past deeds, production, social movements, and a happy and civilized lifestyle. Trade union cadres of all levels, especially local cadres, must set a great deal of time aside to go to factories to share their lives, to work together with the masses. This is in order to clearly understand production conditions and the standard of living of the masses by going through that work in order to make some changes in different levels of trade union work to make the trade union movement reflect the workers' revolutionary fervor.

C. [Question] Who are qualified to become trade union members? What are the responsibilities and benefits of trade union members?

Trade union organizations must consist of strong forces of those who work with their hands and feet and those who work with their brains in hundreds of different vocational subjects and specialized tasks in the national economy, science, technical sections, education, culture, gymnastics, arts, [task] sections, etc.

Concerning rights and freedom in our country, the trade union has regained this along with the reestablishment of the new government regime by the workers and through their political party which leads all workers who work with their hands and feet and with their brains. All who work and receive a salary qualify to become trade union members. All workers and government employees regardless of their occupations, nationalities, citizenship, sex, and religious beliefs who work regularly in government factories, government and private-owner partnership factories, private capitalist factories, offices, hospitals, production divisions, if they are good at following the rules and regulations of the trade union and voluntarily create movements for trade union organization, are accepted as trade union members. The acceptance of labor union members is decided by the trade union unit committee meetings, which reports to the next higher level of the labor union administrative committee which makes the decision.

Responsibilities of trade union members. Briefly speaking, there are 5 responsibilities for trade union members:

-to carry out their work with honesty, protect national property, and respect government laws;

-to fulfill the obligation of protecting their fatherland;

-to determinedly study and to endlessly improve their political and cultural knowledge, and technological and technical skills;

-to unite and help each other in production, work, living, and fighting against any actions that are dangerous to the revolution and themselves;

-to follow the orders and resolutions of the trade union; determine to live a trade unionist's life, pay the monthly membership fee on the date and time scheduled.

Trade union members have their rights and benefits, as follows:

-to explain and vote concerning various problems in trade union meetings; to run for office; nominate candidates, and elect different levels of the trade union leadership committees;

-comment on different levels of the trade union leading committee or the trade union cadres as individuals in meetings in order to make some changes in their work; comment on the trade union members to help them to advance themselves;

-participate and express their opinions in trade union meetings concerning commendations, disciplinary measures, or observing their own work;

-when their rights and benefits have been violated, and they are protected by the trade union, they have the right to file a complaint to the higher echelons;

-use their rights and benefits concerning public benefits, the cultural activities, literature, sports, vacations, and travel organized by the trade union. If they run into any difficulty or disaster they will be assisted by the trade union.

Standards for trade union cadres

Recently the establishment of the organization, training, and enhancing of trade union cadres has become an important and urgent problem. We have to fully train trade union cadres who have knowledge in culture, technology, and economics to be capable of managing labor. The mass mobilizing techniques must be firmly grasped to ensure a sufficient amount of cadres who are responsible for the existing bases. Prepare the bases that are being built and will be fully built. The trade union is also responsible for supplying cadres for the party and government by selecting from the mass process. The setting up of trade union organizations, expandind the trade union, and forming the trade union forces are three closely related problems in the evolutionary development of the revolutionary struggle, and it is necessary to go through the revolutionary struggle in order to improve. There is no other way. This is extra work for the labor union. It is the overall work of the party and the government, and also of the people, because it is the most primary work, our business, our future, and all the glory of the nation. How soon [are we] to have socialism? Is it good or bad? Who are the laborers who are building up the new regime? How does everything depend upon the conditions for the growth, strength, and encouragement of the rights of ownership of the workers? The growth and strength of the workers is related to the growth and strength of the trade union and the trade union units.

The training of the party and government's cadres and of other organizations' cadres must start from workers and the trade union units that are trained and formed by going through the evolutionary process of the revolutionary struggle of the workers. This problem has its meaning in terms of opinions and experiences in order to guarantee purity and confidence concerning the firm beliefs and firm political ideology in all work of the party and government organizations and other organizations.

In the present situation the basic standard of the labor union cadres may be set up as follows:

1) they must have firm belief in the workers; above all, they must be able to grasp the party's policies;

2) they must have a high revolutionary spirit towards the work of the workers;

3) they must have certain knowledge concerning the labor union work;

4) they must have a [style] of being close to the masses, and must be trusted by the masses.

KHAMMOUAN FORESTRY, ROAD CONSTRUCTION, WORK FOR MILITARY NOTED

Vientiane HENG NGAN in Lao 16-31 Jul 82 p 5

['Article': "Tree Cutting Section Workers of Khammouan Province Have Performed Their First Six Months Work with Success"]

[Text] In the first six months of this year workers in the tree cutting section subordinate to the Agriculture, Forestry, and Irrigation Service attentively carried out their specialized task. During that time they cut trees in many different places and sent 1,425,309 cubit meters of wood to lumber mills. This included 168,507 cubic meters of Burmese ebony, 42,080 cubic meters of poles and "si" wood, 182,767 cubic meters of many different kinds of hardwoods, and 1,031,955 cubic meters of softwood. Besides cutting wood to send to lumber mills, they also cut 1,151,111 cubic meters of trees for sale to be used in the construction of different offices and organizations. These included 3,055 cubic meters of Brazilian rosewood, 28,323 cubic meters of Burmese ebony hardwood, 728,984 cubic meters of hardwood, 64,180 cubic meters of poles and "si" wood, and 326,569 cubic meters of softwood.

Along with wood cutting they also built roads into the cutting sites in the Khamhai Forest area in Mahasai District from Pha Yat cliff to Nong Khon, 6 km long and 3 meters wide. In the direction of Gnommalat District from Pak Nam-On to Houai Sot the road is 16 km long and 3 meters wide. They repaired 12 km of road from Na Kok to Ban Se.

Meanwhile they also [signed] a contract to transport and to clear out various construction sites, for example, contracts to transport a total of 49 tons of different materials for the Khammouan Province Irrigation No 2 and the provincial public works, Route 13 Construction Division, clearing 3 hectares of land for tree growing and 4 hectares for a sugar factory construction site, digging a fish pond 2.5 meters deep, 6 meters wide, and 60 meters long for the provincial military command, and 70 percent finished [digging] a 50-square meter and 3-meter deep provincial agricultural fish pond; they dug 5 fish ponds for cadres and the people 7 meters long, 5 meters wide, and 3 meters deep on the overall average.

Today they are vigorously continuing to carry out their work in order to achieve the second six months plan.

EXEMPTION FROM MILITARY CONSCRIPTION, NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION DISCUSSED

Vientiane NOUM LAO in Lao 1-15 Jul 92 pp 4, 13

['Friends Ask We Answer' Column]

[Excerpts] [Question] To our readers. In this issue we discuss a letter from Comrade Vieng Savan, a Louang Namatha youth who besides admiring the achievements of NOUM LAO has some questions, as follows.

1) In other countries in the world nearly all youths have an obligation by law to take part in national defense work after they complete their education, except for those who are in poor health. Will this be the same in Laos in the future?

2) NOUM LAO as well as other newspapers are published and distributed in Vientiane Capital, but very few will reach Louang Namtha Province. What can be done to solve this problem?

[Answer] We thank Comrade Vieng Savan, the Louang Namatha youth who sent in these questions.

1. In fraternal socialist countries such as the USSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, etc., they all have a law concerning the obligation of youth towards national defense work. All youth must be soldiers for 3 years before they have the right to hold a job, except for thos who are in poor health or other special cases. In our country there have not been any regulations for youth concerning this matter. However, the party and government attentively mobilize all youth to participate in national defense and public security work. In my opinion concerning this problem it is best that all youth should take part in serving in the ranks of the army due to their obligation towards such work.

2. Concerning different newspapers, especially NOUM LAO, that are being delivered to Louang Namtha Province, because of some difficulties in communications they might get lost. However, we will try again to find ways for you to receive the newspapers routinely.

FISH FARMING YIELDS RESULTS IN VIENTIANE

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 15 Sep 82 p 2

[Article by Nang Kongmali; photograph by Ketmeaung: "Progress on the Tha Ngon Fish Farming Construction Project"]

[Excerpts] The 50-hectare fish farming construction project is 25km east of Vientiane in a large flatland under a clear blue sky. This makes the natural geography of the Nam Ngum shore even livelier.

Comrade Pakaiphet of the committee responsible for the project smiled proudly and reported that before 1980 this fish farming station was directly under the Animal Husbandry and Veterinarian Department; however, since 1980 it has been under the vegetable planting project and was nemed "The Vegetable Planting and Fish Farming Settlement of Tha Ngon" in which its administration and organization has been under the settlement. Its production techniques are under the Animal Husbandry and Veterinarian Department. Now, 35 hectares of the fish pond construction project have been completed. It is expected that 50 hectares will be completed in last 1983. Along with the fish pond construction, fish production and [the use of] experimental fish are being done at the same time in order to raise the standard of living for cadres and workers. This includes domestic and foreign fish production, for example, grass-eating fish, Indian fish, Chinese fish, and Chinese carp. Fish production in this fish pond has been conducted with artificial mixed breeds.

It terms of fish and small fresh water fish production recently, we can see that in 1981 they were able to produce 50,000 fry and 1,5 tons of fish meat. Since 1982 they have produced 1 million fry, and over 2 tons of fish meat. The [planning] of this fish farming station has been set in many categories, for example, 16 shark ponds of 35 x 65 meters, 23 fry ponds of 16 x 26 meters, 6 fish breeding ponds of 50 x 70 meters, and 22 market fish ponds of 75 x 215 meters. Up to now many fish ponds have successfully put in a number of fish, for example, 13 market fish ponds were successful and 100,000 fish were put in.

Moreover, at this fish station a school has been opened to teach fresh water fish farming at the medium level in order to improve the specialized task level of cadres and to train youth who will carry on fish farming. Comrade Sengkeo and Comrade Nang Somkhouan of the board of directors and who are also responsible for administration and teachers in that school told us that the school for vocational fish farming has [taken in] 2 groups of students whose study program is 1 year and 6 months long. The total of 35 trainees are from various parts of the nation.

However, fish farming is still a new occupation in our country. Thus, the fish farming station is still faced with some difficulties, for example, the lack of materials and equipment, and also there are still few cadres and workers. Thus, we have to train [people] and produce fish at the same time in order for the people to be the owners of production and to succeed in the project.

At the end Comrade Pakai along with the committee which is responsible brought us to see the artificial fish breeding and the fish farms [planned for the future]; the 50-hectare fish farming station in Tha Ngon will produce fish to supply the markets and will take its place in solving the food supply problem for the people in Vientiane Capital.

VIENTIANE DISTRICT HARD HIT BY DROUGHT, FLOODS

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 14 Sep 82 p 3

[Article by Litthi Sisuvong: "Victorious Fight Against Drought and Flood"]

[Text] The beginning of the rice growing season this year was hard hit by drought in Vientiane Province, but later on it was flooded so there are dry as well as flooded ricefields. The most serious damage was in Hatsaifong District.

Hatsiafong Districtis located on a plateau along the Mekong shore south of Vientiane. Its ricefields total 6300 hectares. Because of the drought condition threatening this year's rice growing season, all the ricefields mentioned in Hatsaifong were faced with drought except in some places having irrigation systems and where pumps were installed.

In order to fight against the drought without letting the season pass by, besides hurriedly sending workers, vehicles, and machinery, the higher echelons sent cadres whose specialized task is irrigation to solve the irrigation system [problem]and to do everything possible to provide water for farming, for example, by installing water pumps and digging irrigation ditches in Chinaimo, Kengpayang, Hatdokkeow, Nong Hong, Na Hai, Houai Deua, and other places.

The base administrative authorities of that district closely guided the people in the fight against the drought. Some places used irrigation scoops to bring water to the ricefields. In some places the people had to carry water to the seed beds. Some places were replanted. Besides this, they utilized the rain that did come when it was planting time. This helped the people in Hatsaifong District, in particular, to be able to plough a great deal except for only 171 hectares left because of the drought, [where they were] unable to drain water in. When the rains came the young rice plants were too big to be planted.

However, to improve soil conditions in the unplanted ricefields their correct technique was to mobilize the [people] to search for different starchy crops to replace the rice plants; another good technique was that they sought an additional 873 hectares of flooded abandoned ricefields to plough according to the statement of Mr Boundi, who is responsible for Hatsaifong District's administrative office. The Hatsaifong District people were not only faced with drought but also heavy rains as soon as they had finished ploughing. This caused flooding in the ricefields and damaged 427 hectares of ricefields. Most of the damage was in Ban Hom Canton with 90 hectares, and 89 hectares were damaged in Ban Don Canton.

In Ban Don Canton, for example, ricefields total only 396 hectares, yet as many as 89 hectares were flooded. This was serious damage. Therefore, a good way out was to replant the rice and to replace each damaged rice plant. Meanwhile, they attentively took care of the ricefields, weeded, killed worms and insects, and applied fertilizer to make the rice plants grow beautifully.

In the rice growing season this year, even though facing natural disaster and threatened by drought and flood, our Lao farmers generally speaking and Hatsaifong farmers in particular united themselves persistently, and fought and worked cheerfully in order th respond to the content of the Third Party Congress plan. They have the persistence to discuss how to make this year's rice growing season another successful year.

BULGARIAN AID PROJECTS DISCUSSED, VALUE NOTED

Incomplete Projects

Vientiane SIANG PASSASON in Lao 18 Sep 82 p 2

[Article by Ketmeuang]

[Text] From 1976 to 1982 the LPDR and the People's Republic of Bulgaria have signed tens of different agreements, cooperation protocols, records, and documents in order to cooperate in the economy, science, technology, and culture, respectively. For the base area construction, the completed project was the construction of bridge No 5 on route No 9 under the Ministry of Public Works. It was completed and the official transfer ceremony took place on 19 July 1981; its value is 4,564,200 roubles. [According to] the project outline that is being carried out, in the present plan there is a 100-hectare vegetablecultivation project in Tha Ngon, to supply markets in Vientiane, a citronells tree growing project in Tha Ngon, a citronells perfume refinery factory, a complete set of industrial wood projects, making resins, and distilling (colofan).

Meanwhile, there are some plnas that have been signed but not carried out, for example, the small scale 1-3 megawatt hydroelectric dam construction project in Nam Sim (technological assistance), the animal food concentrate factory, and canned fruit factory, and fruit orchards.

In terms of sending material assistance as gifts in 1977, there were food supplies, special goods, 26 tons of medicines, and 30 tons of canned vegetables and fruits, all together worth 300,000 leva; they let us borrow up to 924,000 roubles. [All of this] was successfully carried out in 1979 by sending goods worth 444,600 roubles. The exchange of goods based on the agreement and cooperation protocol of 25 December 1979 and 30 October 1980 has been carried on as usual.

In terms of the cooperation in science and nature studies (short-term training unrelated to the funds approved by the Ministry of Education) that was carried out based on the resolution of the third congress of the Laos-Bulgaria subcommittee for scientific and technical cooperation that was opened in Vientiane, a plan was signed to accept 20-30 Lao cadres each year for high-level training (lasting 1-6 months) from 1982 to 1985.

As for technical expert assistance, in particular, [assistance] based on the agreement of 30 September 1976 between the Lao-Bulgarian [subcommittee] for scientific and technical cooperation, they signed an obligation to accept 7 Bulgarian experts in vegetable cultivation, irrigation, machinery, oil refining and bee keeping to work in Laos in order to collect data and to help Lao technicians to effectively carry out different kinds of work.

[Text] A large area of over a hundred hectares in the Tha Ngon plain 25 km northeast of Vientiane is active with an atmosphere of emulation working to prepare the soil for dry season cultivation, to take care of rice plants that are making new beautiful green plants, and to keep different breeds of fish, by over 130 Lao engineers and workers and foreigners. Nowadays vegetable cultivation and fish raising settlements are under the Ministry of Agriculture, Cooperatives, and Irrigation. At this vegetable experimental pproject which is one of many cooperative projects by our Bulgarian friends [work] is being carried out in order to implement the resolution of the [special] congress of the Lao-Bulgarian subcommittee for agricultural, technical, scientific, and technological cooperation especially the sincere assistance in capital, materials, equipment, and the number of engineers involved in order to carry out the work efficiently and quickly.

Comrade Somvang Dalasak, the settlement chief, said that the primary goal of bringing the vegetable cultivation experimental project to this settlement is, first of all, to serve the prople in Vientiane Province and cadres so as to be self-sufficient in fresh vegetables, and later on there will also be a plan to produce vegetables. Besides growing vegetables, they also practice intensive paddy cultivation on 70 hectares of lowland.

The chief of the settlement added that after the last dry season experimentation we can see that the average produce is 12 tons of fresh vegetables per hectare. In order to ensure the expected or to exceed-the-expected results for various kinds of vegetable production such as cabbage, tomatoes, eggplant, large oinions, Lao hot peppers, Bulgarian hot peppers, carrots, sweet melons, etc. in this coming dry season the soil preparation, animal manure accumulation, chemical fertilizer, and insecticide must be paid attention to from the beginning of the year. They expect to use 25 tons of animal manure per hectare, and 2 groups will be planted: 6 hectares for the first group, and 2 hectares for the second group. Now the soil preparation, fertilizer and gross mulching have been carried on in over one hectare.

As of now this project is only 1 year old. Production has only been for one season, and the vegetable planting area has not yet been expanded over all the expected area of 20 hectares. However, this one year has clearly indicated the primary victory that was earned by the sweat, the combined labor, and the cooperation between the pioneers from the land of roses and this land of the frangipani.

The proudest thing that came from the difficult new phase of lack of vehicles and actual experiences was not only to have an almost complete set of machinery but also the cooperative atmosphere between two brothers under the same roof of Marxism-Leninism. It is a most beautiful picture.

Comrade (Harris Tovonsev), a Bulgarian irrigation engineer for the vegetable project, sincerely and confidently said that he came here to respond to the spirit of proletarian internationalism in actual practice. When he looks at the history of his nation and Laos he can say that they are not much different. The struggle in Laos and Bulgaria is similar. Working here is real friendship. Even though this project is new, our fraternal Lao will be able to accept and effectively carry out this work.

Besides the 100 hectares of the vegetable project the Bulgarian experts also helped to survey and do soil testing on an additional 800 hectares of the plain area where now over 600 hectares have been completely surveyed, to participate and to press forward in the vegetable project in Settlement 23 Venukham, the Na Phok seed-producing center; additional research will also be done in the use of irrigation systems, flood prevention techniques, and research concerning the transformation and improvement of large canals to strengthen the current so that it can push the water further into any area.

Also, the settlement chief added that in the long-term plan additional pumping systems will be installed in order to have water for year-round production. The construction of the settlement, places for cadres to stay, and cold storage for 50 tons of vegetables at one time are being studied and designed, and this construction will start in early 1983.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON U.S. POW/MIA DELEGATION

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 18 Sep 82 pp 1, 3

[Article: "Visit of U.S. POW/MIA Family Delegation to Laos"]

[Text] On 13-16 September a delegation led by Mr George Brooks who represented the U.S. mass organization of U.S. POW/MIA families of those who disappeared during the war visited Laos in order to improve good relations between the Lao and Americans.

During the visit, besides visiting Mr Khamphai Boupha, acting Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Mr Meun Somvichit, chief of the National Social Welfare and Veterans Committee, the delegation met and had discussions with representatives of the Lao veterans led by Lieutanant Colonel Khamal Keophithoun, Secretary of the Ministry of Interior. On this occasion the Lao pointed out to the delegation that the direction and foreing policy of the LPDR are peace, independence, friendship, and nonalignment. They emphasized the responsibility of the U.S. government for the harmful effects of the war they had provoked, and talked about the good intentions and humanity of the Lao government and people towards the U.S., which is clearly shown by the returning of all U.S. POWs before the U.S. asked them to do so. Moreover, they gave the remains of 2 U.S. personnel who lost their lives, and they will continue searching for U.S. personnel according to the situation and the ability of the Lao people. The Lao government and its people sympathize with the American people and the American families of those who lost their lives in the war, and share their feelings and sorrow with the Americans who were victims of the war as well as the Lao people as a result of the U.S. government's deeds. Once again, in order to confirm its humanity the Lao government and its people facilitated things for the delegation in every way while visiting Laos; for example, they brought the delegation to see the site of the plane crash in Champassak Province where the U.S. soldiers lost their lives.

The delegation of American families praised the good intentions, friendliness, and humanity of the Lao government and its people toward the delegates as well as towards the people of the U.S. Meanwhile, they promised to bring such feelings and the actual situation in Laos to people in the U.S. so they will learn the facts in order to find ways to make the U.S. government have a correct [attitude] toward the LPDR.

The U.S. Charge d'Affaires in Laos joined all of the activities of the delegation, and also recognized in the same way as the delegation the good intentions and all the conveniences the Lao provided to the delegation.

TRIBAL MINORITY EDUCATION PROBLEMS, DEVELOPMENT NOTED

Vientiane SIANG PASASON in Lao 20 Sep 82 p 3

[Article: "Hom District Teacher Training School"]

[Text] Hom is a mountainous district in Vientiane Province. Previously its people were illiterate, and if they were literate there were very few of them because it is a remote district and consists of many minority nationalities who settled along the plateaux and valleys. It is hard for them to go back and forth to see each other. The most important problem is to assign teaching cadres from other localities to teach in this locality.

Therefore, to solve this problem the administrative authorities in cooperation with the district educational service and the people of all nationalities decided to build this school, the first one, in 1979-1980, and named it "Nationalities' Teachers' Training School". This teachers' training school is really as good as its name. It gathers children of the people of all nationalities and races in almost all villages and cantons in this district to receive 2 years of training per group; then they are sent back to teach in their own villages or the localities of their own nationalities and races. This is a good way to solve the village teacher problem. Now there are teachers and schools in almost all the villages in Hom District.

Concerning this problem Comrade Lo Vangteuy, director of the school mentioned, gave his views that this school establishment has the most significant meaning for the lives of our nationalities. It can be compared with bringing the light into the mountainous areas. From the day the school was set up to now, it has produced 131 teachers. This includes 47 teachers in the first group, 46 teachers in the second group, and 38 teachers who have just finished.

This school is located on the bank along the clear and cool Long San [River], a place where the people are diligent in cultivation and animal husbandry, where there is beautiful and healthy green vegetation because of the dark and moist soil, cool weather, and because the new people have diligently built it up with their hands.

GARMENT FACTORY WAGES, FOREIGN TRADE LINKS REPORTED

Vientiane HENG'NGAN in Lao 1-15 Aug 82 p 6

[News Column by Vatthana Thavisai: "An Interesting Doll House"]

[Excerpts] Many people customarily call it a "doll house," but its official name is "Vientiane Garment Factory." I was determined to find out about this doll house, as it was said that they were all beautiful dolls. There are Lao skirts, blouses, cloth and other goods of many kinds and colors made with our true Lao creativity, impressively decorated for the guests.

[Mrs] Manivan Khaikhamphithoun, the factory director, was sitting on the deck. On seeing me she welcomed me with a friendly smile. She said, "you are here on time, please have a seat." After I told her of my intentions she agreed because both sides had already made the arrangements. She was ready to bring out several outstanding workers for me to interview. While waiting for the interviewees to come she told me that this Vientiane garment factory or the doll house previously belonged to capitalists. After the country was liberated in 1975 it was transferred to government ownership under the Industry and Trade Service of Vientiane capital on 26 December 1976. At first there were approximately only 20 workers, mostly women. As we know, during the old regime the living standard of these factory workers was a hand-to-mouth situation, people just being able to make ends meet. Nowadays, however, there are more than 70 people here, and the best standard of living is guaranteed. Our production section is now divided into 7 work units: dyeing, spinning, research and design, pattern weaving, looms, clipping, and doll sewing. In our factory along with the attentive mobilizing for production, we have determinedly arranged for the welfare of our workers. Now we have doctors to examine their health periodically. We have a nursery, and have set up a food shop serving lunch to the workers that costs only 3 kip, which is a very low price. We have 3 fairly well established mass organizations especially the trade union organization that together set up a treasury and different fund raising activities to support the food store's lunch service. The trade union also mobilizes to set up socialist emulation among workers within the factory.

Nowadays the maximum income of a worker is over 1000 kip; the minimum is over 500 kip. The overall average a person receives is 700-800 kip per month. Besides this, the board of directors also gives the workers some raw materials to weave in their homes. This enables them to increase their income over 400 kip per month. When there is illness or someone gets married we help them as best we can. For production we not only mobilize and guide them to produce based on the plan, but we encourage them to produce above the expected level. Besides producing within the plan they may also have contracts from the outside as they please. On the average they are able to expand their ideas creating 7-8 new clothing pattern designs per month. Mostly they redesign patterns primarily from old fashioned ones, and then express them in new ideas. Some produce half old fashioned, half modern, such as western style shoulder strap handbags, decorating them with a pattern for the edge of a Lao skirt as a symbol of Lao products. If we calculate the total amount of production in only 3 months, it is almost 3 million kip which exceeds the plan by 50 percent. Our products are popular not only among the Lao people but also among foreigners. Many fraternal socialist countries have discussed with us the possibility of buying products from our factory. In early 1981 we signed an agreement with the USSR worth a total of over one million kip. In 1982 we signed an agreement with Hungary worth 4.2 million kip. On the occasion of opening the Third Congress of the LPRP not long ago we put our efforts into night and day production in order to produce gifts for the congress. There were 45 sets of table cloths, 120 cloth bags, 40 Lao skirt edge patterns, 21 Lao skirts, 1 piece of cloth to decorate and praise the congress, and 100 framed pattern designs. They also made some gifts for a number of foreign guests who attended the congress. Mrs Manivan Khaiphithoun added that she was most proud to see the products heavily produced to satisfy the masses in Vientiane Capital as well as foreigners. She said this achievement came from the guidance and leadership of the provincial party committee, especially the Vientiane City and Province Industrial and Trade Service.

Before leading the Vientiane Garment Factory, I ordered a wedding dress with an outstanding pattern from Mrs Manivan Khaikhamphithoun, the factory director.

TRADE UNION ROLE IN GOVERNMENT, PLANNING NOTED

Vientiane HENG NGAN in Lao 1-15 Aug 82 p 2

['Study of Trade Union Problem' Column: "Relationship Between Trade Unions and Government Organizations"]

[Text] Part V. After the successful revolution and the establishment of administrative power, the relationship between trade unions and the government administration has been one of cooperation and united struggling together for the same goal. Trade unions are very efficient and the closest colleagues of the government, which they strongly and determinedly support. They are an unshakeable shelter for the socialist government.

The relationship between trade unions and the government is a main principle of socialist revolution. Both the labor unions and the government carry out the same overall tasks, i.e., to victoriously turn industry into socialist industry. Therefore, they must be united and must cooperate closely in all activities. Government organizations directly control the economy and industry, aiming firmly at trade unions, and endlessly reinforce the determination of the masses. In order to effectively manage the trade unions, it must be those who join with the government [who] truly cooperate in economic and industrial management.

In the evolution of socialist construction, trade unions are responsible for the actual work assigned by the government that gradually increases in amount. Government organizations must wholeheartedly assist trade unions so that they can effectively carry out their responsibility. The trade union movements in many aspects of government work must be considered important.

Each type of work involving trade unions and government organizations must be made into laws so that different levels of the administrative authorities as well as the trade unions will strictly carry them out.

Different levels of trade unions represent workers and state employees in the meetings of the same-level administrative organization to discuss the design and implementation of the government plan (e.g., the design and implementation of production projects to be consistent with principles, to participate in setting up and carrying out the labor quota, and to discuss policies related to the duties, rights, and benefits of workers and government employees, putting some money into the treasury, spending the treasury money for awards and for the rights and public benefits in the factories, for living conditions, social insurance, health, vacations, recreation, day care, work safety, culture problems, mass literature, and sports for cadres, workers, and government employees); to participate in the assignment, promotion, and salary increases, commendations and disciplinary measures, representing workers and government employees in protecting rights and benefits of workers and government employees in case of disaster.

Trade unions represent workers and government employees and take part in managing factories and signing group agreements with the factory directors. The government factory directors must regularly report the production situation and the carrying out of the labor system to all workers and government employees (the meeting of workers and government employees is conducted and hosted by the labor union, and the content of the meeting is a basic agreement signed by the factory director and the trade union).

The relationships between the factory director, the trade union, and trade union cadres respond to what is necessary so that the trade union can move appropriately.

The development and carrying out of the government plan, policies, and laws concerning the central trade union may aim at the needs of the working masses in order to propose that the government revise policies and laws that are already in effect, and declare new policies and laws. Different levels of local trade unions and the central trade union are responsible for discussions with the same level of administrative authorities in order to set out the details and the appropriate ways to carry out the policies and laws of the government within the localities and service areas of responsibility.

SAVANNAKHET ELECTRIFICATION--In order to steadily supply electricity for production and light to the people throughout the city areas as well as in rural areas, from the beginning of 1982 until now cadres and workers of the Savannakhet Province Electrification Branch have raised the workers' spirit to actively carry out their work to expand electrification to serve local production. The actual results were the successful wiring of low-voltage electricity into Atsaphangthong District with five 220-380 volt lines and the use of a total of 16,200 meters of electric wire; a total of 72 poles were installed, and they successfully installed 2 generators earlier than expected. Each generator can produce 60 kilowatts of electricity. They wired 22 kilovolts from Ban Pakbo to the Tha Sano water pumping station which is 3,800 meters, installed a 160-kilovolt electrical transformer to bring electricity to the government rice mill in the Ban Nake area. They expanded 22-kilovolt electric wiring, and also succeeded 100 percent in setting up a 160-kilowatt electrical transformer for Ban Nake irrigation, and many other installations. Now the electrification workers in the province are trying to score big achievements a lot more than before, in order to ensure the victorious achievement of the second six-month plan. UNHCR AID DISTRIBUTION--Last August the Lao Red Cross brought material assistance to give to the National Blood Donation Center, Vientiane Capital Red Cross, and the Champassak Province Red Cross for medical use and to be given to the people who are in need. The material assistance included medicine, 3,000 sacks of blood, 20 tubes of (anti A) serum, 20 rubes of (anti B) serum from the UNHCR, 8 first aid kits from the Indian Red Cross, 1,000 pints of blood from the Japanese Red Cross, and some winter clothing from the Swiss Red Cross. Moreover, from March 1982 to date the Lao Red Cross also gave out powdered milk all over, and gave many tons of powdered milk to many different regional nurseries throughout Vientiane Capital. Meanwhile, they are continuously helping those who faced disastrous fires on 10 occasions. For these they gave out assistance once through the National Social Welfare and Veterans Committee, and 9 times through Vientiane Provincial Welfare. MARKET PRICES IN SARAVANE--The Saravane market is not a big one but it is full of inexpensive consumer products. We asked the prices of items, and found, for example, 25-30 kip per chicken, 30-35 kip per mandarin duck, 18 kip per kilogram of pork, 1 kip per frog, k kip per chicken egg, 40 kip per wild rabbit, 30 kip for one wild chicken, 1 kip for a cup of balck coffee, 2 kip for a cup of coffee with milk, 6 kip for a bowl of noodle soup, etc. [Excerpts] [Vientiane NOUM LAO in Lao 1-15 Jul 82 pp 4, 5] 9884

UNICEF AIDED PROJECT--Mr Phou Latsaphon of the staff section of the Ministry of Education, Sports, and Religion and the leader of the delegates of this Ministry along with Mr (Kotam), the representative of UNICEF in Laos, inspected the teachers' training school in Ban Keun, Thoulakom District, Vientiane Province on 4 August 1982. This school is a one-storey wood building with zinc roofing and a cement floor. It is 23 meters long, 8 meters wide, and consiste of 4 classrooms. Now 80 percent of the 3 months construction plan which started on 12 May 1982 is completed, and it is expected to be completed at the end of August. Construction has been carried out with funds from the Ministry of Education, and with assistance in a number of construction materials from UNICEF. During the inspection of the actual work Mr Phou Latsaphon and the UNICEF representative also noted detailed conditions and the indispensible needs of the school in order to look for ways to improve it further. Mr PHou Latsaphon and Mr (Kotam) were warmly welcomed by the school's board of directors and by the local administrative authorities. [Text] [Vientiane SUKSA MAI in Lao Aug 82 p 4] 9884

FINANCE MINISTER SPEAKS ON 1983 BUDGET

BK260246 Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 23 Oct 82 pp 12, 15

["Text" of Finance Minister Razaleigh Hamzah's budget speech--date and place not given]

[Excerpts] I wish at the very outset for this year's budget speech, to review the international economic performance for 1982 and the prospects for 1983 together, as the international recession is expected to continue for the whole of this year and at least into the early part of next year as well.

As the honorable members are aware, the world continues to be in recession. Indeed, the international recession has worsened much more than the industrial countries themselves expected.

Our present estimates now indicate that the Malaysian economy will expand by about 3.9 percent in real terms for the whole of 1982. This is well below the gross domestic product growth of 7.2 percent that we had estimated, on the basis of the 1982 budget's countercyclical measures.

Consumer prices, on the other hand, are estimated to moderate at a slower rate of about 6.5 percent, which is a creditable achievement considering the high international inflation. We have done much better than in 1974 when the consumer price index rose sharply to 17.4 percent and in 1975 when our economic growth actually declined by 0.8 percent in real terms.

However, the international recession has severely affected our exports in 1982--both in terms of volume and prices. The balance of trade is, therefore, expected to show a large deficit of over $2.4 billion in 1982.

In addition to this, we also have to pay substantially for services rendered by foreign countries, particularly in shipping and travelling. The current account is therefore expected to show a large deficit of $8,649 million.

Since the prices of our major export commodities have continued to remain depressed, our budget revenues have also continued to decline. The government therefore decided to take resolute pre-emptive action to protect the Malaysian economy against the onslaught of the worsening international recession.

True to our traditional style of pragmatism and prudence in fiscal management, we decided to restrain expenditure expansion, so as to weather the adverse recessionary effects on the budget even more effectively.

Thus, the operating and development expenditure allocations in 1982 were reduced by about $3,489 million in the middle of this year. This was done after very careful consideration, in order to ensure that the priority sectors, especially those pertaining to the achievement of the new economic policy objectives, were not adversely affected.

At the same time, the government has undertaken the necessary measures to ensure that government spending is more strictly controlled and maintained at the lowest possible level.

For example, the government has undertaken a review of its manpower needs and decided to freeze the filling of vacancies and the creation of new posts in all categories of the public service, especially those in category d, except for the most essential ones.

The government has also minimised expenditure on transport and travelling and has confined the holding of meetings, seminars and conferences, wherever possible, to government premises.

The use of such utilities as electricity, water supply, telephones, stationery, furniture, equipment and other office supplies in government departments have also been curtailed.

Consequently, the 1982 budget will now turn out to be very different from the original estimates. The budget's operating estimate of $17,319 million is now expected to be reduced to $16,185 million.

Budget revenue is now estimated at about $16,434 million compared to the 1982 budget estimate of $17,683. This will give a small budget surplus on the current account of about $249 million, as compared to the original 1982 budget estimate of $364 million.

Furthermore, we have carried out a careful review of our development expenditure allocation for 1982 according to priority and in such a way that it has been possible to reduce the original allocation from $14,632 million to $12,881 million.

Indeed, the 1982 budget would have recorded large deficits if not for these expenditure restraints.

The honorable members will appreciate that these decisions to reduce budget expenditures were difficult. They had, nevertheless, to be taken, so as to cut our coat according to our cloth.

We will continue to exercise strict financial discipline, especially during these difficult times of international recession.

We would have taken the easy way out by borrowing even more, to maintain higher levels of operating and development expenditures in 1982 but we did not want to do so, as this would have led to more acute financial and monetary strains, not only during this year but for next year as well, and indeed for as long as this recession lasts.

I have indicated earlier that the international economic prospects for 1983 are expected to be better than this year. However, there is still considerable uncertainty.

In any case, any sustained economic recovery will only be gradual and occur in the latter, rather than in the earlier part of next year. A great deal will depend on what the industrial countries will do to improve the international economic situation. We cannot, however, depend on and wait for the industrial countries to take effective initiatives.

We will have to do what needs to be done by ourselves--to ensure that we achieve our socio-economic objectives--within the framework of our limited financial resources.

We would have liked to be strongly expansionary to overcome the adverse effects of the international recession. This we can do if we are absolutely sure that the world economy will recover strongly enough next year. But this is something we cannot really be certain about.

We will therefore have to continue to adopt, as we have always done, a cautious and pragmatic approach in the management of our economy. We have seen recent examples of many industrial, as well as major developing countries, that have been severely shaken to their foundations by the global recession.

We want to be careful not to get anywhere near this kind of precarious situation.

At the same time, we cannot afford to cut back too much on government expenditures, especially on our socio-economic development. We have to continue to provide the basic government facilities and services, especially to the lower income groups, to protect them as far as possible from the economic difficulties brought about by this international recession.

In the circumstance, the government can only incur expenditures consistent with its financial resources.

Since we must and will exercise prudence in our domestic and foreign borrowing, we will have to depend more on the government's own fiscal capacity to finance its services and its socio-economic development programmes, and at the same time safeguard the security and defence of our nation as well, for the benefit of our people.

We will ensure that the private sector will not be denied adequate access to the domestic banking system. This will enable the private sector to play a more dynamic role in complementing the government's efforts to stimulate economic growth.

We will continue to tap the international capital markets, but here again our financial prudence will dictate the limits. This is necessary to maintain the high credit standing that we enjoy and the strong business confidence and favourable investment climate that is our proud tradition.

Having taken all these factors into consideration, the government's overall budget strategy for 1983 will be to:

Consolidate and strengthen the federal government's financial position in line with available resources;
Improve and strengthen the underlying balance of payments situation; and,
Maintain a satisfactory rate of economic gorwth with price stability.

To consolidate and strengthen the federal government's financial position, the 1983 budget expenditures will be generally restrained to strike a proper balance between the need to maintain a strong budget and price stability.

Thus, I propose to appropriate a total of $28,749 million for the 1983 budget. This will comprise $17,079 million or 59.4 percent for operating expenditure and $11,670 million or 40.6 percent for development expenditure.

About 10.7 percent of the operating expenditure or $1,819 million, is provided for economic services and 26.2 percent or $4,472 million is provided for social services.

About 29 percent or about $4,955 million is intended for fixed charges, such as pensions and public debt, while security and defence will be provided with about 17.5 percent of the operating expenditure or about $2,994 million.

The development budget will continue to accord the highest priority to the economic sector, which would include major allocations for agriculture, land development and drainage and irrigation. Thus, more than half of the development expenditure i.e. about 52 percent or $6,086 million, will be provided to the economic sector.

Another important priority sector, the social sector, which includes education and health, will be provided with about $2,522 million or about 21 percent of the total development expenditure. Education and health will, in fact, get increased allocations over the revised 1982 development expenditure.

A sum of about $189 million has been allocated for health programmes.

As a revenue measure, I propose to increase the rate of sales tax from 5 to 10 percent. This tax currently affects only about 25 percent of the goods imported and produced in the country.

The balance of payments is expected to continue to remain under strain in 1983. However, with the coming on stream of liquified natural gas exports next year as well as the increase in crude oil production and exports, the merchandise account is expected to show an improvement over 1982 with a small surplus of $99 million in 1983.

The service account will continue to show a large deficit of $6,691 million, compared to a deficit of $6,093 million in 1982. Consequently, the deficit in the current account is expected to continue to be large in 1983, amounting to $6,670 million.

The overall balance is, however, projected to show a smaller deficit of $237 million compared to this year, due to strong long-term capital inflows.

Thus, net external reserves are projected at a level of about $9,000 million, which will be sufficient to finance about 4 months of retained imports.

Under agricultural development, a sum of about $177 million is proposed to be allocated to implement the various integrated agricultural development projects or IADPS as a concrete measure towards increasing the productivity and incomes of farmers.

The government will continue to provide subsidies in order to restrain price increases for essential foods and commodities and to provide the incentive to increase food production.

Thus, a sum of about $1,237 million is provided in the 1983 budget to cater for subsidies for such items as diesel and petroleum products, purchase price of padi and fertilisers. The largest allocation is for the subsidy of diesel and petroleum products amounting to $750 million.

The subsidy for the purchase price of padi amounts to $180 million. As an effort to reduce the costs for padi planting and to increase its productivity, a sum of $90 million is allocated for the subsidy on fertilisers, which is expected to benefit about 365,000 farm families.

Over the past 2 years in particular, I have observed that businesses and manufacturers who import, have gained considerably from the continuing strength of the ringgit in the face of global inflation.

Yet, such benefits are seldom passed on to the consumers. Since the beginning of 1981, the ringgit has appreciated by 31 percent against the pound sterling, 33 percent over the Japanese yen, 20 percent vis-a-vis the Deutschemark and nearly 13 percent compared with the Swiss franc.

Most glaring have been the prices of goods from Japan and Germany, where inflation has been low for the greater part of this period. Yet, the prices of consumer goods imported directly or based on components from these countries have continued to rise at a time when they should have fallen significantly.

It appears to me that our distributive system has become increasingly more inflation biased. We shall need to change this. And this we shall do if competitive forces in the private markets remain grossly imperfect, to the detriment of our consumers.

In order to maintain and promote economic growth particularly in the private sector, programmes under the transport sector will be given priority with an allocation of $1,973 million.

This includes $823 million for roads and bridges, $555 million for ports and marines, $310 million for railways and $275 million for civil aviation.

A sum of $461 million is provided for communication programmes which include $438 million for the provision of additional telephone lines and telex facilities.

Honorable members will agree that, unless we can protect our national sovereignty and independence which is even now being threatened by internal and external enemies, our economic development and achievements could be seriously jeopardised.

Furthermore, private investment can only expand within a climate of business confidence, which in turn can only be assured through a sustained sense of security. Defence and security will, thus, be allocated a total of $2,483 million or about 21 percent of the development expenditure.

I want, however, to also assure honorable members that the government is conscious of the need to balance government spending on both socioeconomic development and security, and that neither sector will be allowed to get more than its fair share of total government expenditures.

The economic prospects are generally expected to be better next year. With the strong backing and mandate from all sections of our society, we expect the Malaysian economic performance to improve next year. The gross domestic product is estimated to be about 4.9 percent in real terms.

The balance of payments merchandise account is estimated to register a small surplus, after being in deficit for the last 2 years. The budget current account will also continue to remain in surplus, despite the recession.

However, our economic growth could be even higher if the global economy performs better than currently expected.

Further reductions in the international interest rates to more reasonable levels will definitely encourage the private sector to take greater initiative to expand.

The construction industry, in particular, would then be able, with stronger government backing, to grow much faster. These positive developments could then enable the Malaysian economy to recover even more strongly to attain a growth rate of about 6 percent in real terms in 1983.

The 1983 budget strategy has been designed to help strengthen our economic resilence and counter the adverse effects of the international recession. The significant tax efforts that I have proposed, reflect our will and determination as an independent and sovereign nation to draw more upon our own national strength and to rally the support and cooperation of all our people round the banner, to face the present difficulties and, indeed, to face the future more resolutely with greater self-reliance and self-confidence.

The measures embodied in this budget will also contribute to the realisation of our national aspirations to build a more equitable and united nation. Those who can afford will be contributing more towards protecting the interests of the less fortunate through the more equitable sharing of the burden of recession.

In this way, we will all be able to put our shoulders to the wheel to ensure that the Malaysian economy will continue to be strong. The economy will then be able to successfully sail through this rough recession and be better prepared to gather momentum and move ahead, when international economic recovery really takes place.

The government has taken the necessary initiatives and made some hard decisions in keeping with the pragmatic style of the Barisan Nasional [National Front] government in dealing with our problems. As honorable members are aware, we have always strived to do what is best for our country and our people, regardless of considerations of popularity.

When times were better we could afford to be more relaxed and generous. Now, with the difficult times brought upon us by the world recession, we have to do what needs to be done, without flinching.

We are grateful to God for His guidance and protection against greater setbacks that would have befallen our country and our people resulting from the world economic recession.

With the loyal support of all our people, from all walks of life, we shall overcome our present problems. I have great faith in the genius of our people, in our capacity for innovation, inventiveness and higher productivity.

Under the determined leadership of the Barisan Nasional government, I have no doubt that, God willing, these inherent qualities of our people will blossom forth and make their mark in our quest for a greater and more abundant future.

TOPICS FOR GHAZALI'S ROK VISIT REPORTED

BK271531 Hong Kong AFP in English 1020 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Report by Nug Nair]

[Text] Kuala Lumpur, 27 Oct (AFP)--South Korea's proposal for a Pacific nations summit will be explained at length to the Malaysian foreign minister, Tan Sri Ghazali Shafie, who is leaving for Seoul tonight on a 3-day visit.

President Chon Tu-hwan, who mooted the idea earlier this year, looks forward to getting positive support for the proposal from Malaysia and other Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) countries, according to the South Korean ambassador here.

The ambassador, Mr Choe Ho-chung told AFP today that the proposal sought to create a consultative mechanism under which top leaders of the Pacific rim countries could discuss problems of mutual concern and expand cooperation. The first summit could be followed by similar consultations periodically in different capitals.

He said that the president, in making the proposal, felt that the time had come for the leaders to participate jointly in the creation of a "great Pacific age" to promote peace and prosperity in the region. Summit level consultation would be the most effective way to overcome the obstacles and challenges that stood in the way of realizing the "Pacific age."

The ambassador noted Malaysia's stand, expressed by the Prime Minister Dr Mahathir Mohamad, last week that "before anything positive is done, the countries concerned should study the proposal very carefully."

Mr Choe said that the Malaysian foreign minister would have the opportunity of full discussions with his counterpart in Seoul, Mr Yi Pom-sok, during his 3-day stay in the Korean capital. Tan Sri Ghazali will also call on President Chon Tu-hwan.

Mr Choe said that the initial reaction to the proposal of Malaysia, which was similar to that of Indonesia, was satisfactory and as expected.

Malaysian Foreign Ministry sources said that a lot of things were vague about the proposal at present.

The Pacific rim touched a large number of countries, embracing such nations as South and North Korea, the United States, Japan, the Soviet Union, China and small Pacific island nations with differences in political outlook, ideology and levels of development.

The South Korean view appeared to be that the ASEAN countries would have a decisive say in choosing the list of summit participants.

Mr Ghazali's discussions in Seoul would cover regional problems including the latest developments in regard to Cambodia.

He would seek South Korean support and assistance for President Sihanouk, whose Democratic Kampuchean coalition government secured a massive majority in the UN General Assembly for its continued seating in the world body.

The South Korean leaders are expected to explain to Mr Ghazali their proposal on reunification of the divided peninsula.

BRIEFS

MAHATHIR IN PAPUA NEW GUINEA--Datuk Sri Dr Mahathir Mohamed has arrived in Papua New Guinea [PNG] for a 2-day official visit. On arrival, the prime minister and his wife were received by his counterpart, Mr Michael Somare. The prime minister's visit immediately after the commonwealth regional meeting in Fiji is to reaffirm friendship between the two countries. He said that Malaysia places special interest in PNG because of its observer's status in ASEAN. It is also a special link in developing a meaningful communication between members of the Pacific forum and ASEAN. Malaysia feels the two countries share many similar ideals and aspirations in meeting the challenges of national development. Several areas of bilateral cooperation are expected to be identified during the visit. A Malaysian spokesman says that PNG is seriously considering establishing diplomatic representation in Malaysia. MORE ADB ASSISTANCE PLANNED

Kathmandu THE RISING NEPAL in English 22 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Mr. Masao Fujioka, the president of the Asian Development Bank, Thursday morning said more financial assistance from the Bank was on the pipeline as it was "very easy to assist" Nepal develop the priority sectors of agriculture and water resources.

He explained at a press conference before leaving for Dhaka, Bangladesh, that this was so because the Bank was in "full agreement" with His Majesty's Government regarding many important policy issues such as the priority accorded to the development of the two sectors.

Mr. Fujioka said that although total quantum of assistance expected from the Bank could be known only after the preparatory designes were completed, irrigation development in the hills, science teaching in the secondary schools and the energy need for the paper industry were some of the projects under consideration.

The Manila based Bank has increased its lending to Nepal providing about 45 million US dollars in 1981 compared to the first year lending of 6 million US dollars in 1969. This brought the total Bank lending to 264.9 million US dollar in 1981.

The large share of the total Bank lending has been provided to the agriculture and rural development sector (46.8 percent), followed by energy (20.9 perecent), transport (15.8 percent), industry (14.9 percent), and social infrastructure (1.6 percent).

In addition, the Bank's technical assistance of 16.83 million US dollars for the 49 technical assistance projects approved to date reflects similar priorities. Eleven of the technical assistance grants have resulted in Bank loans of 114 million US dollars.

"Our task is to help develop the Asian countries which have the strong will, aspiration and determination to develop the national economy but the main role should be of the country itself," said Mr. Fujioka.

He expressed some worries regarding the delay in project implemention but said he was "very encouraged" to learn that policy decisions were taken to speed up the implementation with encouraging results already being experienced.

The ADB president advocated what he called the "promotion of policy dialogue" which basically aimed at finding "constructive solutions" to improve procedures for ensuring effective implementation of the project.

Regarding Hetauda Cement Factory, he said the project was very important and therefore should be implemented as soon as possible. As for the overrun cost, he said trilateral effort including Nepal, the ADB and co-financing agencies was well under way.

The ADB president and his wife left here today for Dhaka, at the completion of three day visit to Nepal. (RSS)

SETTING UP OF PAKISTAN-CHINA JOINT COMMISSION LAUDED; BRIGHT HOPES EXPRESSED

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 21 Oct 82 p 2

[Text] With the setting up of a joint commission, cooperation between Pakistan and China in the fields of economy, science, technology and culture has been, as President Zia-ul-Haq said, institutionalised. Though the relations between these two countries have always been very cordial and kept on expanding with the passage of time, cooperation has been taking place on ad hoc basis. As the situation demanded, the two countries made arrangements to meet each other's requirements. As such, even in the absence of any institution, there has never arisen any difficulty in getting things done. On the contrary, things moved at the desired speed and the two sides have never had any complaints. This has been the result of the very cordial and warm relations which have existed between the two all along. Pak-China friendship is now being quoted internationally as a model of cordiality between countries having altogether different political and economic set-up. This difference has never come in the way of expansion of relations in all the fields. It was China whose active cooperation enabled this country to enter the field of heavy mechanical engineering. The huge complex working in Taxila, is a living monument of the type of friendship the two countries have. This complex is the first big step towards achieving self-reliance for which we have been making frantic efforts all along. We are now making big industrial plants in the Heavy Mechanical Complex of Taxila, including cement, sugar, etc. It is by all means a great achievement which has been made possible only because of China's assistance. This has actually resulted in the transfer of technology in which respect our western friends have always been rather miserly besides being expensive. At his press conference in Beijing the other day, President Zia has also acknowledged this fact and thanked the Chinese friends.

It is heartening to see that the joint commission is being assigned ministerial status.

Besides reviewing the progress on the implementation of protocols signed in specific fields, the commission would also assess and propose further expansion of cooperation and draft new protocols which to be signed by the two sides. Institutionalising the existing cooperation would greatly help in meeting the long term requirements, particularly at a time when this country is getting ready to launch its Sixth Five-Year Plan. It would be in the fitness of things to assess what and how much assistance would be needed for the implementation of the plan and to what extent our Chinese friends can help us. Above all, the decisions taken by the commission would be immediately implemented because of the level at which these decisions would be made.

As regards trade, it has been consistently expanding. It was started on the basis of barter, but now with China becoming a member of the IMF, the trade will be conducted on normal basis. In view of the understanding which exists between the two, this change would not have any adverse effect on the expansion of trade relations. On the contrary, it is bound to increase. The prospects of further expansion in the exchange of goods and services between the two countries have, as a matter of fact, brightened with the setting up of the ministerial commission.

There is no denying the fact that as a result of the personal contacts between the leaders of the two countries, which are still in progress in Beijing, they have come still closer. The fast developing economic relations between these two important countries of the region are bound to strengthen the forces of peace and stability. Viewed in this context, the present Chinese tour of President Zia has assumed added significance. It may also contribute in speeding up the process of normalisation of relations with India and in finding a political solution of the Afghanistan issue.

MAHBUBUL HAQ ON NEW SOCIO-ECONOMIC ORDER

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 21, 22 Oct 82

[Article by Dr. Mahbubul Haq]

In a country where honest intellectual debates on the critical issues of national development are a rarity, I take it as a unique opportunity to invite all of you through the forum and the entire nation—to engage in a national debate on the Sixth Five-Year Plan.

A development plan affects the life of all individual—at least, it must—and, therefore, it cannot be regarded as the private property of any government. For once, let there be a free exchange of ideas on the economic and social issues facing this land of ours. And let no one doubt that we are listening—and listening very carefully—and that we have the necessary will to be guided by those who share an honest concern with the future development of this country, so let a clear message go forth that development planning is too important an exercise to be left to national planners alone, the whole nation must participate in it.

The aims of planning and economic policy in most developing countries are not all that dissimilar. Each and every one of us would like to see a plan embody large strides along the paths of economic growth, socio-economic welfare, and self-reliance. Many would also entertain the hope that these paths should not contain any hardships of taxation and inflation, and even the policy makers contrary to the popular belief, do not take a sadistic pleasure in imposing sacrifices on a complaining nation. Development without tears has been a day dream of many nations—but, unfortunately, it has remained just that, a day dream. Development involves choices, tough choices, some cruel alternatives, balancing of many competing claims, and there is no way—no way whatsoever—that these choices can be avoided. It is to a discussion of these critical choices to which I invite you today.

I have often been asked what kind of development strategy we intend to pursue in the Sixth Plan. And I have just as readily replied that our development strategy must combine a strong production base with a strong social conscience.

This is not a mere slogan, this is not a catchword, this is not to evade the real issue. This is, in fact, the essence of the whole development debate. Like other developing countries, the Pakistan pendulum has swung far too violently from growth to distribution and back again, at different stages of its development. As a nation, we simply cannot afford these violent swings of the pendulum. We simply cannot afford the luxury of creating growth in one decade to distribute it in the next. This will not respond to the national aspirations. Nor will this be a very realistic strategy. The real challenge today is to bring the policies of growth and distribution close together, and they can be brought together only if the general masses participate in production, employment and social services at all levels of society. In the final analysis, economic development will mean little to our people if it does not touch their daily lives.

REAL CHALLENGE

Let me present a concrete example. We are presently exploring the feasibility of a six to seven per cent growth rate in gross domestic production in the Sixth Plan period. If we attain a 6.5 per cent growth rate in GDP, we can provide for the growth in population and still allow for an improvement of Rs. 800 per family per year, or about 20 per cent over the Sixth Plan period.

The real question is not whether such a rate of increase in family income is necessary. It is imperative at our level of poverty. Instead, the real question is how to ensure that all families equally share in such an increase. How to make certain that this increase is not for privileged few? How to enforce policies which will enable each family to obtain their increase of Rs. 4,000 per annum over the next five years? In fact, how to make sure that the poorer families get higher than this average amount and the richer ones get lower than this average amount? This is where the formulation of an incomes policy becomes necessary alongside the production policy.

There can be many elements in this incomes policy: There must be a rapid spread of production and employment opportunities to embrace all sections of the society. There must be greater emphasis on small farms and small industries and workers of small means everywhere. There must be indexation for the incomes of the fixed income groups, particularly urban middle class which is badly squeezed by the inflation. There must be social safety nets available for the poorest and the indigent. There must be a regular monitoring of the distribution of income in the country between various income groups, between rural and urban areas, between various economic sectors, so as to make timely corrections through the fiscal policy and other means.

This confronts us with the first major issue in the national debate on the Sixth Plan. I invite all to give careful consideration to this ever present danger in many developing countries where the total production of a nation increases without a corresponding increase in the economic welfare of its masses. We have witnessed an improvement in income distribution recently, thanks to fast expanding farm incomes, workers' remittances and introduction of Zakat. But we must debate seriously how economic growth is going to be distributed in future and through what policies, and how to manage all this without weakening production incentives. The answers are by no mean simple or facile. This is one of the most stubborn issues in the national economic policy anywhere in the world. I will look forward to your ideas and thoughts on this question.

MAJOR THRUSTS

Let me now take up some of the major thrusts that we envisage for the Sixth Plan, with the caution that my statement is not intended to portray a comprehensive picture of what the plan will contain. Irrespective of the fact that priorities may be assigned to one objective or to one particular sector. It is quite clear that advances have to be made on all fronts in the interest of balanced development. However, each plan makes certain departures from preceding ones in response to changing perceptions and requirements of the economic situation. It is to those new departures, new initiatives, and new perceptions that I would like to invite your attention. I am quite conscious that there will be many complaints that some important sector or policy theme has been ignored or omitted but that is an inevitable risk—and an entirely acceptable one—in any effort to be selective.

One of the principal objectives of the Sixth Plan will be to bring about a real transformation in our rural scene. Despite strong urbanization and industrialization over the last three decades, agriculture and rural areas continue to form the backbone of the economy. They provide one-third of GDP, one-half of total employment and the source of three-fourths of our exports, and over 70 per cent of our population lives in these areas.

It is a major lapse of our past development that so much remains to be done to ensure an even spread of development between rural and urban areas. In many ways, rural areas have slept through three decades of development. Only recently an accelerated increase in agricultural production has brought renewed attention to what is lacking in these areas by way of social services and how much still remains to be done to open them up to economic development and to carry the centres of economic growth back into the heart land of our countryside.

SOCIAL INFRASTRUCTURE

At present, the physical and social infrastructure are hopelessly deficient in our rural areas. About 75 per cent of the 45,000 villages in the country, and numerous small settlements, go without electricity. The rural road network contains less than one-fifth of the prescribed minimum of 0.64 km of roads per sq. km of area. Barely 20 per cent of the rural population is served with safe drinking water. Only a small minority of the rural primary school age children actually go to schools and female literacy hovers around the abysmal rate of five per cent. The outreach of the most elementary form of rural health network misses out 21 per cent of the population. Only 1,000 out of 7,000 doctors in the public sector at present serve in the rural areas.

It is our intention to give the first priority in the Sixth Plan to achieving a decisive break through in the provision of physical infrastructure and social services to the rural areas. Indeed the foundations of the new strategy have already been laid in the annual plan for the current fiscal year wherein special programmes have been launched for rural areas for village electrification, water supply, farm to market roads, primary education and primary health care, small tractors, and other types of farm mechanization on small farms.

It is our intention over the Sixth Plan period to provide electricity to each and every village in the country, to double the network of farm to market roads, to raise the percentage of rural population served with clean drinking water from the present 20 per cent of the population to about 50 per cent, to increase the proportion of the rural primary school age children in rural schools from below 50 per cent to 75 per cent, to introduce a national rural health service (preferably on a voluntary basis, or compulsorily if necessary) and to extend health facilities and basic health care to the entire rural population.

Such a rural transformation will be truly dramatic in its impact. It will be reflected in the daily lives of millions of our people. It will revolutionise our rural life. It will also support and accelerate an agricultural break-through and help convert this country into a prosperous granary serving its own needs of self-sufficiency and also the export requirements abroad, particularly in the Middle East. Our villages will finally walk into the modern age. But let me be very frank. The rural transformation of this magnitude cannot be engineered by mere technological blueprints or through government actions alone. This must become a national movement. It must involve community participation. It must embrace an active role of elected local bodies, with enhanced development powers. The national debate on such a wholesale rural transformation must take place not only in intellectual forums like this, not only in the national press, but in every village. In every hemlet under the shade of every tree by the village canal, in the confines of every local council. Planners and administrators alone cannot engineer profound social and economic changes.

It is for this reason that I believe that considerable development powers will have to be delegated to the elected local bodies in the next plan period—particularly, for primary schools, primary health care, farm to market roads and rural water supply. We are tentatively planning for ten per cent of the Sixth Plan to be spent directly through the local bodies in addition to the national efforts. Through this forum, I would like to invite all district councils to submit their five-year plans to the planning commission before the end of the year, on the basis of which we shall hold an intensive dialogue with them to determine local needs and priorities and to accommodate them as fully as possible Sixth Plan.

AGRICULTURE

The programmes for the expansion of rural infrastructure will be reinforced with others designed to raise productivity and to encourage diversification in agriculture. One of the major initiatives in the Sixth Plan would be to engineer sizeable exports of food from Pakistan. Pakistan has been exporting about Rs. 50 to 100 crores of food in net terms with the total food exports, principally rice, in the neighbourhood of Rs. 600 crores, while food imports around Rs. 500 crores (principally tea, milk and oilseeds), it is our intention to try to increase these net food exports of around Rs. 50 to Rs. 100 crores at least ten-fold over the Sixth Plan period.

This is not unrealistic. I am not in the business of selling dreams. This can be done. We must replace our oilseed and milk imports gradually through expanded domestic production as well as greatly increase our exports of fruits and vegetables, livestock, poultry, and even flowers, which are presently less than Rs. 30 crores a year. We can readily find markets for these exports in the Gulf states. The real question is whether we can produce sufficient exportable surpluses, maintain quality control, arrange efficient marketing and keep a competitive position in the export markets.

I believe this is one of those national challenges—and, in fact, a natural opportunity—to which all of us must devote very careful thought. Pakistan has, definitely a comparative advantage in the production and export of food. In fact, there is a virgin field here where we can realize tremendous gains in the near future since the export markets are not over-crowded unlike the industrial goods where a protectionist curtain has descended all across the developed countries. But we need to debate many serious issues before we aspire to be a major food exporter. Let me list a few:

—In which commodity should we try to expand our exports? Our present analysis is that our main export potential lies in high value crops like fruits, vegetables, flowers, livestock, poultry, etc., which have been regarded, ironically, as "minor crops" so far and which must now be given the same attention and priority as the major crops received in the past,

—What kind of policies will produce an exportable surplus in food? It is quite clear that we will have to consider the same kind of support prices, research, high-yielding seed varieties and other support services for some of these high value crops which we have so successfully designed for some of our principal crops in the last few years.

—How should the production be organised? Some of this production can take place on small farms with good marketing facilities and even state marketing boards to support them. Some, like livestock, may require corporate farming and corporate management with the introduction of both domestic private sector and some foreign multinationals. This is obviously a sensitive issue which requires a candid national debate.

BALUCHISTAN

Let me also mention another possibility awaiting to be recognised and to be fully utilized in the national interest. I happen to believe that the Baluchistan region, comprising 43 per cent of our land area and containing 15 million acres of cultivable land is one of the richest areas in the country in terms of its agrarian potential. Only about 20 per cent of this cultivable area is actually cultivated now and the yields in many cases are higher than in other provinces. It is time that we focus our national attention on Baluchistan as a new agrarian frontier where a tremendous increase in agricultural production is possible, particularly of fruits, vegetables, and livestock, through bold and imaginative policies of valley development. The missing elements are exploitation of underground water and provision of electricity, roads and other infrastructure. We are analysing this potential in a thoroughly professional manner in the planning commission at present.

If we, as a nation, are to start thinking of Pakistan as a food-exporting rather than as a food-deficit area, a basic structural shift must take place in the national psychology. We will have to get rid of rationing, price controls, control on movements of crops, and many other unnecessary encumbrances which may have been needed in a period of scarcity but which will have no place in our national policies in a period of surplus. More than that, we will have to search carefully for those operational policies and programmes which can realize this latent potential of Pakistan into actual reality in the coming years. ◎

[Text]

From agriculture, let me turn now to the programme of industrialization. Despite significant strides, we still have a long way to travel on the road to industrialization. In our view, the Sixth Plan industrial strategy should have three basic elements—import substitution, export-led growth and a genuinely active private sector. Before I elaborate each of these elements, let me make it clear that I am not repeating mere economic jargon but stating something which is pertinent to our current situation, an objective conclusion thrown up by our past wayward industrialization experience.

Our plan is to progressively replace the imports of engineering goods. The present level of the import of these goods is indicative of sufficient domestic demand. The setting up of the steel mill can now lead to the second stage of our industrialization, by emphasising the production and export of engineering goods. A new era of industrialization can start. But let us be aware of the pitfalls. Our raw material costs are high, our labour productivity is low, our skills and technology are missing and our export markets are highly competitive. Our engineering goods sector must be built on realistic plans, not on idle dreams.

In going for engineering goods import substitution, we will be exposing ourselves to the danger of getting even more deeply mired into inefficient production. As we have learnt to our cost, blanket import substitution turns infant industry into sick and old units which become a drain and liability on the economy. To prevent such occurrences, we not only wish to open this area to private sector, but to expose private enterprise to some external competition. Protection will be given but partially, through tariffs, rather than absolutely, through import bans.

EXPORTS, EMPLOYMENT

For exports and employment, we will have to look elsewhere. The engineering industries are capital-intensive and will not absorb much labour directly. With the vigorous mechanization drive envisaged for agriculture to raise productivity, there will be insufficient scope for employment expansion in agriculture either. Under these circumstances, agro-based and small-scale industrial exports, becomes the answer.

The advantages of this approach are more than one. First, being labour-intensive by nature, it will promote employment. Second, the expected productivity gains in agriculture which are likely to emerge through the measures I have indicated earlier and through accelerated mechanization made possible by import substitution in engineering goods, will yield agricultural surplus of no mean size. Export-oriented industrialisation will be the way to utilize these surpluses. Third, and the most obvious, is the acceleration of exports, with relatively smaller domestic resource cost. Fourth, since these industries will be located to a substantial extent in rural areas and proximate towns, especially with the proposed expansion of rural infrastructure, it will be possible to contain rural-urban migration and thus make a decisive dent into the monstrosity of urban sprawl.

Export-led growth through the small scale industry route has these advantages but also confronts some problems. To enter and retain markets abroad, let alone expand sales with time, and to receive a good price requires considerable know-how and up-to-date information of popular designs and changing fashions. Besides, exporters who pay well demand rigorous quality standards, dependable suppliers who meet time schedules and the capability to meet large orders. How should one combine the virtues of small scale production with the demands of importers is a problem but one that can be solved by instituting appropriate designing, efficiently organised marketing through export houses, and adequate lines of credit.

I must re-emphasise the fact that the Sixth Plan will place primary reliance on private sector for the achievement of its industrial objectives. While there is no question of government being in the export expansion industries, the doors will also be open to the private sector in all the import-substituting engineering industries. As far as possible, there will be no discrimination between the public and private sectors. Indeed, the public sector industries have already been taken off the back of the public budget. We do not envisage any significant expansion of public sector industries in the Sixth Plan. The private sector must step forward to make up the new opportunities.

PUBLIC, PRIVATE SECTORS

Let me take up here a question that has plagued our national economic debates and which must be faced quite realistically. There are advocates of both public and private sector in this country. Each side can come with plausible arguments. And yet the fact remains that this is basically a non-debate and a non-issue. There should be no question of any antagonism between public and private sectors whether in industry or in agriculture, construction, education, health, services, trade or any other field. The two sectors must co-exist within their broadly defined roles. As I see it, public sector has the role of a catalyst. It must create the infrastructure that is needed for private initiative to materialize. Unfortunately both the physical infrastructure of electricity, gas, water, telephones etc. and the social infrastructure are inadequate today. We must give an extremely high priority in the Sixth Plan to removing the present and future physical and social infrastructure bottlenecks. The public sector must also reserve the right to enter where private sector is hesitant to come in because of the large size of the investment, or new technology, or uncertain markets. But in all these cases, the public sector is an investor of last resort when all other avenues of attracting private initiative have been exhausted. Even in these cases, the public sector will welcome and invite the active participation of the private sector.

The truth is that public and private sectors will have to learn to live together in a spirit of co-operation within the framework that we are developing in the Sixth Plan. Each sector can borrow some virtue from the other.

The public sector will do well to learn from the dynamism of the private sector. And the private sector will do well to embrace the social conscience of the public sector. In the economic future towards which most developing countries are heading, it is my own belief that the present sharp distinctions between public and private sectors, will tend to disappear and they will increasingly work in close co-operation and harmony rather than be blocked in a mortal and fruitless struggle.

ECONOMIC CONTROLS

I also believe that it is necessary to keep economic controls and regulations to the minimum necessary for good economic management. We must place our reliance on those policy controls which give appropriate signals and incentives to the economy and gradually eliminate all those detailed administrative controls which leave a large element of discretion with the administrators and which frustrate creative enterprise in the system. Our economic system has tremendous potential if we only let it breathe a little. I have a feeling that we stand today on the threshold of a major liberation of our private initiative and enterprise from unnecessary controls and regulations. But let me also added that private sector, when freed from controls, should not run to the government for rescue each time its enterprises get into trouble. If the private sector would like to be free to live by the logic of the market, it must also be prepared to die by the logic of the market.

Let me turn now to another area of urgent concern which has received limited attention in the past. This is the field of science and technology. I believe that we, as a nation, should feel ashamed of ourselves for having spent only 0.1 to 0.2 per cent of our GNP on research and development when other developing countries have spent about one per cent of GNP or more. It is a national embarrassment today that we have so few scientific research institutions of excellence. We have such a limited number of capable scientists in the country.

We have extended only a tattered financial umbrella over technological advances which were critical for the future of our development. This is not only true of science and technology. It is also true of education and health. In health, we are spending one-fifth as much as other poor developing countries at our stage of development, in education about one-sixth as much. Let me state my own convictions quite frankly. We cannot build our economic future on a largely uneducated, poorly-trained population, which is also in poor physical health. A quantum leap is necessary in all these sectors in the Sixth Plan, for a development structure raised on such weak foundations will neither prosper nor last.

EDUCATION

But this is not merely a question of throwing more resources at these problems. It demands a rethinking on the part of the entire nation. We must decide today what kind of education system we are fostering and whether it is in tune with national priorities. Should we, for instance, devote most of our national resources to primary educatin, down-grading colleges and universities? Should we forget about adult literacy campaigns and try instead to catch the new generation in the primary school age group? Should we denationalize our schools and bring in more private initiative? Should we let the local bodies build primary schools, particularly in the rural areas? Should we spread a network of artisan schools all over the country to train intermediate skills needed within the country and in the Gulf markets? Should we focus on improving existing colleges and universities and put a stop to mushrooming new ones? Should we try to get at least one or two departments of excellence, even privately endowed at each university than try to diffuse our scarce resources and energies in improving every discipline and every department which may prove to be impossible in any case? Should we also set up one or two private universities, privately endowed, with entirely different salary structures and academic standards, to set an example and competition for the public universities? These and many other questions should trouble our collective national mind in the coming debate.

I request you all to focus on them.

There are similar questions in the field of health, which have been articulated in the new national health policy recently announced by the government. Even more urgent questions await us in the field of technology. What kind of scientific research institutions should we support? What concrete programme should be developed, what research priorities adopted, what new initiatives taken? Do we, for example, need more institutions focused on applied research like water-logging and salinity, better on-farm water management, indigenous building research, rural energy and other such issues for which the nation has to find its own answers rather than to keep relying on imported knowledge or foreign consultants?

I believe we are only on the threshold of such a national debate. I am convinced that in all these sectors we may have to increase the level of expenditure by about three to four times over the next plan period. We are fully prepared to accord the necessary priority to these neglected concerns in the Sixth Plan but the issue I just referred to, along with other organizational and institutional issues, are going to be decisive for the success of any such programme.

PUBLIC SERVICES

Another issue we must debate is the inadequate public services in many fields: for example city bus transport, urban and rural water supply and low income housing. Many of these services are breaking down under the pressure of population growth and influx of people into the urban areas. We need a visible improvement in these services in the Sixth Plan. We have been debating among ourselves in the Planning Commission various technical proposals and programmes to arrange such an improvement but let me mention here one issue which comes back again and again to haunt us in all our internal debates. That is the fundamental question of who is going to pay for expanded and better services. At present, many of our services are running at a tremendous public subsidy.

In education and health, the subsidy is above 95 per cent, in city transport and water supply, there is also a very high subsidy. Since tax resources are always limited and subject to so many competing claims, there cannot be adequate provision for these social services and after sometime they begin to deteriorate. Unless the direct beneficiaries from these services are prepared to pay an increasing share of their maintenance, it is going to be impossible either to expand them or to improve them over time. We believe that a very strong case exists today for the introduction of user charges in all our public services.

In fact, failure to institute cost recovery in these services leads to poor maintenance of assets and denial of funds for future investment to satisfy expanding needs.

If the user does not pay, he or she enjoys an un-merited subsidy, while the society as a whole suffers either by paying taxes that are not recovered from the users or by suffering in the form of deteriorating quality of services. Furthermore, the development programme is increasingly reduced in time to a rehabilitation and reconstruction programme rather than one creating new assets.

SUBSIDIES

We all realise that the introduction or enhancement of user charges to reduce government subsidies over time is a very unpleasant exercise, both economically and politically. But I see no escape from facing up to this national dilemma. Either the users pay, or the whole society pays, or the services are poor and disappear over time. I do hope that in your coming debate you will frankly address this issue and advise us how best we can tackle it during the Sixth Plan period.

There are many other issues that I could have touched upon from national resources to foreign assistance, from dependency to self-reliance, from nutrition to population planning. All these are urgent concerns on which there is an intensive dialogue going on in the context of the Sixth Plan preparation but there is hardly any time to cover every aspect of the debate here. That is why I have been deliberately selective. I am sure that in your deliberations many more issues will come up which I have not even mentioned. I can assure you that we shall look forward to this debate and to its major conclusions. Many of my staff members from the Planning Commission will be participating in your deliberations and learning from it. And I hope that this debate will spread outside these halls, to farms and factories, to schools and streets, to every corner of this country, because without involving the entire nation we cannot have a representative plan.

CONCLUSION

Let me add a final thought. Development has been defined in many ways. Many scholars have spent their lives researching its true meaning and content. To me, the message of development is simple. It is reflected in the happiness of a rural family whose home is suddenly brightened by electricity. It is mirrored in the faces of those children who for once get an opportunity to lead a healthy and educated life. It is expressed in the relief of a simple farmer who no longer has to bend down to drink polluted water from a dirty pond. It is measured by the full reward of an honest day's labour.

I have often been asked, what are my yardsticks to measure economic progress. My yardsticks are not very sophisticated, they are simple. I believe that if even a single child cries in the middle of the night for want of milk or food, then in some personal way our development planning has failed. We all have failed. For a plan must have a soul. It must have a human dimension. It must be rooted in the economic needs and cultural values of a society.

I have talked today, therefore, about national choices, without touching upon GNP growth rates, saving and investment targets, balance of payments projections and many esoteric numbers. They are necessary no doubt. They bring, in fact, real joy and comfort to many planners. But they are essentially means. They are not the end of development. Far too often, we have lost this distinction.

We shall judge the impact of the next plan, therefore, in terms of its impact on family incomes, employment, social services and basic needs. I hope you will not forget this in the heat of your national debate on the new socio-economic order. Your real judges site outside this hall. Not many of them are here. We need to address them, not only ourselves. We need to listen to them, not only to each other.

In the final analysis, a plan must mirror the aspirations of a nation. It may not be possible to accommodate everything that every one desires within a five-year period. But at least the choices must be debated objectively and honestly. When it really matters, development will be judged not by the planning commission or by the government or by the World Bank or by the intellectuals of this country, it will be judged by the people. I am conscious of that responsibility. It is in that spirit that I would like to debate these national issues in all possible national forums in the next six months and I hope that I shall have your full support in this national endeavour.—APP.

NDP LEADER HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

Karmal Government Recognition

Karachi JASARAT in Urdu 21 Sep 82 p 2

[Article: "Haji Bilore Advises: 'The Government Should Recognize the Karmal Government'"]

> [Text] This news item was suppressed on the advice of the police, but was published by a local contemporary on Monday. The item is presented here for the consideration of JASARAT's readers.

Karachi, 20 September (Staff Reporter): Haji Ghulam Ahmed Bilore, the secretary general of the defunct National Democratic Party [NDP], pressed the Government of Pakistan to recognize the present Babrak Karmal government in Afghanistan, and instead of indirect talks, start direct negotiations with the Afghan rulers. "Solutions will be forthcoming only when direct negotiations are held," he said while addressing a press conference the other day at the local press club. He said, "Today the army is not being sent to any area of the country. In the past, when the army was sent to Baluchistan we suffered violence and injustice. Even so, for the sake of the country's interests, we are allied with the People's party." Mr Bilore said, "If instead of a military junta, the country was being run by a political administration, Russia would not have come out of Tashkent and Samarkand and reached Turkhom near our borders. Russia's presence on our borders is the result of our government's mistakes." In answer to a question, he explained, "Changes have occurred in Afghanistan that our government refuses to recognize." He said, "A government that is itself 'de facto' is not taking a correct position when it refuses to recognize another de facto government. In the entire area, from Bangladesh to Afghanistan, only Indira Gandhi's government is an elected democratic government. There would have been some justification if Indira Gandhi's government had adopted this attitude. But Indira Gandhi did not do so. If we had recognized Afghanistan, Russia would not have reached Turkhom." Bilore said, "A great power 10,000 miles away does not want supporters of Russia to stay in power in Afghanistan. This great power has used every means possible to bring about a change in Afghanistan. What this great power is doing and what the Pakistanis are doing is no secret. We are no longer a buffer state, we are now a sandwich state. The Russians will not tolerate having their friends in Afghanistan suffer a setback while a great power, 10,000 miles away, establishes its hegemony over a country near Russian borders." He said, "There is only one way of dealing with the present situation, namely, the country should be returned to the statesmen. Perhaps then it will be saved, because the course we have chosen at present is headed toward disaster." Bilore, said, "Sindh and Baluchistan are not part of the government; if the present administration stays in office, the people of Sindh and Baluchistan will be forced to conclude that either they will have to live as slaves or look in a certain direction to obtain their rights and freedoms." He said, "Russia's path will not be blocked by invoking the name of Islam. The Russian shortcomings enumerated in this country, exist here as well. There may not be any democratic freedom in Russia, but they have bread, clothing, educational and medical facilities. The people of the frontier areas do not think that Russia's arrival would be bad. It would not give us all the things we are deprived of, but we will get food, clothing and other such items." In answer to a question regarding the Afghan refugees, Mr Bilore said, "It is a historical fact that all those who came here from the Khyber Pass have stayed. Today everyone is giving aid to the refugees from Afghanistan, but tomorrow this aid will stop and these people will become a burden on our economy." He agreed that subversive elements could enter the country in the guise of refugees and said, "If we can create trouble, so can others." He added, "In the past, the people took to the streets to show their opposition to a party and to an individual. Today, the question is, if the people take to the streets, whom will they be opposing?" He said, "We think that under the present conditions, the people are not opposed to Zia-ul Haq, but to the military government. When a nation fights against its own army, then nothing short of divine intervention can save it." He added, " if political activists think this way, then the military also should think along the same lines, before the people take to the streets. It is not enough to set up an advisory council. One hears of Islam day and night, but Zakat [religious tax] is deducted from bank interest." He said, "If these people had brought Islam to the country, our reaction would have been, hail and welcome. But they are not establishing Islam." Haji Bilore said, "Martial law supersedes Islam in this country. Those who sit in the lap of martial law and talk of Islam and Pakistan's objective are the enemies of both. They give Islam a bad name. They should praise martial law and not invoke Islam." He said, "Those who deny God and his prophet have the right to express their views in this country, but the opponents of political views are not allowed the right to life. Every political school of thought should have the freedom to express its views." He added, "A political murder was committed here the other day, and we condemn it. But we are not ready to accept that this was a martyrdom for Islam. We condemn Bhopali's murder, but we do not accept that he was martyred for the sake of Islam. He did not die for Islam but for martial law; for Zia-ul Haq. Under the present system of government, whoever dies to give permanence and supremacy to martial law will be a martyr for the cause of martial law. The matter should not be presented in a false light." Mr Bilore said, "Ever since the creation of Pakistan, we have been fighting for fundamental rights. We do not wish to be separate from Pakistan. Is not Pakistan our country? But we are still accused of treason. Under every administration, there have been complaints of the lack of a free judiciary, of free administration, a free press and free parliament. The time for words is past; political activity should be allowed in the country because only the opposition can show the correct course to the rulers. No one's life, property, or honor are safe in the country today." In answer to a question, he replied, "The party has taken no decision about allowing the Biharis of Bangladesh to come to Pakistan. However, if everyone is allowed into Pakistan, then the hundred million Muslims of India who are tired of mistreatment by the Hindus should also be allowed to immigrate to Pakistan." In answer to a question referring to a difference between the Biharis of Bangladesh and the Muslims of India, he agreed that there was a difference, but that the party had not given consideration to the matter. He said that ideologically, Pakistan was the country of all the Muslims of the world.

Editorial Criticism

[Editorial: "This Is Open Treason."]

[Text] In a press conference held at the press club the other day, the proceedings of which we were prohibited under government orders from publishing, Mr Ghulam Ahmed Bilore, the acting secretary general of the defunct NDP [National Democratic Party], a member of the Movement for the Restoration of Democracy, openly advocated treason. We are surprised that the officials of the Information Agency thought it necessary to stop the publication of the press conference, but failed to enquire whether whatever laws there are in the country allow individuals to invite foreign powers into their own country. If the law does not allow such an action, what legal measures should then be taken toward an individual who issues such an invitation to foreign occupation? The government has not said yet what it has done toward fulfilling its responsibilities in this regard.

According to reports published by our colleague newspapers, Mr Ghulam Ahmed Bilore claimed in his press conference that the people of the frontier areas hold the view that it would not be a bad thing if Russia took over. They might not gain democratic rights, but they would at least get food to eat and clothes to wear. In the press conference, Bilore also demanded that communism and socialism should be given the freedom of propaganda; that Russia could not be stopped with shouts of Islam. He also proposed that our government should recognize whatever has taken place in Afghanistan; that one should not listen to a country 10,000 miles away.

Consider this first of all. What direct connection is there between Pakistan's policy and what Ghulam Ahmed Bilore has said? Is he a Pakistani politician or a Russian agent? Another noteworthy matter is that the individual who is inviting Russian occupation of Pakistan and who does not consider becoming the slave of Russia such a bad thing is the secretary general of the party whose leaders claim that they fought the war of freedom and drove out the British. These self-made heroes of freedom now want to give the country which is free of the British to the Russians. Is not this open treason? And will silence about open treason be called tolerance and diplomacy or surrender to traitors? In answer to a question regarding the recognition of the government of Afghanistan, this same party's Begum Naseen Wali Khan said that she did not look beyond her country, that the government had the right to recognize or not any other government; and that her party had not decided yet about the recognition of the Karmal government. This same party's secretary general sees everything beyond the country and, concerning a matter about which Naseem Wali Khan said the party had made no decision, Ghulam Ahmed Bilore demands that all that occurred in Afghanistan should be accepted. How should these contradictory statements be interpreted? Is Naseem Wali Khan right or is the party's secretary general? We ask Sardar Sherbaz Mazari, who is a great patriot, if he supports the traitorous views of this party's secretary general. If he does not, then why does he accept the right of Bilore to be the secretary general and to express such views? Sardar Mazari should answer this question.

Ghulam Ahmed Bilore's statement cannot be explained away. What he said in an open press conference was heard and seen by dozens of open ears and open eyes. We await the reaction of both the government and the party leader Sardar Sherbaz Mazari to Bilore's traitorous views.

This individual who is demanding propaganda freedom for communism and socialism should first demand the freedom of advocacy for Islam in the Soviet Union. Ghulam Ahmed Bilore's reasoning is that what happened in Afghanistan should be recognized, and no attention should be paid to what a country 10,000 miles away wants; as though the problem is not one of Afghanistan's Muslims nor of the 3 million refugees who have come to Pakistan; and that the decision not to recognize the Karmal government was taken only to please the United States. Such reasoning belongs only to a Russian agent, and not to a spokesman for Muslims.

DISAPPOINTING PERFORMANCE OF SIND IN THE FIFTH PLAN DISCUSSED

[Text] The disclosure that most of the Fifth Five-Year Plan targets for the province of Sind could not be achieved mainly due to lack of funds, is really disappointing. The 10 to 50 per cent achievement of targets in various sectors is surely a dismal performance. This will also create doubts in the minds of the thinking people about the working of the entire planning structure. Couldn't our planners visualise the resource position when the plans were being made? Was it not possible for them to foresee the difficulties which might arise in the implementation of the plan including the price escalation during the plan period? Were the targets too ambitious to be achieved? These are some of the questions which crop up when an assessment of implementation of the plan is made.

Sind is the second largest province of the country population-wise. Economically, it may be termed the most advanced region of the country only because of the fact that Karachi, the only sea-port and the most industrialised city, is a part of Sind. As such the province's contribution to the national revenues as well as to the national income, is the highest. However, the interior of the province is as backward as any backward region of the country. This calls for preferential treatment of the interior of Sind in the overall development strategy of the country. But, on the contrary, only because of the affluence of one city, the interior is discriminated against in the development strategy. A greater share of the province's resources need to be earmarked for improving the social sector, namely, health and education. The achievement in these two sectors has been most disappointing. According to the report published in our yesterday's issue, only 40 per cent of the target fixed for health services could be achieved in the plan period, while the performance in the education sector has been still less satisfactory. In this sector, the position regarding enrolment at primary level further deteriorated as it was recorded at 10 to 30 per cent in various districts of the province. As a result, additional pressures built up in the colleges and schools in the urban areas. It is, indeed, regrettable, that health and education sectors even in the national development programme, never received the importance they deserved. The planners treated them as non-productive sectors forgetting that the influence of these two non-productive sectors over the productive sectors is immense. For the efficient and speedy performance of the productive sector, the improvement in these two sectors is imperative. No plan, however realistic it may be, can succeed unless education and health sectors make good progress. This is not anything which one should tell the planners to do. It is as obvious as anything. A better educated and healthy person is capable of putting the scarce available resources to maximum use. Hence, for the maximum and better harnessing of these resources, the quality of the human resource in the country has got to be improved. However, it is heartening to see that in the next Five-Year Plan these sectors are being treated on priority basis and larger allocations are being made for their development. It will not be out place to note here that despite financial constraints Sind Health Department is making the best possible use of the resources at its disposal. Some of the measures taken in Sind to enlarge the scope of medical facilities are good examples for other provinces to follow.

According to our report, Sind was allocated a sum of Rs. 900 million for the implementation of 5th Five-Year Plan. As against this, it received only Rs. 4000 million. These allocations were made five years back. During the five years the plan was to be executed, cost escalation has been immense. This means that the actual receipts fell much shorter than the original allocation. How could it, then, be expected to achieve all the targets fixed in the plan? The shortfall was inevitable.

As regards other provinces, we feel, the situation would not be very much different from that of Sind. It is time that a proper assessment of the performance of the 5th Plan was made. The Sixth Plan is to be launched in July next. But before that a survey of the achievements of the Fifth Plan is imperative. It will help in identifying the shortcomings and difficulties which might arise in future and in planning how to overcome them. If the dismal performance of Sind is to be taken as an indicator, we will have to be very cautious in fixing the next plan targets and making allocations. It is to be hoped that the Fifth Five-Year Plan performance would not be repeated during the Sixth Five-Year Plan.

BETTER TRAINING FOR POLICE, RAPPORT WITH PEOPLE RECOMMENDED

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 14 Oct 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Drive Against Terrorism"]

[Text] Opening the general debate on the recent spate of terrorism in the country in Majlis-i-Shoora, Federal Interior Minister Mahmood A. Haroon assured that the Government was fully awake to the situation and was taking steps for the security of the common citizen. He admitted that because of their superior arms the saboteurs had been able to carry out acts of sabotage initially, but said they had now been contained by employing trained anti-terrorist squads and supplying better equipment to police. The Interior Minister said that to deal with disruptive elements on a firm, long-term basis President Zia-ul-Haq had recently held a high-level meeting, participated in by the four Provincial Governors, Ministers and Inspectors-General of Police, at which some important decisions were taken. One of them was to organise proper training of police personnel in the light of the Mitha Commission recommendations on the subject. The force is also being supplied with better weapons and transport equipment. By now over 150 anti-terrorist personnel have been trained and sent to the Provinces for duty. A number of police officers are also being sent abroad for anti-terrorist training. At the same time special cells have been formed in the Provinces to collect information about disruptionists and their nefarious designs. Mobile and foot police patrols have been ordered to be on 24-hour duty on the highways, and the Provincial Governments have been asked to improve forensic laboratories and maintain dog squads to trace out criminals. Mr. Mahmood Haroon said that Martial Law Regulation No. 53, recently promulgated, showed how determined the Government was in tackling terrorist elements. He disclosed that the actions taken by the Government had already resulted in effective containment of terrorism. Some 650 terrorists had been rounded up, and about 95 cases were lying in various courts of the country. A large amount of deadly arms, including rocket launchers and mines, have been recovered and many of the saboteurs have already been convicted. The Minister also said that the culprits in the Zahoor Elahi case had been apprehended and the matter was now in the Military Court, while police had made heartening progress in bringing the murderers of Zahurul Hasan Bhopali to book.

Thirty-five members participated in the debate on terrorism, and most of them agreed that the handful of elements engaged in terrorist activities had no support among the masses and were mere tools in the hands of their foreign masters. They were of the view that the principal objective before the disruptionists and saboteurs was not political but the subversion of efforts for Islamisation of society currently under way in the country. The consensus was that the rash of terrorist activities were part of the wider conspiracy hatched by anti-Islamic forces to destabilise Muslim countries and stop their march towards their ideological goal. The disruptive activities were in the nature of a covert war against Pakistan and Islam so that the country, achieved in the name of Islam, could be prevented from fulfilling its ideological promise and made to live under an alien system. But all the speakers who took part in the discussion were unanimous in their opinion that such a conspiracy would never succeed. In this connection they appealed to the people to co-operate with the Government in tackling the enemies of Islam and Pakistan and maintaining peace and order in the country. The point was also raised by the President in his address to the Majlis-i-Shoora and he had rightly observed that if the people provided timely information about the movement and designs of the saboteurs, it would be much easier for the authorities to do their duty. Towards this end it is necessary that local authorities everywhere should be instructed to establish closer rapport with the people in their areas with a view to keeping an eye on subversive elements. Police should also be asked to stop playing the bully and behave properly with the common man in order to gain his confidence. A community in which the citizens and the law enforcing agencies understand each other and work hand in hand leaves little room for illegal and anti-State activities.

ISSUES IN PROPOSED NEW LABOR POLICY

[Editorial: "New Labour Policy"]

[Text] Federal Minister for Labour Ghulam Dastgir Khan has stated that the new labour policy being prepared by his ministry will embody the consensus of the Labour Commission comprising 15 representatives each of employers and workers. This consensus has been obtained from the Commission in the form of recommendations arrived at unanimously by its members. The Commission is agreed over the demand that the new labour policy should be based on the Islamic principles of social justice and should bring about an atmosphere of complete discipline, friendship, co-operation and mutual understanding between the employer and the worker to accelerate production and achieve economic stability and progress. It has also countenanced all the internationally accepted safeguards for the protection of the workers' rights, including the right of collective bargaining and association, and provides for institutional structures that minimise the innate contradictions that exist between the capitalist and the worker. While accepting the irreducible conditions of discipline and productivity in the favour of the former, the Commission insists on the institutionalisation of measures that serve to redress the grievances of the latter, offer him proper security of service and provide him opportunities of better employment on merit after in-service training. That all these recommendations have emanated from a consensus of the two parties concerned is an earnest of the workability of the new labour policy.

Only 15 per cent of Pakistan's total labour force is employed in manufacture. The large-scale industry which contributes up to 15 per cent of the GDP absorbs only 2 per cent of the labour force while the medium and small-scale industry employs the rest of the workers. Up to 70 per cent of the national industry is in the State sector. This complexion of the sector was brought about by the economic doctrine adopted by the previous regime which nationalised 32 large units and 10 major industries followed by banking, life insurance, shipping, oil distribution and vegetable oil. In the years that followed the country's growth fell from the annual rate of 12 per cent before 1965 to 3 per cent by the mid-seventies. The private sector, the backbone of the free-market and mixed economies, was literally wiped out and today its growth rate is reluctant at 1.3 per cent. The overwhelmingly predominant State sector is welfare-oriented and lacks the private entrepreneur's drive for profits and the pressures of insolvency have to be endured by the workers. Now that the Government is encouraging the private sector to come into its own, the new labour policy must reflect a healthy tension of worker-employer interests. The entrepreneur responds to incentives of profits alone and cannot be persuaded to invest in an enterprise that is excessively skewed in favour of the workers, that is, where workers' rights are not pegged to the profitability of the enterprise. The example of carpet making can be cited to highlight a situation where labour laws have inhibited the setting up of factories and driven the exporter to rely on the cottage industry. As a result, Pakistan has been unable to meet the orders for carpets coming from a discriminating European market. The Government has therefore increased the level of incentives in the private sector by allowing industries requiring investments of up to Rs. 20 million to be set up without formal permission. For units to be set up in backward areas there is a tax holiday and exemption from import duty on the machinery; and interest on industrial loans has been brought down from 12.5 per cent to 11 per cent. Labour-intensive textile mills, most of which have become 'sick' over the past decade, are being helped back into proper functioning and sugar mills are exempted from central excise duty on excess production. All these measures are clearly favourable to the investor requiring the fillip of profits but the underlying assumption is that industries in the private sector will absorb more labour and strengthen the supply side of the labour market. The labour policy has to be weighted in favour of the worker whose rights have been recognised by the march of world civilisation and are enshrined in the charters of such international organisations as the ILO. By its very nature the instinct for profits is without bounds and private enterprise can be economically useful only under certain constraints. The guarantee of the workers' rights provides just such a constraint.

ASPECTS OF SOCIAL REFORM CAMPAIGN DISCUSSED

[Editorial: "Islah-i-Muashra"]

[Text] The report of the Cabinet Committee for Islah-i-Muashra comprises both short and long-term measures for the reform of society. The immediate steps, which are aimed at curbing the trend towards moral degradation, provide an eloquent commentary on the state of our consciousness of the problems that strike at the very root of our social structure. Many of the recommendations are just pleas for applying existing laws to combat the growing evils of ostentation and wastefulness that have lately become a hallmark of our society. Who does not know that the Dowry and Bridal Act restricting individual presents to Rs. 100 and the marriage expenditure to Rs. 2,500 is violated with impunity by the richer sections of the population? Huge amounts are spent on large receptions, 'mehndi' and similarly wasteful ceremonies. The Islah-i-Muashra Committee has strongly pleaded that such thoughtless spending should be stopped with a firm hand and, instead, marriages should be solemnised in mosques in a simple manner. Its suggestion about taxing lavish marriage receptions in hotels is particularly useful. To improve the society's moral tone the Committee has recommended that not only should TV and films be made to adhere strictly to the existing code of ethics, but a campaign should be launched against vulgarity in public fairs, stage plays, the so-called mohalla libraries which purvey prurient literature and the 'bara' markets which act as a channel for the supply of obscene cassettes. The Committee has also advocated a ban on ballroom dancing, night clubs and discos—shabby imitations of the degenerate Western society. It is indeed an index of the rampant indiscipline in our midst that the Committee has had to recommend formation of queues and a ban on smoking in public places. These are simple rules but nobody bothers to observe them.

The Committee's recommendations to end corruption and bribery are unexceptionable. As a way to combat extravagance, a primary cause of illegal money-making, the Committee has proposed that the import of cars above 1600 c.c. and plots of more than 500 square meters should be banned. The Islah-i-Muashra body has reviewed in detail the working of the bureaucracy and outlined a series of measures to prevent civil servants from misusing their official position for self-aggrandisement These include declaration of assets by officials and their close scrutiny and periodic screening to weed out corrupt elements. A significant proposal made by the Committee relates to the rationalisation and publication of the perquisites enjoyed by the employees of autonomous bodies and nationalised commercial institutions. This would be a safeguard against the callous squandering of public money which is common in government and semi-government corporations. It has been recommended that only persons of proven integrity and honesty should be posted to such revenue-earning departments as Customs and Income Tax where a lot of leakage takes place. The Committee has also come out strongly for simplifying the criminal and civil procedure code and the law of evidence and improving the police department.

Keeping in view the long-term requirements of Islah-i-Muashra the Cabinet Committee has emphasised that the prevailing education system should be so reorientated that there is an increase in its ideological content. It has pointed out that the system as it works now is concerned only with production and pays little attention to character-building and ideological training. To correct the situation the Committee has recommended that knowledge of the basic teachings of the Holy Quran and Sunnah should be made compulsory for admission to the universities and professional colleges. For the implementation of its comprehensive set of recommendations, the Islah-i-Muashra Committee has proposed the formation of social reform bodies at the village, city and district levels, composed of persons of unchallenged probity of character, local notables, ulema, lawyers and public-spirited men. These committees, a body of dedicated social reformers will spearhead the movement for purging society of its myriad ills. The focus will be on the individual and popular participation so that the drive assumes the character of an all-embracing reform movement. Needless to say, in any such effort the role of the leaders, who in this case will be the members of the Islah-i-Muashra Committee, will be all-important and crucial. They must have a spotless personal and public record and only then can they be effective leaders of the campaign they will head. No less important is the fact that in the fight against corruption and social evils, the member of the committees should furnish personal examples for the rest of the community to follow. The success of the social revolution we are all so hopefully looking forward to will ultimately depend upon the personal conduct and practice of the reformers themselves. As we have seen in the past, rhetoric alone cannot bring any change.

ELECTORAL ROLLS UPDATING TO END

Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 18 Oct 82 p 10

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Oct. 17: The Election Commission of Pakistan today issued the following Press note:

A week is left when the proceedings to update the electoral rolls would culminate on October 24, 1982. It is reiterated that all those persons who are eligible to become voters but have not so far been enrolled should apply for the inclusion of their names in the electoral rolls.

The electoral rolls are being complemented by including fresh names of those who are eligible to become voters, by deleting the names of those who have expired or are disqualified to remain on the rolls and by incorporating corrections of particulars relating to certain names error of which is pointed out and accepted by the Registration Officer.

Separate forms — separate for the Muslims and the non-Muslims — are prescribed for inclusion, deletion and correction of entries in the rolls. These forms are available with the Registration Officers/Assistant Registration Officers in large quantities for distribution to the intending applicants free of cost.

Every application for the inclusion of a name in the electoral roll of an electoral area should be filed either in person or through an authorised agent with the Registration Officer or Assistant Registration Officer concerned. Every application for the deletion of an existing entry and an application for the correction of any particulars in the existing rolls should be lodged with the Registration Officer or Assistant Registration Officer concerned by the applicant in person and not through an agent. Applications for additions, deletions or corrections will not be entertained if filed in bulk by an individual. Applications for additions or deletions or corrections can also be sent by registered post to the Registration Officer concerned. In case applications are filed on plain paper, full particulars should be given as in the forms.

The Election Commission earnestly desires that the name of every citizen who is qualified for enrolment as a voter should be entered in the voters' list and that the redundant entries should be deleted and incorrect ones corrected so that the electoral rolls are available in as accurate a form as possible.—

OFFICIAL VIEWS BALUCHISTAN DEVELOPMENT

GF211535 Karachi DAWN in English 18 Oct 82 p 4

[Excerpts] Quetta, 17 Oct--Doctor Mehbubul Haq, the deputy chairman of planning commission, has said that Baluchistan has tremendous potentials in agriculture and minerals.

Talking to newsmen on arrival here yesterday, Dr Haq said these potentials, if properly exploited, promised rapid development of the province, and they would also assist in the growth of the national economy.

He said the purpose of his and commission's team's visit to Baluchistan was to exchange views with the provincial government on its priorities and thinking on the sixth plan with regard to Baluchistan.

He said the sixth plan would be launched according to schedule in July next. Talks were being held in this respect, and the framework of the plan would be out by January next.

He said the federal government was taking keen interest in increasing the tempo of development in Baluchistan and was giving huge amounts for the province. This year a record amount of Rs 151 crore was being spent on the development activities.

He said the commission's team would make frequent visits to Baluchistan and would hold detailed discussions on various aspects of development, and then draw up realistic plan for the development of the province.

"We have some priorities, basically opening the rural areas, building up agricultural exports, improving infrastructure, expanding social services, development of industries, specially small industries and provision of training facilities," Dr Haq said.

In the past, he said, Baluchistan remained neglected to the extent that there had been one development project for every ten thousand people as against the national level of one project for every 5,001 people.

He said development work carried out at present included electrification of 250 villages, Baluchistan University, Bolan Medical College, completion of RCD highway and Loralai-Dera Ghazi Khan Road and tubewells resulting in three-time increase of fertility. A special programme of Rs. 86 crore had been undertaken, he stated.

Special attention, he said, would be given to the development of agriculture in Baluchistan in the 6th Five-Year Plan.

He said 20 per cent more land could be brought under cultivation, and the commission would hold discussion on ways and means. He hoped that agricultural exports could be built up by increasing the food and fruit crops for which there was market in the Middle East.

Dr Haq said that for the development in the next plan period areas would be identified in which concentrated development would be carried out. The areas are north and north-east of Quetta, Sibi, Pat Feader area, Kalat Valley and Mekran coast.

He said there were tremendous prospects for exploiting the subsoil water resources and due attention would be paid to it.

In the mining sector, he said, there were great potentials in exploration and exploitation of copper, iron ore and coal for which China and Canada have envinced keen interest. He said that economics of the development of copper and iron ore was also being worked out.

He gave an assurance that the private sector would be encouraged to invest in Baluchistan. Incentive would be provided to them by improving the infrastructure.

Replying to another question, he said he could not say at this stage about the size of the amount to be allocated for the development of Baluchistan during the next plan period. He, however, said that besides the country's own resources some of the foreign countries, including Kuwait, Canada, West Germany, Japan and Britain, were extending their assistance in the development of Baluchistan.

He said great attention was also being paid to the production policy, generating income and its distribution. He called for involvement of all the people and provision of greater employment opportunities, encouragement to small farmers and search for markets.

LOANS FOR FIVE PROJECTS APPROVED

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 7 Oct 82 p 3

[Text]

Pakistan Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation (PICIC) yesterday approved five industrial projects and sanctioned loans amounting to Rs 162.35 million including a foreign exchange component of Rs. 79.58 million.

Two units were sanctioned for the manufacture of formal dehyde| urea formaldehyde, an important synthetic resin used in the manufacture of plywood and particle chip-board, sport goods, enamel and paints, furniture, paper, leather, textiles etc. Each unit will have the capacity to produce 6,000 tons|year. One of the plants will be located at Hub chowki and the other at Sheikhupura. Total loans to these two projects amount to Rs. 32.52 million, including a foreign exchange of Rs. 22.75 million.

A modern sugar mill will be set up at Sahiwal having crushing capacity of 4,000 tons of sugarcane per day or 57,600 tons of white sugar|year. The mill is being financed through a consortium of PICIC, Bankers Equity, IDBP and ICP. The PICIC share of loan amounts to Rs. 55 million covering 21 per cent of total cost of the plant and machinery. The entire machinery will be locally fabricated.

A loan of Rs. 46.80 million (including Rs. 34.30 million in foreign currency) was sanctioned to an existing jute manufacturing unit at Karachi for balancing and expansion of their present facilities through addition of 2620 spindles and 90 looms together with related preparatory and finishing equipment.

The proposed expansion will increase jute manufacturing capacity from 10,000 tons to 16,000 tons|year.

Another project approved was for setting up a distillery alongside an existing sugar mills in Sargodha. The total loan sanctioned to this project amounts to Rs. 28.02 million of which, Rs. 22.53 million is in foreign exchange. The proposed plant will have the capacity to produce 9.0 million liters of industrial alcohol of 96 gallon per annum. The entire output of industrial alcohol will be exported in view of its increasing uses and rising world consumption.

TRAINING WORKSHOP ON POPULATION PROGRAMS OPENS

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 14 Oct 82 p 2

[Text] The Advisor to the President on Population, Dr. Attiya Inayatullah yesterday inaugurated a six-day managerial workshop for senior officers of population programme and said that the course was a vital activity for the success of the current population welfare plan 1981-84.

The workshop has been organised by the Population Welfare Training Institute (PWTI) in collaboration with the National Institute of Public Administration (NIPA).

The President's Advisor said that the course was designed to impart knowledge and skills considered essential for management of the programme in its present form.

Dr. Attiya Inayatullah traced in detail the history and background of population programmes in Pakistan and said that the current population welfare plan had taken due cognizance of the inter-relationship between development and facility dynamics without regarding any of the two as independent variables.

The primary objective of the plan was to inculcate a change in the behaviour of people leading to greater use of contraceptives and said that services from various mechanisms were accessible to every desirous couple in need of family planning, she added.

Referring to the group of participating population welfare officers, Dr. Attiya Inayatullah said that it consisted of qualified and experienced personnel and the activities envisaged in this course were aimed at enhancing their competence in management.

The purpose involving different categories of persons in this course was to develop an integrated approach, not from a purely theoretical stand point, but in terms of its ramifications in augmenting implementaiton capability.

She said that the trainees here will have particularly to play a crucial and pivotal role. As it has generally been stated that the officers of population welfare programme do not have adequate motivation and managerial leadership for the most challenging programme.

She was confident that after this course the commitment and the motivation of the group will find expression in their job performance so that the targets of the programme and larger objectives of the plan were achieved and even exceeded in future.

The workshop will conclude on Oct. 19.

MISUSE OF FUNDS FOR REFUGEES ALLEGED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 12 Oct 82 p 6

[Text] LAHORE, Oct. 11: The Muslim Students Federation has demanded an inquiry into the funds collected by various parties in the name of Afghan refugees.

Rana Tahir Mehmood, chief organiser of the federation, told 'The Muslim' that a student of Islamia College, Railway Road, had submitted an application to the Punjab Governor alleging that three professors of the college, Abdul Hamid Dar, Rana Abdul Hayee and Mohammad Aslam Opal, collected Rs.9,000 from the students and staff of the college for Afghan refugees which were to be presented to the government through a cheque but were never deposited.

He said the students had appealed to the Governor to hold an inquiry into the incident and to take severe action against the said Professors whom he allegedly had given the amount to a defunct political party..

Rana Tahir said the Governor had sent this application to the Education Secretary, Punjab who sent it to the District of Public Institution Colleges for a report. The DPI forwarded the application to the college principal for investigation.

The principal said in his report that Abdul Hamid Dar and others had collected the amount for Afghan refugees and were asked to deposit the money with the concerned authorities. On inquiry, it emerged that the amount was deposited with Hizb-o-Islami in the name of the college principal.

According to the principal, he had no knowledge of the amount in question . The principal sent this report to the DPI.

Rana Tahir Mehmood alleged that a defunct political party was polluting the peaceful atmosphere in the educational institutions through its students front, and the unarmed students were being tortured.

He said since there was ample proof of misuse of funds by certain elements, a high-level inquiry should be held by the authorities.

RESTRICTIONS ON FOREIGN TRAVEL CRITICIZED; 'NO OBJECTION CERTIFICATE' CALLED A CURSE

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 12 Oct 82 p 4

[Text]

IN a Press statement the Human Rights Society of Pakistan has criticised the authorities for not communicating any decision on its application seeking permission to participate in a three-day Human Rights Conference in New Delhi. The Vice President of the Society, Mrs. Mehnaz Rafi, has stated that the Society had received an invitation to participate in the Conference which it had submitted to the Ministry of Interior on 12th September, for clearance. However, almost a month later, the Society has not received any answer from the Ministry.

It is not for the first time that such complaints have been received from various quarters. In the past several teachers who were invited to participate in international seminars and conferences were subjected to the same treatment by the authorities. In most cases, the persons applying for permission to proceed abroad either do not receive any response from the concerned ministries or else, receive permission after the commencement of the conference. If the individual is lucky and the conference to which he is proceeding is for a duration of a week or more, he can still try to make it in time. However, in most cases such international conferences or seminars do not extend beyond three days. It is, therefore, not possible for the invitee to reach it in time for meaningful participation. Recently, a sports team from Islamabad which was proceeding abroad for participation in an international match was granted permission on the same day that the matches were scheduled to start. Because of this attitude of the authorities, Pakistan's representation at various international events goes by default. While in some cases participation may not be that crucial, in others, it seriously jeopardises our national interest.

Speaking of the present example, one can only say that if permission had been granted in time to the Human Rights Society to participate in the Conference, it would only have been a plus for the authorities since the Society would have been in a position to express Pakistan's point of view on the issues under consideration and also to challenge the allegations made against the government in the field of human rights by international bodies from time to time. Similarly, in the case of teachers who are invited to participate in important conferences, their representation would only lead to a better understanding of Pakistan's problems and position on various issues rather than detracting from its prestige.

In the past, the excuse usually advanced by the authorities for curtailment of foreign trips and refusal to grant NOC is that there are financial constraints. This may well be and while the authorities would be compelled to deny permission in certain instances it does not apply to all cases. Where the individual invited to participate either receives a ticket or is willing to bear their own expense, the rigid and short-sighted attitude of the authorities is not only incomprehensible but also damaging to its own interests. It would appear that the NOC has begun to be used as some kind of a weapon instead of merely streamlining the procedure for foreign trips.

The decision of the Government to liberalise availability of passport is a welcome step but it is only going to be useful for the common man when apart from simply providing him with a passport, the Government also liberalizes the rules and regulations pertaining to international travel. In this rapidly developing modern age an essential pre-requisite of intellectual development and advancement is a free-exchange of ideas and information which can be better facilitated if pointless and strangulating restrictions on external trips are lifted and the citizens of Pakistan are allowed to travel abroad freely. The present rules only serve to damage official interests and impart a needless sense of frustration and confinement to the nation.

'BUY PAKISTANI' SLOGAN VS. REALITIES DISCUSSED

Peshawar KHYBER MAIL in English 11 Oct 82 p 3

[Text] "Be Pakistani, buy Pakistan", is an attractive slogan though not perfectly original. It is but a stale copy of an Indian slogan: "Be Indian, buy Indian". The Indians have bought Indian for the simple reason that country closed its doors to unnecessary imports of consumer goods long ago. Either one had to buy what was Indian or go without it, especially luxury goods. We have on the other hand official imports which compete with local manufactures, non-official imports which are smuggled through the back-door and other imports which are sheer waste. An example of the latter is the much-criticised casettes of Indian films and music, either of them being much below the standard of the local films as well as music, but searched for and obtained at high prices because there is excess money in pockets and little control over the trade. It is absolutely no use hitting at the Bara markets, or condemning the youth of the country. The imports have already been paid for and the goods brought in. They are liable to simple wastage if they are not sold or used. The only way the rot can be stemmed is to put the embargo in practice at the source: the smuggling rackets. They flourished unchecked because of extensive corruption in the rank and file of those who are charged with the use of the ban on the trade. It is surprising that India has successfully combated the evil while we are still fumbling, and every time we make a move, there is something or the otehr which steps in our way. We read so much of the slogans in the press or hear or see them on the Television that it nauseates us, considering the enormous difference in our theory and practice. It is no use looking at moralising, because it has not effect on the people who indulge in these practices. Laws are made only to be flouted through corrupt means and there is no one who can find exceptions to the general rule. Whatever laws are there can be enough if they are rigidly implemented in matter as well as spirit. The only problem is how to ensure this implementation which is the biggest one for the Government to solve.

The reason why this demand for foreign goods has risen in the country are twofold. Firstly there is a good deal of excess money which goes around, not all of which is properly earned. Secondly, in the case of local goods available, the prices are high and the quality low. The manufacturers and traders complain that in most cases, the excise duties on imported raw material or parts is too high, and quite often the compartive scale of duty on the import of finished products is lower and their quality better. Our industry and trade is also based on high-profit standards. The result is that the locally manufactured goods are in less demand. Take, for example, electrical goods. The quality of the plugs, joints and wire is so low that many of these do not last very long, as also do the bulbs which are marked at powers which they are not compatible to. The consumer would argue it this way that if he buys imported product costing a little higher but lasting ten times the period of the indigenous goods, he has to make lesser investment and also escape the botheration of always running out to purchase replacements.

In another case, that of plastic goods, the duty on the raw material is of the nature of 250 per cent and if the proper quality goods are made out of it, the end market value with the retailers would be so high that nobody would buy them. As a result, fancy products but with an absolutely minimum of quality are produced, which do not last very long. Many of the products for domestic use, like buckets and so on, are in demand because the iron alternatives are too expensive. Having become a necessity rather than a luxury, it is a wonder why it has not yet been considered to produce our own plastic raw materials, for which, we are sure, the technology is not so complicated. We must be spending colossal sums in importing the plastic raw material which could be manufactured locally if a proper plant is set-up here and the base produced here. This could be done in many other directions where the raw materials are imported and are of a nature of half-manufactured materials. With the coming of the Pakistan Steel Mills on the stream, it may be quite possible for a variety of capital goods to be made for the purpose. A study of the total perspective provides us with a bewildering anarchy prevalent in the trading sector, and we wonder there has been no proper study of the whole gamut of the operations, especially with a view to preserving the largest quota of foreign exchange for the development of consumer goods, without being pressurised into making exceptions for the sake of vested interests which always like to continue in the old patterns of trading rather than getting into manufactures for the sake of indigenous self-sufficiency. If the public is denied certain luxuries for the time being for the sake of better days ahead, we are sure it would not complain.

ALLOWING PRIVATE COLLEGES RECOMMENDED

Karachi DAWN in English 18 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] THE plea to the Sind Government from some quarters to allow the establishment of private colleges in the province deserves a positive response. Why a decision on this issue is being delayed is not quite clear, especially when the Federal Government has already announced that the Provincial Governments are being directed to allow the private sector to set up colleges and the Sind and Baluchistan Governments are already reported to have taken measures in this respect. It is now quite obvious that the Government is unable to cope with the growing pressure on colleges from the increasing number of matriculates who pass out every year. In 1982, over 40,000 students passed their school leaving examination in Karachi — a rise of 54 per cent over the past five years. But the increase in the number of colleges in the same period has been only 7 per cent. True, the haphazard expansion of college education, especially if it is not related to the employment needs, is not at all desirable. Hence, we have on a number of occasions called upon the educationists and the Government to get down to the task of assessing the employment opportunities available in the city and then drawing up a plan for the diversification and expansion of higher education.

This will take some time. In the meantime it is important that the Government should proceed on the basis of some broad assumptions based on correct data and information. Thus, it needs no profound appraisal to reach the conclusion that colleges, especially institutions for teaching science, technology and commerce, are in great demand. Not only is the pressure for admission greater on these colleges; there is scope for further expansion in them in view of a general shortage of people qualified in these disciplines. Thus, the establishment of some science and commerce colleges and polytechnics can be taken to be urgently needed. Although, to provide education to the citizens is the primary responsibility of the Government, it is also evident that our Government with its low allocations for education is in no position to fulfil its responsibility. The alternative is that some of this responsibility should be shared by the private sector.

The permission to the private sector to open colleges should, however, not be construed as giving the green light to commercialisation of education. Private colleges, when they are allowed to be set up, should be strictly governed by the same rules and guidelines which operate for Government-run institutions, the only exception being that of finance. To be economically viable, they will either have to be given a grant by the Government or will have to be given permission to charge higher fees. But the fees to be charged as also the salary structure of the teachers must be strictly regulated by the Directorate of College Education. This department will also be expected to carry out periodic inspections to ensure that private colleges maintain the academic standards necessary to impart education at the degree level. It is important that these institutions serve as a means of self-employment for well-meaning people dedicated to the cause of education, so that they can fulfil a crying need of society without becoming instruments of extortion and commercialisation in the process.

MRD STATES CONDITIONS FOR JOINING ROUNDTABLE

Karachi DAWN in English 18 Oct 82 p 13

[Text]

LAHORE, Oct. 17: The MRD components would attend the round-table conference being arranged by Maulana Shah Ahmad Noorani of the defunct JUP provided each of the eight constituents was invited separately and a copy of the agenda was supplied in advance. This was stated by Rao Abdur Rashid, Coordination Secretary, MRD, Punjab, at a Press conference here this afternoon. Rao Rashid has received a communication to this effect from the Secretary-General, central MRD, Khwaja Khairudding.

He said if even one component was not invited, the entire MRD would boycott the conference.

He maintained that elections whould be acceptable to the MRD only if they were held under the 1973 Constitution and on the basis of one-peron-one-vote. The MRD believed that the present Government had no right to change the mode or rules of the elections. It should and could be left to the elected parliament.

He dispelled the impression that the parties or any party of the MRD had any contact with the Government. The only point on which there could be negotiations with the Government was restoration of democracy. The reports suggesting that there had been some contact with the Government was an attempt to confuse public opinion, he added.

Answering a question, he said the former West Pakistan Governor, Mr. Yusuf Haroon, who had called on a number of political leaders during his recent visit to Karachi had demanded elections and withdrawal of Martial Law.

He said that yesterday's meeting of the Punjab MRD had been attended by Mr. Hamid Sarfraz on behalf of the defunct Tehrik-i-Istiqlal, and Mr. Sarfraz would chair the meetings during his term as the convener.

Rao Rashid said that during his recent visit to Karachi he had met Begum Nusrat Bhutto and Mr. Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi and the latter had categorically denied that there was any move to cooperate with the Government or join any national government under Martial Law. These were just rumours floated by the interested quarters to mislead the public opinion, he added.

He said Begum Bhutto had also told him that the Goverment had taken as many as 52 days to inform her that a board of specialists should be set up to examine her before permission to go abroad for medical treatment could be given.

WOMEN LAWYERS PROTEST PROPOSED QAZI COURTS

Karachi DAWN in English 18 Oct 82 p 7

[Text]

A meeting of the Executive Council of the Pakistan Women Lawyers Association held under the chairmanship of Mrs Rashida Patel has protested against the poposed ordinance for the Establishment of Courts of Qazis and has strongly objected to the Qazi Courts proposed jurisdiction for deciding cases relating to Family Laws:

It pointed out that the Family Law Courts Act, 1964, had made procedures in Family cases simple and provided for reconciliation. The necessity was to increase the number of Family Courts and ensure that cases are heard from day to day for speedy justice, resolution passed by the association said.

It recommended to the Government of Sind that Section 21 of the Family Law Courts Act be deleted, as it is an unnecessary legal requirement to sent notice of decree of dissolution of marriage by a Family Court to the Chairman Panchayat Committee for proceedings under Section 7 of the Muslim Family Laws Ordinance, 1961.

"The Family Court having attempted reconciliation before and after recording evidence, there is no possibility of reconciliation after the decree is passed.

"Section 21 causes unnecessary harassment and hardship to women and confirmation of divorce is delayed for three to six months after decree for dissolution of marriage by the Family Court."

It recommended to the Government of Pakistan that clause 2 of Section 7 of the Muslim Family Laws Ordinance, 1961, be amended so that the wife to whom Talaq has been pronounced should also be entitled to file notice of Talaq before the Chairman Panchayat Committee. As much women face distress when Talaq pronounced by the husband is not intimated to the Chairman Panchyat Committee."

OVER ONE DOZEN APPLICATIONS FOR PRIVATE AIRLINE

Karachi DAWN in English 18 Oct 82 p 1

[Article by M. Ziauddin]

[Text] ISLAMABAD, Oct 17: The Government has so far received "over a dozen' applications for setting up an airline in the private sector.

This was disclosed here today by Maj-Gen (Retd) M. Rahim Khan, Secretary-General of Ministry of Defence and Chairman of the Pakistan International Airline Corporation (PIAC).

He, however, made it clear that so far the Government had not taken any firm decision in this regard and was still examining the various possibilities.

Gen Rahim Khan said further that the options before the Government included another airline in the public sector, floating a subsidiary of the PIA and a joint venture of PIA with a private party, besides allowing the establishment of a purely private airline.

He said the Government was also considering the possibility of expanding the existing facilities and operational capabilities of PIA as an alternative to establishing a separate airline.

Explaining the reasons for the delay in taking a firm decision in this regard, Maj-Gen Rahim Khan said that managing an airline was a highly sophisticated operation, and the Government, therefore, would like to examine the matter thoroughly before committing itself to one of the various options under consideration.

He said: "If at all a decision is taken to allow the establishment of an airline in the private sector, the Government would be obliged to grant permission to only those parties or party which have/has the requisite experience and know-how of running a commercial airline."

He once again stressed that the whole idea was still in the formative stage and details about the matter could only be worked out after a policy decision was taken by the Government in this regard.

CIVIL AVIATION AUTHORITY STARTS FUNCTIONING

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 21 Oct 82 p 8

[Text]

The proposed Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) has for all intents and purposes started working and its first Director General has also been appointed.

However, the ordinance in respect of setting up of the CAA is now being vetted by the Federal Law Ministry and will be promulgated within a few weeks. Thereafter the authority will formally start working.

This was disclosed in interview in Karachi yesterday by the Secretary General, Defence and Chairman PIAC, Maj.-Gen (retd) Rahim Khan.

He said the CAA will be fully autonomous and have powers to execute work on projects relating to development of airports in the country without going through the normal lengthy procedure.

He said the federal government would support the authority in execution of its development projects. During the current year, the Civil Aviation Department is getting Rs. 27 crore annually for its development projects. He, however, said that between Rs 50-60 crore were needed annually for development projects of airports.

Replying to a question, the Secretary General, Defence, denied that money realised from passengers as airport tax and landing charges realised from aircraft using airports was not being spent on development of airports. He said this was true until few years back." The amount now being provided by the government for the development of airports in the country was more than the revenue earned by the Department of Civil Aviation annually from airport tax and landing charges", he added.—PPI.

MORE FUNDS FOR AIRPORT DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 21 Oct 82 p 8

[Text]

The Airport Development Agency will get a shot in the arm from the next financial year with allocation for airport development project rising to approximately Rs. 60 crore from the annual allocation of about Rs. 20 crore.

The enhanced allocation will be reflected in the next Annual Development Programme and the level will be maintained over the next five years.

This was disclosed at the end of a high level meeting, held in Karachi yesterday under the chairmanship of Maj. Gen. (retd) M. Rahim Khan, Secretary General Defence, to consider emergency as well as long term measures to alleviate the present difficulties being faced by the air travellers in Pakistan and plan for the future growth in air traffic.

Giving details of the agency's development programme, an ADA spokesman said that major projects included a new airport at Karachi to be completed by 1985-86, new airports at Lahore and Islamabad and additional runway at Karachi, strengthening of existing runway at Faisalabad and extension or runways at Lahore and Islamabad.

Rebuilding of terminal two at Karachi airport with covered area of 1.11 lakh so feet is being taken up as a special project on an emergency basis and will be subsequently incorporated in the new airport project for Karachi.

The new terminal two will be ready for use by the end of next April.

It is learnt that increased availability of cement in the county had encouraged the agency to plan concrete runway in the country instead of the asphalt paved one or which bitumen had to be imported. The switch over to cement to pave runways would bring about considerable saving in foreign exchange as 10 new runways are planned to be laid for feeder air service within the next 5 years.

Later addressing the engineers and officials of ADA, Maj. Gen. (retd) M. Rahim Khan said that the agency should gear itself upto meet the growing competition from other agencies and not to depend on government patronage. It should be able to secure contracts on the basis of proficiency, competitive rates and the ability to complete a project within the target.

He assured the employees that no retrenchment was contemplate, but at the same time the present manpower strength should be fully utilised.

SEPARATE PLANNING CELL ESTABLISHED TO ENCOURAGE PRIVATE INVESTMENT

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 21 Oct 82 p 1

[Article by Babar Ayaz]

[Text] A private sector section has been established in the Planning Commission of Pakistan at Islamabad, it was learnt here yesterday.

Informed sources said that the private sector section has been established by the Planning Commission in line with the present Government's policy to encourage private investment.

They said that this section will prepare an indicative plan for the private sector besides the usual investment schedule.

They explained that the private sector indicative plan would be a part of the Sixth-Five-Year Plan. It would help the private sector in the selection of areas of investment.

The purpose of indicative plan the sources clarified, would not be to determine the course of investment and development for the private sector like the plans prepared for the public sector.

Besides indicative planning this section would keep constant liaison with the private sector so that their views could be accommodated while formulating plans concerning them.

The private sector section will conduct studies to identify the problems of and impediments in the way of private sector investments. It will also review the private investment scene periodically besides searching for new directions.

QUESTION OF WHEAT, SUGAR SURPLUSES DISCUSSED

Karachi BUSINESS RECORDER in English 7 Oct 82 p 2

[Text]

There is no denying the fact that Pakistan has not only become self-sufficient in wheat but has also entered the export market. This is, undoubtedly, an achievement for which the concerned authorities deserve to be complimented. Also, the weather is to be thanked for being clement. Autarky in wheat had eluded the country for quite some time, for which we had to pay a heavy price. Large scale imports of the commodity not only consumed a big chunk of our hard-earned and scarce foreign exchange but also had political repercussions. The need for becoming self-sufficient in respect of this crop which forms the staple diet of the people, was imperative. After assuming office in July 1977, the present regime made concerted efforts in this direction and over a period of two years, we were able to produce enough wheat to meet our requirements. A year later the production exceeded the requirements and this year we have entered the world wheat market.

Another achievement is the bumper production of sugar in which this country had remained deficient for long. The production of this commodity has also gone so high that we have started thinking of entering the export market. But for the production costs being so high, we would have been exporting sugar by now. Bumper sugarcane production supplemented by appropriate taxation policies, the country produced more than 1.2 million tons of sugar this year. After meeting the home demand, we have been left with a surplus of about four to five lakh tons. But our cost being as much as 430 dollars per ton against the international price of 200 dollars per ton, it has become impossible to sell sugar abroad. Now the question is: What would we do with the extra quantity? Plans are there to increase production still further and when a larger surplus may be expected next year, how is the present surplus to be disposed of? Will it be left in the godowns to deteriorate? Will it be unloaded in the domestic market next year, and all the fresh production exported. What is the guarantee that the costs will be reduced and the world prices would either rise or remain unchanged so as to enable us to sell the surplus in foreign countries. These questions have got to be answered before planning to increase sugar production next year. What incentives will the industry have to enhance production? The present situation has actually been quite disappointing for it. We had proposed export of sugar when the world prices had not depressed so much. Had a decision been taken then, by now we would have sold almost all the surplus stocks at manageable losses and would have been in a better position to plan for the future. Now, of course, we are faced with an almost impossible situation. A sane decision taken at the Cabinet meeting the other day is to keep the prices of sugarcane unchanged. A premium on better sucrose content is allright. The Government has thus linked the prices with the quality of sugarcane, otherwise the sugar problem would have become more difficult. This is sagacious and would not be resented by anyone.

The situation on the wheat front is not very different from that of sugar. Domestic wheat prices are also higher than the world prices. Whatever little has been sold abroad this year, has been done with great difficulty. Our main customer of wheat has been Iran. The support price for the next crop has been further increased by Rs. 15 to Rs. 160 per 100 kg. It may help the growers to increase production. But what shall we do with the surplus produce? As far as the domestic consumers are concerned, 'for the time being' they will not have to pay more. But when the next crop comes into the market the prices are bound to increase. It would be a strange phenomenon if the prices rise with the increase in supplies without any corresponding increase in demand.

It was in this context that we had stressed the need for working out a cost-output ratio of all important crops and then fix the procurement prices. But we regret to say that nothing has so far been heard about any such exercise, while the prices have been further raised. We welcome the measures being taken to increase the per unit yield of all the crops. But at the same time we must try to reduce the costs so that the end-prices do not increase more than the world prices. If at the moment, import of sugar is cheaper, why should one spend foreign exchange on the import of pesticides, fertilisers and costly sugar mill plants to increase domestic production? Domestic consumer is willing to pay even a little more for the domestic products to encourage domestic industry. But to force him pay just double or more than what he would have to pay for imported goods is rather too much to ask of him. Besides, incentives in the form of increased prices have a chain effect and finally it becomes difficult to break the chain. This country has the potential of increasing production with minimum of costs. What we need is proper guidance and the adoption of scientific ways of cropping. This can be done by making agricultural extension services more efficient and more effective.

KARACHI'S JOBLESS NUMBER 1.3 MILLION--ISLAMABAD, Oct. 6--The population of the major cities of Asia and the Pacific will double by the turn of the century, growing by almost 700 million. With Asian cities already under the pressure of recent population growth, such a rapid increase in the next two decades threatens a chaotic degeneration of urban living. According to the fact and findings discussed at the Third Asian and Pacific Population Conference recently concluded in Colombo (Sri Lanka), 20 to 30 per cent of Karachi's 5.3 million people are jobless or underemployed. On average, 37 per cent of Asia's urban population are forced to live in slums and squatter setlements. The proportion is much higher in some cities, the findings say. The projected population increase means that hundreds of million of new housing units will have to be built in Asian cities, and as many as new jobs created. Large-scale expansions and improvements will need to be carried out on roads and public transport systems sanitation and sewerage, schools and hospitals and other civic facilities, most of which are already severely strained in many cities. PROFIT LOSS SHARING DEPOSITS--SIALKOT, Oct. 14--Describing the interest-free banking introduced by President General Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq as a solid step towards Islamisation of the banking system in the country, Allied Bank President Khadim Hussain Siddiqui told newsmen that more steps in this direction were being taken and very soon the whole banking system would be moulded according to the true tenets of Islam. He revealed that the Rs. 2000 crore target fixed for PLS occounts for 1982 by the Banking Council of Pakistan would certainly be achieved by the end of December. So far Rs. 850 crore has been deposited, he added. Giving details of defaulters, he added that at present there are 34,000 cases pending in vorious courts against defaulters involving about Rs. 500 crore. Stringent measures, he said are being taken to check the day-to-day increase in cases of embazzelement in banks. All such cases are being referred to the Martial Law authorities, he added, and it was hoped that the banking field would be purged of all bad elements. The ABL President also disclosed that drastic steps are being taken to check the misuse of conveyance provided to bank managements. [Lahore THE PAKISTAN TIMES in English 15 Oct 82 p 8]

ELECTION TO UNSC--The foreign secretary has said that Pakistan's unopposed election to the United Nations Security Council's seat was a great honor for the country and that it reflected the magnitude of trust and confidence Asian nations had in her. Speaking during a television program on the occasion of UN Day, he said this also demonstrated the success of Pakistan's foreign policy, which is based on principles. He added that Pakistan had never sacrificed these principles. He expressed the hope that Pakistan will fully represent not only the Asian nations but also the nonaligned and the Islamic nations at the Security Council. The foreign secretary said that Sri Lanka's withdrawal from the contest in favor of Pakistan reflected Sri Lanka's friendship with Pakistan. Pakistan will represent Asia at the Security Council for the next 2 years, and during this period many important and delicate issues will be presented before the world body. He said that Pakistan's role in this regard will be in line with its foreign policy and added that the Middle East, Palestine and Afghanistan are important issues where Pakistan must play a vital role. MANILA COLUMNIST WRITES ON POLITICAL CONTINUITY

["Viewpoint" by Salvador P. Lopez: "For Political Continuity"]

[Text] If we are borne on a wave of "continuing revolution" toward which shore we are moving and in what kind of political weather?

I will hazard a guess--and it's only one man's guess: We will be cast upon the shore of a peaceful island. Though there will be dark clouds in the sky and a stiff wind blowing, we will land without mishap because someone will be piloting the boat who can steer it to the safest inlet on the rocky shore.

Who might the pilot be? None other than Ferdinand E. Marcos. Since it was he who brought us out upon the waters of a raging sea, it is he alone can bring us back to the haven he first bade us leave.

By such a device of metaphor, we can better indicate the responsibility resting on President Marcos to bring the nation out of the perilous quandary in which it finds itself. Buffeted by an economic storm of global proportions, faced by a rising clamor for an increasing measure of freedom, democracy and human rights, and burdened with a political system that does not seem to be working too well, the nation is groping for a way out of a grave triple crisis that confronts it.

The truth is that people have a natural preference for the rule of political continuity. This, however, is never an easy rule to observe at any time and the question remains one of the perennial subjects of political philosophy. The system of constitutional monarchy, which has been brought to perfection in England and the Scandinavian countries, is a transparent compromise between the vibrant principle of the sovereign power of the people and the vestigial principle of the divine right of kings. But the result is a reasonably stable and continuous system of political organization.

The risk of discontinuity, on the other hand, explains the universal concern which the question of presidential succession has aroused among Filipinos. Since the present system does not provide for a vice president, the spectre of a sudden break does exist which cannot be exorcised by the device of an appointive executive committee.

This device, in fact, focuses attention on the subliminal danger of a sudden break in the political organization of the state as a consequence of revolution or a coup d'etat which cannot, of course, be entirely excluded. The Philippines has undergone the experience of political discontinuity at least four times during the present century: The revolutionary government, the American colonial rule, the Japanese military occupation, and the regime of martial law.

There is no reason to believe that we have seen the last of them.

Nevertheless, the desire for some kind of measure of political continuity is a natural one. I believe it is true to say that the majority of the people would prefer such continuity to the uncertain hazards of political change brought about by revolution or by a coup d'etat.

True, a revolution will occur anywhere only when the conditions are ripe for it. But violent revolutions as a means of redressing social injustice have had a vicious propensity for creating other, newer forms of injustice, so that they cannot be considered as indisputably the best way of procuring social change, however unavoidable they might really prove to be.

As for a military coup, let no one say that it can never happen in the Philippines. All the essential elements are present and in place, and it only requires the concurrence of circumstances and opportunity to trigger one such coup into existence.

These ever-present alternatives render all the more necessary a determined effort on the part of President Marcos and the leaders of the opposition to find some means of resolving the differences that now divide them. While those differences cannot be minimized, no one can really know their measure until responsible representatives of the two sides sit down together to consider them.

But this can only happen if both sides agree to suspend the continuing battle of press releases and press statements, and begin to explore possibilities of cooperation.

It is not going to be easy. But let no one forget: The issue is between political continuity achieved through the participation of the party in power and the opposition in legitimate political action, political discontinuity brought about by the threat of force or the use of force, in the course of a revolution or a coup d'etat.

Put differently, the issue is between the survival of democracy in the Philippines, and its eclipse for a very long time to come, if not its final death.

MARCOS INAUGURATES KEY DAM PROJECT 27 OCTOBER

HK280012 Manila Far East Broadcasting Service in English 2330 GMT 27 Oct 82

[Excerpts] President Marcos, before 100,000 cheering Ilocanos, predicted yesterday that the Magat high dam would transform the Cagayan valley and Region II in northern Luzon into the breadbasket of the Philippines. Inaugurating together with the first lady and Human Settlements Minister Imelda Romualdez Marcos the Magat River multipurpose project, the president ordered the cabinet to set aside 1 billion pesos for Region II to accelerate the development of the Cagayan valley, including the Batanes Islands. The president also released another 5 million pesos for the region to repair public works projects destroyed by the last typhoon, on top of the 10 million pesos which Malacanang had released earlier for the region.

The president and the first lady flew to Isabela yesterday to officially start up the 5.5 billion peso Magat dam and the reservoir complex, which includes an unfinished hydroelectric power plant. The finished structure, which stands out as a monumental achievement of the administration, has so far cost 3.3 billion pesos. This figure does not include the electric power phase of the project, which will cost 2.2 billion pesos.

The president underscored the importance of the Magat high dam and the significance of his and the first lady's visit to Isabela, in the heart of the Cagayan valley. The program, held in Barangay Aguinaldo in Ramon, Isabela, was actually a joint affair. First the inauguration of the Magat River multipurpose project, and the commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the tenant emancipation decree. Concerning this anniversary, the president and the first lady distributed yesterday 25,000 land titles to farmers from the country's 12 regions, making them absolute owners of the land they till and occupy in accordance with the government's land reform program.

Stressing the importance of the occasion, the president said land reform is not just a transfer of land from the landlords to the farmers but is a package of economic benefits intended to make farmers self-reliant and productive.

MEETING NOTES MINDANAO PEACE, ORDER PROBLEMS

HK190144 Manila TIMES JOURNAL in English 18 Oct 82 p 2

[Text] The Regional Peace and Order Council had adopted several measures to counteract possible increase in subversive infiltration and expansion in central Mindanao. Military officials said subversion remains the biggest threat to the security and development of the region.

The council meeting was attended by military officers, regional, provincial and local government officials, the religious and media. It was presided by Chairman Simeon A. Datumanong and Regional Command 12 Chief Col Valerio C. Perez.

The New People's Army [NPA] propaganda machinery is very active and the NPA has already infiltrated various kinds of organizations, Col Raul Urgello, intelligence officer of central Mindanao command told the council.

Col Rodrigo Gutang, Recom 12 deputy commander for operations, said the "threat of subversion in Region 12 should not be taken for granted."

North Cotabato Gov Carlos B. Cajelo said the Communist Party and NPA, which have a mass base in the borders with Bukidnon, Davao and north Cotabato provinces, would like to penetrate and control Arakan valley to be made into their jumpoff point for infiltration into the other provinces of the region. The governor and the military officers underlined the need for greater involvement of local governments and the civilian population in the campaign against dissidence.

The peace council also decided to:

--Initiate more dialogues with the people in the rural areas to ascertain their problems.

--Conduct follow ups on these problems to achieve tangible results in infrastructure projects and government services.

--Use the mass media to the fullest so that people may be well-informed of the real conditions obtaining in their localities and the dangers of communism.

--Assign more extension officers, field-men, social workers and health personnel to rural areas.

--Generate active participation of local governments, down to the Baranggay level, and civilian organizations to make government presence a reality to a greater number of rural folks.

--Impose proper conduct and discipline among soldiers assigned in far-flung areas.

LAYA REPORTS DETERIORATING ECONOMY

HK270251 Manila BUSINESS DAY in English 26 Oct 82 p 3

[Text] The country's deficit in its international payments in January-September reached $747 million, more than double the $365-million deficit in the same period last year, as export earnings again failed to match import payments.

Exports during the period totaled $4.03 billion, down 8 percent from the yearago $4.39 billion, while import grew 0.8 percent from $6.02 billion to $6.07 billion. The January-September trade deficit thus reached $2.04 billion, up about 25 percent from $1.63 billion.

The slack in demand abroad for Philippine products, particularly minerals and agricultural commodities, also slowed down activities of domestic business because of the resulting fall in the purchasing power of consumers.

To keep the economy active, the government jacked up its expenditures to P41.03 billion, from the yearago P34.13 billion, when its revenues amounted to P29.13 billion (from the yearago P26.62 billion). It thus overshot its targeted budgetary deficit. The banking system was thus tapped to cover most of this budgetary deficit.

Central Bank [CB] Governor Jaime C. Laya reported to President Marcos on the economic and financial developments during the first three quarters, saying the widening gap in the balance-of-payments position "continued to be of primary concern" and the government took measures for both immediate and long-run remedies of the deficit.

Among the immediate remedies were the streamlining of institutional arrangements to improve the inward remittances of earnings of Filipino workers abroad, the approval of the issuance of dollar-denominated treasury bills, and support of metals industries, the report said.

"A major development that could help achieve a more sustainable balance-of-payments position was the increase in the peso-dollar rate. To a large, however, the peso's deterioration was due to the continuing strength of the U.S. dollar," it stated.

"The continued control of external debt was addressed to the same problem and the unprecedented adoption of a quantitative ceiling of $2.4 billion on new foreign borrowing approvals ensures the maintenance of the external debt at manageable levels."

However, the government measures do not seem to affect many businesses, according to businessmen contacted by BUSINESS DAY. They say their main problem is with liquidity--having funds for day-to-day operations since sales have gone down while costs of operations have remained high.

GNP: Laya's report said the country's total output of goods and services--or gross national product--grew 2.4 percent in the first semester from the same period last year, against a 4.3 percent growth in the first half of 1981.

Gross domestic product grew 2.9 percent compared to 4.0 percent in the same period last year. Agriculture recorded a 4.1 percent, led by the 5.1 percent growth in rice production which accounted for about 26 percent of total agricultural output, the report said.

Personal consumption expenditures grew only 2.6 percent, against the yearago rate of 4.3 percent.

Government expenditures grew only 4.2 percent this year, against 5.2 percent last year.

Yet the government in January-September had a budget deficit of P11.9 billion, already exceeding its targeted budgetary deficit of P10 billion for this year.

Laya said: "Efforts to keep budgetary aggregates within the constraints of resource availability...would go a long way towards more effective economic management as the economy prepares itself for the expected upturn in the world economy."

About P10.9 billion of the budgetary deficit was financed by the banking system. Such funding of the deficit will be "closely monitored" in line with the CB task to watch the growth in domestic credit, Laya said. The aim is to regulate the increases in credit and cash, to tune them with the target growth of the economy while maintaining a low inflation rate and narrowing the gap in the international payments, he added.

Despite the huge BPO [balance of payments] deficit in the first three quarters, total domestic liquidity reached P88.8 billion as of last September, up 17.2 percent from December's P82 billion. The CB early this year has set a 17 percent increase in total liquidity for 1982.

Credit: While the bulk of outstanding credit is still used by the private sector, the government's net availment during January-September grew faster than the private sector's. Government net borrowings amounted to P21.72 billion as of last September, or 50 percent more than P14.54 billion at end-1981, while the private sector's net credit reached P109.26 billion, 8 percent more than P101.27 billion end-1981.

Other highlights of Laya's report:

--The country's fixed term foreign debts (those repayable at a specified time as against revolving credit which can be automatically renewed), amounted to $12.6 billion, up 10.8 percent from $11.37 billion at end-1981. The outstanding debt as of September was about 30.8 percent of GNP;

--Revolving credit as of last June amounted to $3.65 billion, or 6 percent more than the $3.45 billion end-1981, for a $199-million net borrowing during the first semester;

--Money market interest rates averaged 14.396 percent per annum during the first three semesters, against the yearago average of 15.45 percent a year;

--CB leadings amounted to P44.25 billion, or an expansion of P6.56 billion during the three semesters. The public sector accounted for P22.8 billion, and the private sector P13.66 billion. CB holdings of government securities amounted to P7.79 billion;

--The pesos's exchange rate against the dollar dropped 7.5 percent during the three quarters, at P8.4199 per $1, from P7.8334 per $1.

--Foreign loans approved during the period amounted to $1.89 billion against a ceiling of $2.4 billion for 1982. Some $728 million of the approved loans were in official development assistance, which carry concessional terms;

--The increase in prices of consumer goods decelerated to 10.5 percent during the period, against 13.2 percent last year.

CHINESE-FILIPPINOS URGED NOT TO TAKE SIDES

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 16-17 Oct 82 p 4

[Article by Al Alinsug]

[Text] The way I sized up the toasts to the friendship of the People's Republic of China during a testimonial banquet in honor of the PROC visiting ambassador, Mo Yan zhong, we have to like China mainland because it can help us more. Improvement of socio-economic relations between the Philippines and China's PROC is the desire of our leaders of government, but not their ideology.

I was invited to three activities on the occasion of the Chinese ambassador's visit: the press conference at Mactan in the morning, the Ludo luncheon at the Revolving Restaurant, and the state dinner at Whitegold. I could only attend the state dinner, and it was revealing. The wide floor of Whitegold was full to capacity: about two thousand joined Mr. Yanzhong in the dinner. that's the estimate of OMA regional director Gene Labella with whom I was seated.

I tried to see and remember who were there: among the big names were Frank Benedicto, Mr. Esteban Go Sing King, Ben Chua, Lim Liu, Vicente Sabarre, Ric Ong and many others.

From talks I gathered there is at present a strong dividing wall that separates those who are sympathetic to PROC and those who are pro-nationalist government. lawyer Dito Florido, president of IBP-Cebu, confirmed this antagonism

While the Chinese in Cebu and others elsewhere in the country are mainly concerned with the aggrandizement of their businesses and social contacts, it will be for the enhancement of peace and unity of the Filipino-Chinese relations if this economic interest will not be confused with ideological interest. The Chinese in the Philippines should stay clear from ideological struggle. The moment they get inveigled in ideological issue, the government will surely run after them and they become enemies of the people. Maintaining the status quo will gain for them continued prosperity and peace. Democratic living should be their way of life and they should resist any attempt, should there be any, to make use of them for ideological purposes.

LOCAL AUTONOMY TO BE WIDENED

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 22 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] THE GOVERNMENT will continue to give more autonomy to civilian administrations in the provinces.

President Marcos made this assurance yesterday during his talk with Leyte and Samar officials at the People's Center in Tacloban City.

The President noted that in many instances, problems are better solved at the provincial level.

The President, together with the First Lady, and Human Settlements Minister Imelda R. Marcos, conferred with officials of two Eastern Visayas provinces on local problems, including the peace and order situation.

Mr. Marcos, who presided over the commemoration of the landing of the Allied forces 38 years ago last Wednesday, boarded the Presidential yacht Ang Pangulo shortly after lunch yesterday for a return trip to Manila. He is expected to be back in Malacanang early this afternoon.

DURING HIS meeting with Leyte and Samar officials, the President was informed that with the opening of roads and highways, electrification of barrios and the spread of the livelihood program, the New People's Army's activities have dwindled to a few isolated incidents.

Deputy Prime Minister Jose D. Rono told the President that the people of the region have realized that the government is sincere in pursuing the development of the region.

The government has poured in almost P1 billion for the development of Samar alone. The province was once a hotbed of subversion.

The President reiterated to the officials that the government would continue to emphasize socio-economic development in coping with subversion in the country.

The First Lady urged local officials to keep constant communication with their constituents in the barangays.

She proposed that officials keep records of government finances open for the public scrutiny to maintain, she said, public confidence in the government.

She also said processing villages will be set up in every region to help increase the value of local products.

The President reiterated that the country has adopted a strong work ethic as the basis for development and assured it would not find itself in a financial bind which many welfare states have fallen into. He cited the predicament of some welfare states that spend more than half their annual budgets for welfare.

On the livelihood program, the President cautioned against over-concentration of resources on a few products which, he said, may result in excess production and depressed prices. He urged that market studies should accompany KKK projects to ensure their viability.

BANKS AWASH WITH CASH

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Oct 82 pp 9, 10

[Article by George T. Nervez]

[Text] COMMERCIAL banks are awash in cash with a total of P37.8 billion in cash and due from banks, according to data made public by the Central Bank.

The CB said yesterday that the combined resources of commercial banks amounted to P187.5 billion and end-September, an improvement of P4.2 billion or 2.3 percent from P183.3 billion in August 1982.

The increase in resources was noted in both domestic and foreign banks, but the Philippine National Bank (PNB) and private domestic banks contributed P3.5 billion or 83.3 percent of the P4.2 billion asset expansion.

ACCORDING to the CB, there was a 'pronounced' increase in cash assets which rose by P2.5 billion or 7.2 percent from August 1982. Cash and due from banks of the commercial banks amounted to P37.8 billion as of end-September 1982, higher by P8.96 billion or 31.1 percent compared to the level a year ago, the CB noted.

The CB report was significant in the wake of pesistent complaints from the private sector that credit remained tight. On the other hand, monetary authorities have pointed out that there is adequate credit in the system.

The CB said that of the P2.5 billion increase in cash assets, a total of P2.1 billion were bank deposits with the Central Bank.

About P1.3 billion of the P4.2 billion increase in assets last month were in loans. As of end-September, outstanding loans stood at P117 billion representing 59.6 percent of resources, the CB pointed out.

TOP FIRMS SALES RISE AS PROFITS FALL

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 21 Oct 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by Ray Magallanes]

[Text] THE COUNTRY's top corporations did not fare well last year, even if they post an increase in combined sales, because of rising costs of production and reduced consumer purchases.

This was reflected in a report made public yesterday by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), which showed that the top 1,000 corporations made gross sale of some P220.3 billion last year, or 30.3 percent more than the 1980 level of P169 billion.

Net income, however, dropped from P5.6 billion in 1980 to P2.5 billion last year, or a decline of 54 percent, because of the losses incurred by several large corporations, with the mining companies incurring the biggest losses because of the sharp fall in the price of copper and other metals.

OIL FIRMS still dominated the whole picture in terms of sales with five of them occupying positions in the top 10 listing:

Petrophil Corp., P12.2 billion in sales and P43.2 million in income; Bataan Refining Corp., P11.2 billion and P19.2 million; Caltex Phils., Inc., P7.2 billion and P238 million; Pilipinas Shell Petroleum Corp., P7.1 billion and P40.4 million; 5 Philippine National Bank, P5.6 billion and P230 million; San Miguel Corp., P5.3 billion and P283 million; Mobil Oil Philippines, P5.1 billion and P38.4 million; Manila Electric Company, which posted P5 billion in revenues but reflected total losses of P40.8 million; Philippine Airlines, which made P4.1 billion in sales but incurred losses totalling P959 million; and United Coconut Oil Mills, with total revenues of P4.1 billion and profits of almost P15 million.

PILIPINAS and Caltex merely changed places in the list, while Unicom displaced financially-strapped Construction and Development Corp. of the Philippines (CDCP) from the "Magic 10" to take the 10th position.

Contributing largely to the revenue-generating capability of the top 1,000 was the manufacturing sector which posted gross sales of P79.4 billion or 36.1 percent of the total volume. Wholesale and retail trade came in second with P65.8 billion or nearly 30 percent of the combined revenues.

PLACING third to sixth in that order were financing, insurance, real estate and business services, P33.1 billion or 15.1 percent; transportation, storage and communication, P12.2 billion or 5.6 percent; construction, P10 billion or 4.6 percent; and mining, P8.2 billion or 3.8 percent.

While manufacturing took the lion's share in sales, the bulk of net earnings made by the top 1,000 firms was contributed by the financing, insurance, real estate and business services with P2.5 billion, with banking contributing P1.6 billion or 66.3 percent of the net income.

Manufacturing accounted for the second largest share with a net income of P576.9 million or 22.3 percent of the total income.

Mining, which was the third largest recipient of earnings in 1980's top 1,000 corporations, incurred the biggest loss (about P1 billion) last year.

Because of the severe business difficulties prevailing last year, 215 corporate entities – the biggest in number so far – incurred losses of P4.8 billion as against the 183 firms in 1980 which reported losses of only P2.5 billion.

CHINESE BUSINESS PRACTICES QUESTIONED

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 16-17 Oct 82 p 3

[Article by Eddie R. Gandionco]

[Text] The Chinese, it seems, have always had a somewhat greater weakness for money. Usually, a Chinese manager, running his own business, is only concerned about how much money he can squeeze out of it. Some Chinese businessmen have tricks up their sleeves when it comes to prices. They offer good prices. If the price is refused, the Chinese will warily explain that he can lower the price if the quantity is increased. He may even confide that by adulterating the quality a bit he can lower the price yet further.

A few Chinese entrepreneurs that are wise use a far-flung subcontracting network that allows him to produce a greater quantity more cheaply without getting involved in large capital outlays and unwieldy workers. And he may not have much of an establishment to boast of. And his customers and market are those that needs a particular product at a low price at a certain time. These group of Chinese and Chinese-Filipino businessmen are young, dynamic and growing; their approach is much looser and freer. They are more tougher and aggressive (included in this group are the technical smugglers).

However, Chinese unity in the Philippines for the past years has always a rare ingredient. The community is dissected by mutually exclusive and self-perpetuating social organizations and institutions. Many of the Chinese population remain content with their business and wealth. With themselves at the center of the country's economy, their lives have been organized around and within a framework of associations and societies in cozy seclusion from the multi-racial environment. Dealings across race barriers are confined to the top-most levels of government.

The growth of Chinese businesses and industries has created apprehension as well as fear from Filipino businessmen that given the Chinese penchant for family-owned corporations or firms, the Chinese and Chinese-Filipinos may well end up in full control of all businesses and industries in the country and the economy and the government. In the meantime, the Chinese amongst us are still conscious of their origin and culture, even though they have been born in this country and live here for many, many years

Almost daily you read in the newspapers of smuggling thru our ports Smuggling, a profitable if illegal form of private enterprise, is becoming an increasingly big problem for government authorities. Smuggling in and out of the country have mushroomed in the last decade and the trade is now certainly worth many millions. At the center of the smuggling trade are alleged to be Chinese and Chinese-Filipino businessmen and traders who have connections with top government officials and customs collectors and examiners and, the anonymity to make a success of a business of avoiding customs formalities.

It is true and it cannot be denied that many cases of smuggling have been cracked by the authorities, but for every load the customs and government agents stop or confiscate, a dozen shipments probably get through. And this is also true.

JUDGE DEPLORES FALSE STATISTICS

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 16-17 Oct 82 pp 1-14

[Article by Mariano M Florido, Former CFI Judge]

[Text] We heard these several times from the mouth of the leadership: Our economy is doing well. The unemployment figure in the Philippines is only 4 per cent; inflation is only 10.5 per cent; domestic savings, 20.2 per cent; real growth rate 2.4 per cent (Virata's figure is 3 per cent), better than developed countries; foreign indebtedness, only $12 billion; foreign investments, $250 million a year; literacy is 100 per cent in Manila. We are a democracy. In our country there is freedom of speech and of the press; there is no violation of human rights.

To a Filipino who has lived in his country since the day independence from america was proclaimed in 1946, these utterances would pass from the sublime to the ridiculous.

There are several factors that come to assist the opinion-maker in these statements. First, the authoritarian juggernaut. In an era when the freedom of speech and of the press is restricted, or even tabooed, the only opinion that counts weight is that of the authority.

Second, the unrestrained resort to statistics to establish a point. For instance, one cannot rely on the accuracy that our unemployment rate is only 4 per cent, specially in the face of the unguarded admission that unemployment is rising everywhere; that because of the depressed labor market here, thousands of Filipinos seek employ- abroad.

Third, like the rich grafters, the truth about our present economic conditions can always manage to escape arrest. Says a Bulletin Today editorial: "There is of course the admission thattheconditions are bad, and that is precisely the reason for pointing out, through official figures, that some fundamental aspects of the economy are surprisingly strong."

When government merely cites statistics, for convenience, to prove economic performance, the people who actually suffer under a dying economy would simply shrug off and say: "Damn the statistics!" For them, no better measure of such performance can match the performance of sufferings.

What about DEMOCRACY? What is DEMOCRACY? President Marcos himself citfinition of DEMOCRACY that becaune of the depressed that the most famous de-was, of course, made by the great Pericles. "Our constitution is named a DEMOCRACY," he said, "because it is in the hands, not of the few, but of the many." If that is so, then his definition is the death-song of DEMOCRACY under our Constitution.

Can DEMOCRACY exist when the gap between the rich and the poor in the Philippines is so wide, it makes the poor the slaves of the rich? The President, again cites in his "Democracy and Revolution", Alexander Hamilton who said "that a power over a man's subsistence amounts to a power over his will."

Can a political society be called democratic when, under its laws, only one party can virtually be accredited to run in an election?

In the Philippines, there is freedom of speech and of the press; there is no violation of human rights. Our economy is great; unemployment rate is only 4 per cent; our inflation is only 10.5 per cent, better than most developed countries.

Let us say that President Marcos, during his 17 years as president, really tried hard to improve our economy. But, did he succeed? The ordinary citizen, the laborers, the students, the teachers, the house holders, the professionals, everybody knows that he failed. And this is not to be regretted because all the previous presidents before him also failed. It's another story if you irritate the people with statistics for they might ask you: "Where did you get your figures?"

I have read a reprint of the editorial of Wall Street Journal of September 24, on FM's state visit to US. I would prefer to limit my citation to its natural focus: "With the massacres in Beirut and the Philippine President's state visit, news coverage has focused on the imperfections of the two leaders (Menachem Begin and Marcos) and their governments. Mr. Marcos's rule in the Philippines certainly does have its imperfections, some of them baroque, and it is a good thing to have a forum in which he is called to account."

MNLF RECRUITER SURRENDERS

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 27 Oct 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by Jose de Vera]

[Text]

GEN. SANTOS CITY, Oct. 26—One of the original framers of the "constitution" of the Moro National Liberation Front, responsible for initial recruitment of 20,000 MNLF rebels, gave up here today to military authorities headed by Maj. Gen. Josephus Q. Ramas, Army commanding general.

The "MNLF constitutionalist" and political commissar, Ben Harin Tan alias Commander Harid Tan, gave up unconditionally with his seven-man staff and many followers in rites held at the home base of the 3rd Infantry brigade, 2nd Infantry division, under Brig. Gen. Cesar Bueno. They yielded high-powered rifles.

They were wearing army fatigues tailored like the uniforms of regular members of the Armed Forces, complete with name patches but with MNLF lettering over the right shirt pockets.

Brig. Gen. Jose P. Magno, Jr., commander of the Central Mindanao command (CEMCOM), South Cotabato Gov. Sergio Morales, and Gen. Santos city Mayor Antonio C. Acharon, along with Muslim datus and sultans were on hand to witness the surrender.

They sworn on the Koran before a Muslim priest that they would now work for the government and convince their remaining 1,000 followers to come down the hills.

Tan promised to convince his brother, a lawyer who also joined the MNLF, to follow him in going back to the government fold.

Tan said the split in the MNLF hierarchy, the unseating of Nur Misuari, and the weakening leadership of Hassim Salamat, compounded by lack of foreign support in military hardware, have caused widespread demoralization among the remaining MNLF commanders and their followers.

Tan said he and his men realized that in their 12 years of fighting the government, they have done more harm than good.

Tan said he joined the MNLF in 1970 when he led a second batch of 300 Muslim youths who underwent training in Jampira, Sabah.

The first batch of 200 Muslim youths from Lanao del Sur, he said, underwent training in the same camp for 180 days. He trained with this first batch.

He returned as chairman of an organizing group that recruited more 20,000 MNLF men from North and South Cotabato.

In 1978, Tan said he was recalled to Jampira, stayed there for one year as trainer and instructor, and returned with much responsibility that expanded his area of operation to Sulu, Basilan, Davao del Sur, North and South Cotabato.

In 1982, Tan said he was made overall chairman on civil affairs and roving political commissar.

General Magno discribed Tan's position as political commissar and mass organization man as "more deadly" than that of an ordinary MNLF combat leader.

GOVERNMENT UNABLE TO CUT DEFICIT

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 27 Oct 82 p 24

[Text]

The national government's cash budget deficit of ₱11.9 billion during the first nine months of the year, as reported by the Central Bank, was running out of the government's target to keep the deficit at ₱10 billion for the whole year equivalent to 3.0 per cent of GNP.

It also nearly approximated the ₱12 billion deficit recorded in 1981, equivalent to 3.9 per cent of GNP.

Early this year, the government decreed a number of austerity measures intended to check the increase in expenditures so as to rein the budget deficit at the targetted level of ₱10 billion. With still three months to go in the year, updated government estimates place the deficit at between ₱14 billion to ₱15 billion.

At this level of budget deficit, it is now obvious the programmed target of reducing the deficit from 3.9 per cent of GNP to 3.0 per cent of GNP in 1982 would not be met.

The CB said that the "counter-cyclical" measures adopted by the government to counteract the slump in business activity brought about the world recession were responsible for the undue rise in government expenditures during the nine-month period.

Among these measures was the continued implementation of government public work and infrastructure projects which formed part of the ₱18 billion spent for capital outlays during the period, up by ₱5.0 billion over that spent for the same period last year.

Spending for infrastracture rose from ₱5.7 billion to ₱6.12 billion. Allocations for equity in government corporations, which the World Bank earlier recommended to be trimmed down, rose by 45.9 per cent from ₱5.58 billion to ₱8.13 billion.

Current operating expenditures also rose by ₱2.0 billion from ₱21 billion to ₱23 billion.

As a result, total disbursements during the period amounted to ₱41 billion, representing a 20.2 per cent increase over last year's.

In contrast, total revenues increased by only 9.5 per cent to ₱29.1 billion.

As the budget deficit expanded than anticipated, the public sector resorted heavily to borrowings, mostly from domestic sources.

Public sector's borrowings for the first nine months of the year stood at ₱22 billion, ₱7.2 billion or 81.9 per cent more than the comparative period last year.

During the period, the CB lent a total of ₱5.9 billion to the national government to help it finance the deficit.

REBEL PRIEST SLAIN

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 13 Oct 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by Mel Parale]

[Text] A REBEL priest with a P130,000 price on his head and tagged as a procurer of guns for dissidents operating in Northern Luzon was killed Monday noon in a clash with government troops.

Fr. Zacarias Agatep, parish priest of Cauayan and San Jose in Ilocos Sur, was slain one day after a recommendation of the PC Region I command raising to P130,000 the reward for his capture, dead or alive, was approved by Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile.

Also killed in the encounter that took place in barangay Baybayadeng, Salcedo, in Ilocos Sur was Nonoy Espiritu, alias Commander Doming, an NPA leader wanted for allegedly leading rebel liquidation squads in the ambush killings of soldiers and uncooperative local officials and civilians.

The body of Agatep, 45, was identified by Brig. Gen. Victorino T. Azada, regional PC commander.

FOUR REBELS acting as Agatep's bodyguards were captured. Their identities were not available.

PC soldiers, led by Lt. Daniel Costales, seized high-caliber guns, including a Soviet-made AK-47 rifle, an armalite and a carbine, after the encounter.

The PC said the armalite was used by Agatep.

Agatep's body was later taken to his relatives in Vigan, Ilocos Sur.

RECORDS showed that Agatep joined the underground movement two years ago and subsequently figured in armed clashes with government troops.

He was captured Sept. 4, 1980, but was released to the custody of his superiors on Dec. 23 of the same year based on an agreement entered into by a church-military liaison group.

But he took to the hills again weeks later.

He was placed at the top of the wanted list by military authorities after confirmed reports showed he had been active again in clashes with government troops.

ANOTHER rebel priest in the wanted list is Fr. Conrado Balweg, a parish priest in Abra who also carries a P130,000 price on his head.

Three other rebel priests in the region have been identified and are being hunted by government troops. They are Frs. Nilo Ortega, Bruno Ortega and a certain Fr. Valerio.

The government has approved offers of rewards for anyone who can give information for their capture.

EDITORIAL DENIES PERSECUTION OF CHURCH

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Oct 82 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text] WE HOPE that Jaime Cardinal Sin was misquoted when he reportedly said that it appeared that the government has begun a systematic campaign to discredit the Catholic Church in the Philippines.

To raise that kind of issue is tantamount to promoting a fight between the State and the Church which is frowned upon by every Filipino. Officials of the Catholic Church should be the last ones to even hint about a fight between the State and the Church for the consequences may be most difficult to bear.

The Cardinal's comments may have been brought about by the death of rebel priest Fr. Zacarias Agatep, who was killed in an armed encounter with government forces in Ilocos Sur, and the arrest of Australian Fr. Brian Gore, parish priest of Kabankalan, Negros Occidental, for inciting to rebellion and illegal possession of explosives and ammunition.

It is understandable for Cardinal Sin to react the way he did considering that he is one of two Church princes in the country and he is duty-bound to take up the cudgels for the members of the clergy. But the good Cardinal should have investigated the circumstances first before pronouncing his verdict. Fr. Agatep was a confirmed rebel priest who took up arms against the government. Fr. Gore was duly charged in court for the crimes imputed against him. He filed a motion for bail which was denied by a proper court.

We agree that there are always two sides to a question and, in these cases, the two priests have their own opinions. That is why Fr. Gore is being given his day in court.

Fr. Agatep was long in the wanted list of rebel leaders and he knew it. That was why he had been in hiding until that fatal encounter with government troopers. Fr. Gore was arrested on the basis of evidence in the hands of government authorities. His warrant of arrest was even coursed through Bishop Antonio Fortich of Bacolod City.

If and when priests decide to violate certain laws and the security of a country, they should be prepared to answer the consequences. They should not be given special treatment just because they are priests. In this particular case, a priest who decides to take up arms against a duly constituted government becomes just like any of the rebels and should be treated as such.

When Cardinal Sin talked about the alleged systematic government campaign to discredit the Catholic Church, he should not have lost sight of the fact that a great majority of the Filipinos are Catholics. President and Mrs. Marcos and the leading civilian and military authorities are devout Catholics. They will not allow that to happen.

It is not difficult to understand why priests get deeply involved in social and political issues. As servants of God and preachers of the Gospel, they are duty-bound to expose social injustices and violations of human rights. They are performing their priestly functions. But to go beyond that, to take the law into their own hands to be able to accomplish the reforms they advocate — that is something else.

It is best to call the attention of the Catholic priests to the message of Pope John Paul II at the Baclaran church in February, 1980:

"May I remind you (the clergy) of my words at Puebla, Mexico...'You are priests and religious, you are not social or political leaders or officials of a temporal power. Let us not be under the illusion that we are serving the gospel if we dilute our charisma through an exaggerated interest in the wide field of temporal problems.' It is important to see you as servants of Christ and stewards of the Mystery of God."

NISSAN TO PRODUCE CARS IN PHILIPPINES

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Oct 82 p 9

[Text]

TOKYO, Oct. 26 -- Japan's second largest automaker Nissan Motors is to start production and selling of its cars in the Philippines, company spokesman said today.

Nissan, makers of Datsun, and leading trade firm Marubeni Corp. have formed a P50 million (about $5.45 million) joint venture in the Philippines with a local interest to produce and sell passenger cars there, a Nissan spokesman said.

CALLED the Pilipinas Nissan Inc., the new company is owned 15 percent each by Nissanand Marubeniand 70 percent by the First Manila Management Co.

The joint venture will produce 1,600-1,800 cc passenger cars, probably beginning next June.

The venture follows a retreat of West Germany's Volkswagen, which had entrusted producing and marketing of the two Volkswagen-designed cars to the now defunct DMG Industries Co. he added.

Volkswagen was reportedly pulling out of the Philippines because of the extremely sluggish sales of its cars. (AFP)

DAVAO MILITARY TERRORIZE POPULACE

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 15 Oct 82 p 40

[Police News Roundup column by Ramon Tulfo: "Davao's Night Stalkers"]

[Text]

They come in the middle of the night or wee hours of the morning, these men in fatigue uniforms who carry M-16 Armalites and wear masks. They go from house to house, knocking at doors—they have become known as "night knockers"—demanding money or goods. Some of them force their sexual urges on unmarried female members of the household. If these men, who come in bunches of five to 30, cannot get anything from a house, they strafe the roof of that house. The recipients of these nocturnal visits are residents of Mabini town and its outlying barangays in Davao del Norte. The military has been blaming the New People's Army for such visits. The residents, however, insist that some men under Col. Meliton F. Tiburcio, the provincial commander, are the culprits. An investigation is in order.

During a recent dialogue with Mabini residents, Colonel Tiburcio, reportedly enraged by accusations against his soldiers, rose before the assembly and announced: "All right. If that's what you want, I'll pull out all my men and then see what happens to you without us!" This remark was reportedly met with applause from the crowd, and shouts of "Good" and "Yes, take them out" were heard. Shocked, the colonel allegedly became silent and returned to his seat.

THOUSANDS PROTEST ARREST OF PRIEST

Colombo DAILY NEWS in English 21 Oct 82 p 8

[Text]

KABANKALAN, PHILIPPINES Wednesday.

Three thousand people, many of them barefoot farmers, demonstrated today outside the police station in this Central Philippine town where an Australian Roman Catholic priest is held.

Father Brian Gore, a 38-year-old Columban Father originally from Perth, was arrested with six others on Monday on charges of possessing explosives and ammunition and incitement to rebellion.

As the crowd gathered in the small town square, he told reuters in an interview in the office of the local police chief.

"If they can get away with this, all priests and religious people will not be safe."

The arrest of Father Gore followed the detention of a Filipino priest running a "social action" centre on the Island of Samar last week and the killing by military forces in the Northern Philippines of a priest alleged to have joined a Communist guerrilla organisation.

Some Catholic clergymen say the authorities are out to silence the voice of the church.

Father Gore, who has spent more than 10 years in his parish at Kabankalan on Negros Island, said of the demonstrators.

Every time there is a human rights violation in our area, we always make a protest and we confront the military.

Earlier in the day he was seen praying on a sleeping mat in the little cell he shares with the six parishioners arrested with him.

Later, wearing a teeshirt and looking relaxed, he said: "They've been after me for a long time."

Asked why the military were after him, he replied: "there is a lot of jealousy because we have credibility and they don't."

Father Gore denied the charges against him which stem from a raid on his residence in kabankalan on the night of September 24. He was detained then, but released after five hours.

"By staying in jail, we can expose this anomaly,' he said, alleging that local officials were circulating a petition aimed at having him deported as an undesirable alien.

Some 6,000 people held a prayer rally in the centre of Kabankalan yesterday, but today's demonstrators said they planned a hunger strike against the authorities.

"Hunger strike for justice" said one of their banners. (Reuter)

COUNTRY TO REVIEW AGRICULTURAL POLICY

HK251252 Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 25 Oct 82 p 28

[Text] The government is set to review its agricultural policy particularly those dealing with projects funded by the World Bank, it was learned yesterday. The review, to be done on monthly basis by an inter-agency committee, is one of the government's responses to criticism made by the World Bank that implementation of agricultural projects in the country had been "slow."

In an informal meeting held at the National Food and Agricultural Council (NFAC), Agriculture Minister Arturo R. Tanco, Jr is reportedly organizing the inter-agency committee which will look into the speedy implementation of agricultural projects funded by the World Bank.

The Philippines is a recipient of a $850 million loan from the World Bank for 22 agriculture-related projects. Members of the World Bank mission who arrived here last Monday claimed that the Philippines cannot avail of the loan commitment on time since the country is "slow" in the implementation of the projects.

Agriculture Ministry sources said Prime Minister Cesar Virata has directed the NFAC to plan and coordinate a systematic approach in implementing the country's agricultural projects funded by international financial institutions.

At present, several government agencies can directly borrow from World Bank agricultural developmental loans. With the directive, it was learned, NFAC will decide which projects would be given government priorities for international fundings.

Meanwhile, Agrarian Reform Minister Conrado Estrella told a briefing with newsmen, there is no way, at the moment, to put the country's sugar and coconut landholdings under the government's agrarian reform program because of the prevailing economic difficulties.

Estrella stressed that the agrarian reform program will only cover the landholdings defined under Presidential Decree No 27 as amended which are basically those areas planted to rice and corn.

He said that tenancy in sugar and coconut areas is just "minimal" that the possibility of putting them under agrarian reform is farfetched.

Citing reports of the Philippine coconut authority, Estrella said 95 percent of the landholdings devoted to coconut belongs to 5 hectares and below. This means that the bulk of coconut lands are owned by small farmers and tenancy does not exist.

In sugarlands, he said, there were only few tenants and tenancy exists only in Pampanga and Batangas numbering only about 10,000 people. The rest of the country's sugar workers are migratory workers or the so-called "Sacadas."

OVER HALF GRADE SCHOOLERS OVERAGE

Manila PHILIPPINES DAILY EXPRESS in English 27 Oct 82 p 22

[Text]

OVER 50 percent of the country's elementary school pupils are too old for their respective grade levels, says the education ministry. This indicates that the children start school over the age level prescribed by the ministry.

A probable cause of their late enrolment could be poverty which prevents families from sending their children to school upon reaching the prescribed age level, says the ministry.

Under the ministry's prescription, a first grader should be seven years old; second grader, eight; third grader, nine; fourth grader, 10; fifth grader, 11, and sixth grader, 12.

IN ITS statistical bulletin, the ministry reports that of 7,931,164 pupils enroled in public elementary schools last year, 3,747,356 (or over 50 percent) were found to be overaged for their respective grade levels.

The overagers divided into 2,013,797 males and 1,733,559 females.

Those in Grade One comprised the bulk. The boys numbered 392,090 and the girls 324,014 for a total of 1,403,652.

Ages of the overaged first graders ranged from eight to 19 and above. Of the total 1.4 million overagers, 404,277 were eight years old; 145,900 were nine; 70,437 were 10; 40,772 were 14; 3,811 were 15; 1,934 were 16; 860 were 17; 91 were 18, and 87 were 19 and above.

The sixth grade level, however, had the least number of overaged pupils. Their ages ranged from 13 to 19 and they totalled 474,703, with 247,719 boys and 226,984 girls.

The ministry says that overaged pupils at the Grade Two level counted at 687,548; Grade Three, 675,478; Grade Four, 633,416; and Grade Five, 560,107 — A.P. Reimando

ACTION ON SABAH REFUGEES URGED

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 21 Oct 82 p 28

[Article by Nelly Sindayen]

[Text]

The brand of compassion and humanitarian treatment the Philippine government is giving Vietnamese refugees in the country should also be given to the 200,000 Filipino Muslim refugees in Sabah by facilitating their safe and fast return to their respective places of origin.

This view was held by Muslim historian-academic Dr. Alunan Glang in light of a US government report which mentioned that the number of Filipino refugees in Sabah now total about 200,000.

Taking more serious steps to ensure the Muslim refugees' safe return to Mindanao is the least the Philippine government can do for these people, said Dr. Glang.

Dr. Glang, a TOYM awardee and author of a book on Muslim history, said that past attempts by the government to bring the refugees back to their homeland should be revived.

Although they are happy and well taken cared of by the Sabah government, the refugees still want to be reunited with friends and relatives in Mindanao, Glang pointed out.

He added that it is not fair to the Sabah and Malaysian government to be burdened with the presence of these refugees, some of whom have reportedly resorted to petty theft and robbery.

Since the Mindanao war broke out in 1972, Muslims from the south, especially those from Tawi-Tawi, Sulu, Basilan, Zamboanga and nearby places have sought refuge in Sabah.

AGRICULTURE MINISTER AIMS FOR CORN TARGET

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 21 Oct 82 p 12

[Text]

Minister of Agriculture Arturo Tanco Jr. said the Philippines can now look forward to the surplus production of corn pointing out that San Miguel Corporation alone can produce an extra 360,000 tons of the grain, or 20 000 tons more than last year's imports.

San Miguel is a major producer of hybrid corn seeds. It's ₱20 million hybrid seed production center in Polomolok, South Cotabato, can process up to 20 tons of seeds per day.

"That works out to 120,000 hectares that can be supplied from this plant alone," Tanco said. "If we plant 120,000 hectares to hybrid seeds, we will already be an exporter," he added.

San Miguel's "SMC hi-yield seeds" yield over four tons per hectare. With four tons per hectare as the average yield, the 120,000 hectares should yield 480,000 tons of corn. The same area will yield less than 120,000 tons if traditional seeds are used, based on the 1981 national average yield of 0.9 ton per hectare.

SMC hi-yield hybrid corn seeds have been accredited by the government for use in the ongoing Maisagana program. The seeds are specially adapted to Philippine conditions. They possess relatively unmatched resistance to corn borer and downy mildew. They also boast of germination rates of up to 98 per cent, which is markedly superior to the 40 to 60 per cent usually obtained from other seeds.

FUEL PRICES WON'T CHANGE

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 21 Oct 82 p 12

[Text]

No dramatic changes are seen in prices of petroleum products with the forthcoming formulation of a new pricing policy by the Cabinet executive committee.

Energy Minister Geronimo Z. Velasco assured this as he explained that a number of factors are still being considered by the Cabinet in coming up with a new policy restructuring the tax components of each petroleum product.

Velasco said the new pricing policy seeks to define what a true energy cost is, taking into account its effects on various commodities.

He said pricing on every oil product will be structured in such a manner that the energy cost will be balanced against the total production cost of a certain commodity.

At the same time, Velasco said the pricing policy will be based on the "sensitivity" of the increases to the affected products or commodities.

Together with the Cabinet study, Velasco said the consumption pattern is being closely looked into as one of the basis in determining which oil product should bear the burden of having heavier taxes.

Velasco explained that the pricing of petroleum products is actually a tax issue since each of them comes from the same barrel of oil being produced by the refineries.

The varying and unequal tax imposts on each product, according to him, determine the prices.

Based on the present pricing policy, he said taxes are heavily slapped on those products whose consumers are bracketed in the upper income level.

Thus, diesel, liquefied petroleum gas, fuel oil and kerosene carry light taxes since these products are consumed by the mass population and industries.

On the other hand, aviation fuel, regular and petroleum gasoline products are at the other end of the present pricing policy since they are consumed by the high income group.

However, the present pricing policy created an imbalance in the supply and demand of petroleum products, particularly on diesel and gasoline.

The imbalance, brought about by a shift in consumption, resulted in the country importing diesel while at the same time exporting gasoline.

COLUMNIST ASKS WHAT IS A SUBVERSIVE

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 21 Oct 82 pp 6, 9

[Column by Melinda Q. de Jesus: "What is Subversive?"]

[Text] IT'S a bit alarming how the word has taken over our consciousness.

The way it has figured in the more sensational news items, one might conclude that 'subversive' has just about pushed out 'sex' as the most highly charged term these days.

According to these reports, labor leaders do it. Community workers do it. Priests and nuns have been charged with it. Young men and women caught up by the fever try it. And alas, even government officials have been suspected of it.

Not since the dark days of our colonial history and the trials of the Japanese occupation have people taken to the underground in this manner, and we gather from these reports that no place is safe. Parish convents and social centers, research offices and youth clubs are used for secret meetings where people go by aliases and carry on with all the trappings of clandestine activity, the sort that we have come to know in espionage fiction.

With the whole business played up to the hilt, with headlines screaming subversion, people are beginning to wonder what is going on. And the question that begs clarification is how a country so recently paraded as a working, thriving democracy, one that the US can be proud to claim as a friend and ally, can be plagued by so much subversion.

Perhaps there is more to this issue than meets the eye.

What are all these subversive materials, for example, that have a way of cropping up in all sorts of places?

One person who was detained claimed his Playboy collection was seized. Are pulp magazines and the like subversive? Another report had labor union materials taken from someone's house, some of which were published by the Labor Ministry itself? Are official publications on workers' rights not to be trusted? Are the books of Chairman Mao subversive? But surely after the First Lady's many visits to China, there are too many of these around to be still considered suspicious. Are the books on revolution and terrorism forbidden as material for intellectual perusal? — or films on political assassination and government takeovers? Are writings critical of government and specifically of the country's leaders frowned upon?

What about activities? Are mass demonstrations subversive? Are church meetings where people talk and discuss their problems a suspicious activity? Is the concept of the Basic Christian Community held suspect by authorities? Do experiments in community organizations especially in rural areas constitute a danger to the state? Does resistance to government policy or opposition to established political leadership invite interrogation?

These questions take us into the wild and wooly field of political, ethical, even philosophical judgments. Unfortunately decisions on these questions appear to be entrusted mainly to the military. By their training, the military tend to view such matters only from the narrow considerations of national security, and perhaps, the security of government officials.

But the fundamental concerns of the citizenry, how they live and how they cope, and how they build up their ranks the formulation of a political will and its legitimate expression which is a necessary process in a democracy — these cannot be simplified into an issue of national security.

To do so is to run the risk of undermining the initiatives for grassroots thought and action. Another effect is to sow fear in the hearts and minds of the people, and from that fear, division and disunity in the nation.

TERROR GRIPS TOWN IN SORSOGON

Manila BULLETIN TODAY in English 13 Oct 82 p 32

[Text]

A reign of terror is gripping the small town of Pilar in Sorsogon following the ambush-killing of ten Constabulary soldiers and eight other civilians aboard a minibus in that town late last month.

An informant, Ceser Salazar, news editor of MBS channel 4, and a native of Pilar, said following the incident armed clashes between PC-police and terrorist groups almost happened daily in far-flung sitios and barangays near the town proper forcing military, education and local authorities to suspend afternoon classes in the elementary and high school levels. Classes, he said, are observed from 9 a.m. to 12 noon daily.

He told BT that early last week, Manuel Lobrigo, municipal secretary of Pilar Mayor Jose Dehitta, was beheaded by armed men believed to be members of the New People's Army (NPA). The victim's head was delivered to his family but his body was nowhere to be found, he said.

He revealed that also last week, a house of a barangay captain was blown by grenades thrown by armed men.

However, he said, the barangay official and his family were out when the incident happened. (Pete Esber)

KKK LOAN ANOMALIES RAPPED--It's time First Lady and KKK [Kilusang Kabuhayan at Kaunlaran] Czar Imelda Romualdez Marcos wield an iron hand on provincial officials charged with the implementation of the government's livelihood program, who are enmeshed in various anomalies. There has been quite a number of complaints in cities and municipalities outside metro Manila against local officials fleeing KKK loan applicants, exacting something like P100 fee per thousands pesos released by the government. Deals of this sort are stipulated between the erring local officials and the applicants before the KKK applications for loans are processed. Politics and discriminations cannot be avoided in the processing of KKK loans in the provinces. Clearly, because approval or recommendation for approval of KKK loans are given to the authority of the local chief executives who are, most often than not, dictated by their partisan feelings, to the effect that applicants who are not quite sympathetic to their administration usually get negative results in their applications even if they are much qualified to acquire KKK loans. OPEC TO PROVIDE FINANCIAL AID--The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is expected to pour more petrodollars to fill in part of the Philippines' deficit in international payments. This was disclosed by Dr Abdul Amir al-Ambari, official spokesman of the Organization of Arab Exporting Countries. Al-Ambari said OPEC will also finance more development projects in the country in the coming years. He pointed out that the Arab oil-producing countries are channelling less of their investments into Western institutions and more to developing countries hit hard by oil price increases. UK AIR, RADIO AGREEMENTS--The Philippines and Britain on 22 October signed two agreements which will bolster relations between the two countries. The first agreement amended the current RP-UK air agreement. Under the amended agreement, British Airways may now stop over in Hong Kong on its way to or from Manila. However, British Airways is not allowed to bring in passengers from Hong Kong, nor can the airline load passengers bound from Manila to Hong Kong on the way back to London. The second agreement formalizes the reciprocal radio licensing accord between the two countries. The agreement enables properly licensed Filipino and British radio amateurs to operate their radio equipment in the Philippines, Britain, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. LEYTE TO PUSH INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT--A big push for industrial development is underway in Leyte, which will boost the country's exports. This was announced by President Marcos yesterday on his return to Manila from a visit to Leyte Province. He said the $1 billion industrial estate, including the $400 million copper-smelting and refinery plant, will be the biggest industrial complex in the country by 1984. The president visited the industrial development projects in Leyte together with U.S. Ambassador Michael Armacost and other top officials. The president said the Leyte copper-smelter and refinery plant will be the model for all other major industrial projects. A fertilizer plant is also being established in Leyte. Most of the projects are financed by foreign funds. The president said only $25 million will come from the national budgetary resources. He said industrial development will go hand-in-hand with agricultural development. [Text] [HK250009 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 24 Oct 82]

MOVE TO LIFE PRICE CONTROLS RAPPED--Organized labor has assailed the move to lift price controls on essential commodities, and warned that the move will aggravate workers' grievances against their employers and the government. The warning was issued by Trade Union Congress President Democrito Mendoza, following reports that the Cabinet Executive Committee will soon review price controls and may lift them. Mendoza said there is no justice in the move, inasmuch as the government and employers have opposed labor's clamor for salary increases. The review of price controls could result in the total lifting of price ceilings on all the nine essential commodities, maintenance of price controls on certain commodities, or keeping the status quo. Trade Minister Roberto Ongpin claimed the price controls could be lifted because the economy has normalized. [Text] [HK260026 Manila Far East Broadcasting Company in English 2330 GMT 25 Oct 82]

SIX NPA SUSPECTS KILLED--Government troops repelled an NPA [New People's Army] rebel attack in Abra Province, killing six dissidents and wounding seven others. A report received by AFP Chief of Staff Gen Fabian Ver indicated no casualty on the government side, except for the wounding of a civilian in a crossfire. The NPA band attacked PC [Philippine Constabulary] troopers camped at (Sitio Sinodal) in (Dayapa) while the soldiers were having breakfast. After a 30-minute firefight, the rebels withdrew upon seeing six of their comrades dead and seven others wounded. PC troopers recovered eight firearms, including an armalite rifle, a grand and a carbine. [Text] [OW251243 Quezon City RPN Television Network in English 1100 GMT 25 Oct 82]

LEE KUAN YEW LEAVES AUSTRALIA--There is a possibility that the government may invest some of its foreign reserve in Queensland. Speaking to reporters at the end of a 4-day visit to the northeastern Australian state, Mr Lee Kuan Yew said that although there were no specific investment plans at the moment, there were strong indications that Queensland was a good place to put money in. It is one of the fastest growing Australian states with a good government, which meant stability and progress. The unions there were also more realistic and had higher productivity than in the other Australian states. The prime minister, however, said whatever investment Singapore made, it would be gradual and cautious so as not to upset the market. Mr Lee Kuan Yew has now arrived in Port Moresby where he was given a ceremonial welcome, including a 19-gun salute. The prime minister was met by Papua New Guinea Prime Minister Michael Somare. This afternoon, Mr and Mrs Lee paid a courtesy call on Governor General Tore Lokoloko. Later, the prime minister had talks with Mr Somare. Mr Lee also met members of the Singapore trade delegation which is now in Papua New Guinea to explore trade possibilities in textile, shipping, engineering, timber and food. TAMIL NEWSPAPER CLOSED--A militant Tamil newspaper the "Sutantiran" was sealed early this morning under emergency regulations. Reports reaching Colombo said that its current edition contained "highly inflammatory" material which threatened the peace. Some of the copies released for sale too were confiscated. The "Sutanthiran", which is opposed to the TULF, is backed by a militant group which includes S C. Chandrahasan and Kovai Mahesan. Police are today expected to question Mr. Mahesan. Early this morning they were attempting to trace his whereabouts. The "Sutantiran"--the original Federal Party newspaper now managed by Mr. Chandrahasan, Legal Secretary of the TULF, has basically been critical of the TULF policies. The paper, edited by Kovai Mehesan, had been echoing the militant policies of the Tamil Eelam Liberation Front. Mr. Mahesan was questioned by the Army and CID recently in connection with the mining of the Karainagar causeway and the distribution of pamphlets calling for the boycott of the Presidential election. DEFENSE MINISTER OUTLINES MILITARY IMPROVEMENTS

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 3 Sep 82 pp 1, 12

[Excerpt] M. Jusuf, minister of defense and security/armed forces commander, said Thursday that ABRI [Indonesian Armed Forces] has now begun to be equipped with various kinds of modern weapons systems. But in line with the latest technological developments, members of ABRI units which handle the "sophisticated" weapons must have the education and skill levels necessary for the job. For that reason each commander must pay close attention to his troops' education and skills. Moreover, commanders must be able to provide the motivation to care for the weapons properly. General Jusuf pointed this out at Biak during the official opening of the "Gunadi" officers' quarters at Manuhua Air Base. Previously, on Wednesday afternoon at Lanuma Juanda, [Jusuf] witnessed a demonstration of an antiaircraft weapons system which consisted of a battery of guided missiles equipped with the "Giraffe" radar system. This weapon is for countering supersonic aircraft attacks.

"All of this is in the context of the continuing development of our armed forces by HANKAM [Department of Defense and Security] leadership. Problems regarding the welfare of troops and their families, the repair and construction of barracks are not problems any longer," said the minister. "That commitment will be continued, including hospital restoration and construction as well."

Jusuf also explained in this connection that a number of new accommodations would be built for ABRI members who often travel in the execution of their duties. Likewise, housing is being planned for ABRI officers who are transferred to Jakarta and other areas, in light of the difficulty these officers have in getting housing.

The defense minister disclosed that by 5 October 1982 at the latest all ABRI units should have standards in the units. Of all the kinds of vehicles, most have begun to be distributed, such as automobiles, motorcycles and the like. The purpose of this policy adopted by the leadership of the Department of Defense and Security and the government is so that ABRI members and their families can work as they should, since the means of communication have now begun to be equipped according to established standards.

Furthermore, beginning in fiscal year 1982/83 at each Kowilhan [Defense Regional Command] a soldiers' center will be built, which is hoped will become a center for ABRI and the community. Likewise at each Kodam [Military Regional Command] a building of that sort, although smaller, will be built. "Besides encouraging regional development, these buildings will at the same time be a means for motivating ABRI and the community to meet together," said Jusuf.

The minister also said that in the near future each Kodam will be outfitted with a music corps which would generate pride. High quality instruments have been ordered from the United Kingdom, the same as the musical instruments used by the music corps at the palace of Queen Elizabeth. And in regard to the many complaints of the ABRI family concerning hearses, soon hearses ordered from the main factory will arrive.

COOPERATION WITH REPUBLIC OF KOREA IN ENERGY SECTOR

Jakarta HARIAN UMUM AB in Indonesian 10 Sep 82 pp 1, 8

[Article: "Cooperation Between Indonesia and South Korea in Mining Field Is Expanded"]

[Text] Jakarta, HARIAN UMUM AB--On Thursday [9 September] President Soeharto expressed his agreement to the broadening and intensification of cooperation between Indonesia and South Korea in the fields of mining, electricity generation, and petroleum and natural gas.

According to Minister of Mining and Energy Prof Soebroto, in his statement to the press after being received by the president at the Bina Graha offices on Thursday [9 September], cooperation between the two countries was originally limited to the minerals sector. However, at present this cooperation is being expanded to the energy sector. In addition the form of the cooperation, which was originally in the technical field, as been raised to the ministerial level.

In this connection Subroto said that he had reported to the president on preparations for discussions between Indonesia and South Korea regarding cooperation in the mining, electricity generation, and petroleum and natural gas sectors. The discussions will be ended this year in South Korea.

He said that in the mining sector an agreement will be signed covering cooperation between PN Tambang Batubara and the Korean company, PT KIDECO Jaya Agung, which will process coal in East Kalimantan. In addition the Korean company also intends to work the coal mines at Ombilin.

Furthermore, a cooperative program will be carried on by the Indonesian Directorate of Power Resources and the Korean Institute of Energy Resources [KIER] involving the exchange of personnel for training in the mining field.

Regarding cooperation in the electricity generation field, Soebroto said that there will be an exchange of experts who will conduct research on the control of lightning which interrupts the flow of electricity and on the contamination of transmission channels. This cooperative effort will be carried on by the Indonesian State Electrical Company [PLN] and KEPCO (Korean Electric Power Corporation).

Meanwhile, in the petroleum field cooperative activity will be undertaken by the Indonesian Oil and Gas Institute [LEMIGAS] and KIER. There already is a production sharing contract between KODECO [Korean Development Company] and Pertamina to carry out the exploration and exploitation of petroleum deposits on the northern side of Madura island.

The minister declared that at present Indonesian sales of petroleum to South Korea amount to 10,000 barrels per day. This quantity is less than the total amount in the contract, which provides for the sale of 15,000 barrels per day. This is a result of the recession which has caused South Korea to reduce its petroleum purchases.

As a further step in the sale of LNG to South Korea, which was originally set at 1.6 million metric tons per year over a period of 20 years, this target figure has been raised to 2 million metric tons per year.

ADDITIONAL FOREIGN LOAN SOUGHT

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesian 10 Sep 82 pp 1, 11

[Article: "Additional Foreign Loan Again Under Discussion"]

[Text] Jakarta, 9 September--Governor Rachmat Saleh of the Bank Indonesia has held a series of meetings with leaders of leading Western banks in Jakarta in order to discuss the conditions for obtaining a new, multipurpose credit of between $300 and $500 million, according to foreign banking circles.

Rachmat Saleh and Minister of Finance Ali Wardhana held their discussions regarding the loan with bank leaders who were attending the IMF/World Bank conference now being held in Toronto, Canada, these sources said.

A spokesman of the Ministry of Finance could not provide any further information concerning this question because the minister and other senior officials were still in Canada. The senior officials of the Bank Indonesia also could not provide any further information.

If the bank loan is made, Indonesia will have obtained credits of more than $1 billion in the commercial banking market in the space of 12 months. Banking circles are convinced that the additional loan will be immediately needed to make up the deficit in the balance of payments and to increase domestic reserves which have declined very rapidly.

The loan under discussion and also the loans entered into by the Bank Indonesia with foreign countries total about $4 billion. This is still regarded as a healthy situation in view of the Indonesian foreign exchange reserves.

A bank official said: "They (Indonesian officials) are going around the world to find the best and most satisfactory conditions, at a rate of interest connected with the LIBOR (London Inter-Bank Offered Rate), rather than the American prime rate, which is considered too high." The bank official stated: "If Indonesia needs the loan, now is a good time to obtain it, because the difference between income and expenditures is rather small."

The ambitious Indonesian development plan has been affected by the flood of oil on the world market and by the world recession.

President Soeharto, who has been faced with a rapid decline in foreign export earnings, has recently denied the rumors that the Indonesian rupiah will be devalued in an effort to improve trading conditions.

The president has promised that the development budget of $13.76 billion for fiscal year 1982/83 (April, 1982, to March, 1983) will not be reduced despite the recession. (The state budget for 1982/1983 is Rp 15.6 [text does not state the total amount, but it is probably 15.6 trillion]).

The development expenditures in the budget for the present fiscal year are 4.5 percent higher than in the previous year.

However, the country's balance of payments is deteriorating. Indonesian reserves of foreign xchange have declined by almost 38 percent in the past 12 months to a little more than $5 billion. Total imports are still increasing and threaten to produce a deficit in the balance of payments of more than $5 billion for this year, banking sources say.

According to preliminary figures which the Bank Indonesia made public last week, the value of state oil and petroleum exports declined by 36 percent in the first half of this year, compared with the last half of the previous year. The value of non-energy exports, particularly rubber, coffee, timber, tin, and pepper, declined by 43 percent in a comparison of the same two periods.

FAMILY PLANNING SANCTIONS TO BE IMPOSED

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesian 13 Sep 82 p 9

[Article: "Fine Will Be Imposed If Fourth Child Is Born; No Salary Increase for Those Not Participating in Family Planning"]

[Excerpt] Semarang, 12 September--Participants in the national family planning program (KB) in 40 to 60 percent of the villages in the Regency of Sukoharjo who have a fourth, fifth, and additional children will be liable to a special fine. According to the local chief of the coordinating body for the national family planning program (BK-KBN), Warsono, the village regulation in this regency was ordered into effect and agreed to by the village community there in village council meetings, and the results of these village council meeting were approved by the regent of Sukoharjo.

In a conversation with an ANTARA representative Warsono on Friday [10 September] stated that 60 percent of the 167 villages in the regency have accepted and are carrying out the national family planning program, supported by the village councils, including the application of penalties against those who violate the decisions of the village councils.

The money collected by means of this special tax will be channeled into the local village health fund. The money will be used for educational development purposes such as contributing to the successful development of the family planning program, the nutrition program, and the development of the village community health program (PKMD). Each family planning participant who has a fourth child will be fined Rp 1,000, and if he has a fifth child, he will be fined twice the amount of the first time.

In another development the chief of the national family planning program in the Regency of Sukoharjo stated that to ensure the success of the national family planning program among state employees the Sukoharjo office of the Ministry of Religion has approved a regulation under which each employee, at the time he is paid, must display the "red card" showing he is a member of the family planning program. If the employee does not have or does not display his red card, he must find the red card before he is paid.

The office of the Regency of Sukoharjo has approved still another regulation. Maternity leaves for employees who have a fourth child will no longer be valid for 3 months but will only be for 2 months.

PURCHASE OF PT INDOSAT

Jakarta MERDEKA in Indonesian 7 Sep 82 p 3

[Article: "INDOSAT Takes a Further Step: Rp 17 Billion Surplus First Year"]

[Excerpts] INDOSAT, which is now a state-owned business enterprise (BUMN), in its original form was foreign-owned. The original owners of the company obtained a permit to process international telecommunications by satellite. At that time the shares of PT INDOSAT were owned by ACR/ITT of the United States. The position of the Indonesian government was very weak because, at the time the agreement was signed between Indonesia and ITT in 1967, the Indonesian financial position was not very clear.

Although in 1974 the agreement between the Telecommunications Service [PERUMTEL] and INDOSAT was revised in an effort to improve the Indonesian position, nevertheless as things turned out the government came to the conclusion that the operations of PT INDOSAT, based on the Indonesian agreement with ITT of 1967, were no longer in accordance with government policies and regulations in effect in the telecommunications sector.

In that connection, following the issuance of Presidential Decision No 52/1980, dated 30 August 1980, the president assigned to Minister Sumarlin the task of reviewing all agreements which had been made by the government and PERUMTEL with ITT, ACR [expansion unknown] and PT INDOSAT to ensure that they were brought into conformity with legislation in force in the telecommunications sector and national policy as determined by the president.

After all of the necessary teams had been formed for the purpose, on 19 September 1980 the minister of state for the control of the state apparatus [MENPAN], in the name of the Indonesian government, sent a letter to the president of ACR (the owners of INDOSAT) which communicated the desire of the Indonesian government to buy all the ACR shares in INDOSAT on the basis of a mutually profitable agreement.

After everything was ready, the discussions began on 13 October 1980, but by 5 October 1980 [as published; possibly should read 25 October 1980] no aggrement had been reached on the price of the shares which would be purchased by the Indonesian government. The Indonesian government based its calculation on the book value in effect, with several adjustments. Meanwhile, ACR based its calculation of the value of the shares on the present value, with a discount factor.

Because the discussions were making no progress, the Indonesian government made a statement that, "whatever the case, by 1 January 1981 the government will be in control of PT INDOSAT."

The second phase of the discussions was held between 17 and 20 November 1980. They resulted in an initial agreement on the sale and purchase of the shares, which was contained in the "Share Sales Agreement and Release and Indemnity Agreement." The third phase of the discussions were held between 12 and 16 December 1980, specifically to discuss the purchase price.

In the first phase of the discussions the ACR asked for $93 million for the shares. After discussions in the second phase the price was lowered to $72 million and then later reduced further to $60 million. Meanwhile the Indonesian side in the discussions, following a careful calculation of the value, offered to pay $30 million.

In later discussions the ACR further reduced its asking price to $55 million, while the Indonesian side raised its offer to $40 million. the discussion of the price of the shares lasted for some time and through discussions which became rather difficult. However, finally agreement was reached on a price of $43.6 million or about Rp 27.26 billion (at the rate of $1.00 to Rp 625).

This agreement was reached on 16 December 1980 and was later contained in the sales agreement with an advance payment of Rp 6.5 billion made 1 week after the sales agreement was signed (on 16 December 1980). The remainder of the sales price was settled on 30 December 1980 because on 31 December 1980 the banks were closed.

After completion of the transaction on 30 December 1980 all existing agreements between Indonesia and ITT/ACR from the United States were no longer in effect. Thus, since 31 December 1980 all shares in PT INDOSAT have been the property of the Indonesian government.

Later, with the issuance of Presidential Decision No 52/1980 PT INDOSAT, including the Jatiluhur Ground Station, became the property of the Indonesian government. PT INDOSAT was given the task of carrying on the operation of international telecommunications for the public. At the same time PERUMTEL was given the task of performing domestic telecommunications services for the general public.

During its first year of operations INDOSAT, as a state-owned company, has operated in a very satisfactory way. This can be seen from the receipts and expenditures of the company as contained in the annual report of the postal service for 1981.

Receipts in 1981 totaled Rp 26.678 billion, of which income from telephone services amounted to 96.46 percent; from telegraph services, 1.63 percent; from television services, 0.26 percent; and income from AVD services [Audio-Visual Division], 1.65 percent.

Expenditures during 1981 totaled Rp 8.952 billion, of which personnel expenditures amounted to 3.01 percent; operations costs were 17.94 percent; processing costs were 3.14 percent; current accounts were 8.11 percent; general administrative costs were 1.36 percent. This left a surplus of more than 66.44 percent of income or more than Rp 17 billion.

In addition to servicing its international satellite telecommunications network, PT INDOSAT has also been assigned the task of operating the existing marine cable communications system between Indonesia and Singapore, which is a part of the planned ASEAN marine cable network. Furthermore, INDOSAT has been assigned by the government with the task of taking part in a number of international telecommunications activities, through the INTELSAT system.

In addition to the marine cable between Jakarta and Singapore, which is used for a "teleconference" channel, INDOSAT is also constructing a new marine cable network between Medan and Singapore and is planning for the construction of a marine cable from Medan to Penang. Also under consideration is the possibility of establishing a marine cable between the ASEAN countries and the Middle East and France.

SOEBROTO REPORTS ON CALTEX NEGOTIATIONS

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 7 Sep 82 pp 1, 12

[Excerpts] Minister of Mining and Energy Soebroto discolsed that Caltex assets will be reassessed if the foreign oil company shifts the work contract to a production-sharing contract with Pertamina, because in a work contract the contractor retains ownership of all goods while in production-sharing goods which enter Indonesia become Pertamina's property automatically. Soebroto pointed this out in Jakarta Monday.

In the oil work contract Caltex and Pertamina signed it was stipulated that before it depreciated totally equipment would continue to be the property of the contractor. Conversely, in the production-sharing contracts which are now in force for other contractors it is stipulated that equipment will become the property of the state company at the moment it is unloaded in Indonesia, except for equipment which contractors have borrowed.

According to Minister Soebroto, Indonesia and Caltex are still continuing to bargain with each other. "Although Caltex proposed a production-sharing change to 85 (Indonesia) and 15 (Caltex), we still are asking for more than that, in accordance with the conditions in force at the present time," he said.

"Does Indonesia want a 90:10 production-sharing ratio?" asked a reporter. "That is one acceleration which is better than 85:15," he answered. He added that the production-sharing division was just one of our requests among others.

Soebroto explained that in the work contract a 60:40 division was imposed. In the past production-sharing contracts 65:35 division was applied. This developed to 67.5:32.5 at a higher level of production. In 1971 the production-sharing system developed further to 70:30.

With the renegotiations between Pertamina and its contractors in 1977, an 85:15 ratio was applied comprehensively in the production-sharing system.

"Before taxes were imposed, the division was 65:35. After taxes, the con contractor paid another 20 percent, until its share was the remaining 15 percent. This made Indonesia's allotment 85:15," said Minister Soebroto.

In touching on the drop in Caltex's production from about 700,000 barrels per day to the current level of about 500,000 barrels per day, Soebroto said it was done at Indonesia's request, in line with the policy which was applied to support OPEC oil production cuts. As an OPEC member Indonesia was only allowed to produce up to 1.3 million barrels of oil per day.

This policy was also imposed on several other oil companies whose production was quite high, such as Union, Total and Inpex. But Soebroto admitted that the drop in production was also the result, among other, of a marketing problem as well as being a drop in production from several old wells.

Because Pertamina's production is only about 85,000 barrels per day, up till now production cuts have never been imposed on it. Pertamina's drop in oil production was itself due to the unfavorable price in the world market, among other reasons.

GALUNGGUNG ERUPTIONS AFFECT THOUSANDS

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 6 Sep 82 pp 1, 9

[Excerpts] About 350,000 residents of Tasikmalaya and Garut Districts are threatened by a food crisis as a result of Mt Galunggung's continuous and prolonged eruptions. Moreover, in several places many of the residents have entered the threshold of a "critical existence." Not only are they experiencing difficulty in finding food, there are other effects on their health because of the environmental pollution.

Meanwhile they face the coming rainy season, which threatens secondary dangers as a result of flooding, lahar flows and landslides of material that has been spewed out of Galunggung until now. Besides 10 to 15 million cubic meters of lahar ready to slide down into areas in Tasikmalaya District, millions of cubic meters of sand and ash are strewn over the surrounding region which is located on the Tasikmalaya-Garut plateau.

Just at the current level, hundreds of hectares of agricultural land and its crops have been destroyed. Total losses in Tasikmalaya District are estimated at more than 30 billion rupiahs. Gartu District is suffering losses of more than 15 billion rupiahs.

In his report the Gartu district chief disclosed that the destruction of agricultural land in Garut resulted in food crisis for 84,000 residents (15,000 families). In Tasikmalaya it is estimated about 250,000 people will experience similar misfortune.

According to Adang Roosman, SH, Tasikmalaya's regional secretary, both the Tasikmalaya and Garut regional governments have said that "clearly it is beyond the limits of our capabilities" to surmount the crisis.

Mt Galunggung (2,168 meters) is at the Tasikmalaya-Garut border.

The residents added that as a result of the Galunggung eruptions, they were threatened with a slow death. Not only were they confronted by an increasingly smaller food supply, even worse they faced breathing difficulties.

One of the villages at the foot of the Talagabodas chain is in an area suffering the most, besides the other villages in Garut District. For 5 months each time Mt Galunggung erupted the area was sprayed with a rain of sand and ash. In this and several other villages in Wanaraja Subdistrict the sand and ash have piled up to a height of about 1/2 meter.

In several other villages in the Wanaraja and Karangpawitan Subdistricts are the accumulation of sand and ash has reached 20-40 cm, while in 12 other subdistricts which are categorized as having moderate damage, the sand and ash has reached 10-20 cm. Only 9 subdistricts are categorized as being lightly damaged, with a layer of ash from 5 to 10 cm.

KOMPAS' source in the West Java regional government added that the processing of evacuees as a result of the Galunggung eruptions will continue over an extended period, even though beginning in October aid will be cut off. At that time evacuees will have to vacate the makeshift quarters they have been occuppying until now.

Besides 2,878 evacuees in Garut District, according to the latest figures 24,170 persons (5,494 families) were evacuated in Tasikmalaya District.

Those figures will increase again in October-November because secondary hazards will threaten 300,000 residents in Tasikmalaya District, where there is the danger of lahar flows in the rainy season. The Garut district chief added that in the rainy season, as a result of sand and ash accumulations in the district, 44 villages in the subdistricts of Wanaraja, Karangpawitan, Sukawening and Banyuresmi will be threatened by flooding and landslides. If that indeed does happen, the amount of destroyed or greatly damaged paddy acerage will be even more extensive.

A further problem the two regions face involves not just the processing of evacuees and residents suffering from food shortages. After this, the Tasikmalaya and Garut district governments will be confronted by the difficult, long-term challenge of regional rehabilitation. "Clearly the regional governments cannot possibly handle it," it was said.

NATUNA LNG PROJECT PLANNED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 4 Sep 82 p 2

[Text] Indonesia will build a liquified natural gas (LNG) project in Natuna, in addition to two existing projects in Arun (North Sumatra) and Badak (East Kalimantan). The project will produce about 8 million tons of LNG after 1990.

This was desclosed by Drs Joedo Sumbono, chief director of Pertamina [State Oil and Natural Gas Co), in a television interview Wednesday evening.

Joedo said that the project will be built on one of the islands in the Natuna group. It will use natural gas which is produced from the extraction fields around that region.

According to KOMPAS' records, the Natuna field is one which is estimated to contain the largest amount of gas ever discovered in the whole world. This is based on past explorations made in the region.

The first study in the area was conducted by an Italian firm, which succeeded in making the gas discovery from the well it bored. Nevertheless, the firm returned the tract to Pertamina because it considered the area unprofitable. The reason was that the carbon dioxide content of the gas was too high, unprofitable if processed further. At the time, it was not yet fully realized that this natural gas would also be able to be used in the manufacture of fertilizers, LPG [liquified petroleum gas], LNG, or as a basic component of methanol.

Some time ago Minister of Mining and Energy Subroto disclosed that the natural gas discovered in Natuna represents only a fraction of the nation's wealth. Indonesia's proved reserves, he said, total about 34.5 trillion cubic feet. Reserves of about 100 trillion cubic feet of natural gas in Natuna are the largest and have the most potential. Unfortunately that natural gas has a carbon dioxide content of about 75 percent.

According to Subroto, about 49 billion cubic feet of the natural gas reserves in Natuna is definitely proved, while the remaining 98 trillion cubic feet constitutes potential reserves.
During the television interview, Pertamina's chief director said that until now Indonesia has exported about one-third of the world's requirements for LNG. In the future Pertamina plans to increase annual LNG exports from the current amount of about 10 million tons to more than 14 million tons in 1990.

SUPERVISION OF MARITIME TRAFFIC EXPLAINED

Jakarta KOMPAS in Indonesian 3 Sep 82 pp 1, 12

[Excerpts] Although the archipelagic concept has been officially recognized, Indonesia is obliged to open sea lanes for the safe passage of foreign fleets. Of course these international lanes must exist. Nevertheless, foreign vessels should not then use these lanes simply as they please. The principle of requesting permission continues to be in force, for which the Department of Foreign Affairs is the authorized agency.

This, among other things, was pointed out by Roesmin Nurjadin, minister of communications, in response to a reporter's question. The question was in regard to a Thai official's statement in the press that concerned Soviet surveillance of the Sunda and Lombok Straits, the sea lanes of its fleet which replaced the shallow Malacca Strait.

"I am not going to talk about this matter, because it is the Department of Foreign Affairs' right to do so," said Roesmin, when he was asked further about the question of permission for foreign warships which wanted to pass through the two strategic straits.

What is clear, he said, is that in Indonesia there is a principle, namely the principle of requesting permission and of notification. The entire region of Indonesia's territorial waters must be secured, both for the Indonesian national fleet iteslf and for foreign fleets. The understanding of that security, among other things, is in the form of making available the means of navigation, communications, search and rescue, etc., while physical security is the responsibility of the Department of Defense and Security.

Roesmin pointed out further that the Indonesian Air Force had purchased three Boeing 737-200b surveillance aircraft.

These planes are used to conduct surveillance throughout the Indonesian territory. The aircraft, which have the latest electronic equipment, are capable of detecting the means of communication in Indonesia, specifically maritime communications. "The planes can detect up to the exclusive economic zone," he said.

Roesmin used the example of fishing vessels whose number was not in accordance with the number permitted for operations in a certain area. If the government issues operating permits in that area for only 100 fishing boats, but after the Boeing 737 is deployed 500 vessels are detected operating there, then it is clear that there is a violation in the area.

Then the Boeing 737 will report immediately, either to the navy, customs, KPLP [Coast and Seaward Defense Command] or Satpolair [Water Police Unit]. And also, all kinds of foreign ships passing through Indonesia's territorial waters can be detected with these modern aircraft.

LABOR STRIKES--Jakarta, HARIAN UMUM AB--About 48 percent of the strikes in Indonesia are over salary questions. The TIT [Annual Bonus] or the THR [Holidays Allowance] and dismissals of workers account for 6 percent of the strikes. During fiscal year 1981/1982 there were 192 strikes in Indonesia. The area most affected by strikes during this year was West Java, which accounted for 81 strikes of 42 percent of the total. Other areas affected by strikes were Jakarta, with 69 strikes or 36 percent; East Java, with 19 strikes or 10 percent; and other areas accounting for less than 5 percent; East Kalimantan, North Sumatra, Maluku, and South Sumatra. The sectors where most strikes occurred were in the textile industry (12 percent), automotive vehicle assembly industry (10 percent), pharmaceutical industry (7 percent), and the timber and ceramics industry (6 percent). According to data from the Ministry of Manpower and Transmigration, strikes often occurred because the workers wish to obtain their demands quickly. Or, the workers resort to strikes to exert pressure on management. Strikes of this kind are called "wildcat" and illegal strikes because they do not follow the procedures of the laws in effect. Strikes also occur because of the attitude of management which at times does not show good will or does not listen to or is not open-handed in its relations with the workers (and the trade unions). The question of strikes also involves the attitude of trade union leaders who do not always fully support preventing strikes. This may be the result of the fact that they feel their position is not strong enough, their organization is not well developed, or they have a mental attitude which places their personal interests ahead of the interests of the organization and the members of the organization. PRIVATE ORGANIZATION URGES BOYCOTT OF U.S. GOODS

Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 27 Sep 82 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts]

PETALING JAYA, Sun. — A rally was held here today to formally launch the boycott against American goods and companies as a protest against the massacre of Palestinian civilians in Beirut.

The Joint Action Committee for Solidarity with the Palestinians which staged the rally, listed a total of 43 American goods and companies that will face the boycott.

The items listed include baby and fast foods, fruit, soft drinks, petrol and cigarettes. Three oil companies and three banks are also included.

The committee, comprising representatives of 21 voluntary organisations, was formed earlier in the week following Abim's initiative.

The protest is directed at the U.S. Government, which has been held partly responsible for the killing of civilians since the Israelis buy arms and other military replenishments from the Americans.

Present were the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) Envoy to Malaysia, Mr Ahmed al-Farrar, Abim acting president Siddiq Fadil, chairman of the Islamic Scholars' Association Ustaz Ahmad Awang and chairman of the Selangor Chinese Traders' Association Ng Fook Heng.

Encik Siddiq called on the Malaysian Government to take more positive steps to help solve the dispute. He said mere criticism or condemnation and financial assistance were not sufficient since the Israelis were known to ignore world opinion.

Encik Siddiq reiterated that the Government could perhaps initiate the setting up of a buffer force to be stationed in Beirut. The force should comprise men from the non-aligned nations and others who are members of the Organisation of Islamic Conference, of which Malaysia is a member.

During the rally, Ustaz Ahmad donated $4,000 from the Association to the PLO. The PLO Envoy also spoke on the Palestinian issue.

In KUALA TRENGGANU, the Minister in the Prime Minister's Department, Datuk Haji Mohamad Nasir, welcomed the campaign to boycott all American goods. He expressed the hope that the boycott would continue until the problem in Lebanon was resolved.

Meanwhile, Abim leaders will call on Information Minister Encik Mohamad Adib Haji Adam on Wednesday to seek Radio Television Malaysia's co-operation in the boycott campaign.

An Abim spokesman said the movement would ask RTM to announce the goods to be boycotted.

RTM would also be asked not to put on the air American programmes such as Dallas, Buck Rogers, and ABC Wide World of Sports.

The spokesman said that RTM would, on the other hand, be asked to broadcast programmes and films showing the struggle of the Palestinians and the atrocities of the Zionists against them.

In KUALA PILAH, the Congress of Unions of Employees in the Public and Civil Service (Cuepacs) urged the people to join in the boycott.

RACIAL DISTRUST MOUNTING IN NEW CALEDONIA

Canberra THE AUSTRALIAN in English 24 Sep 82 p 12

[Article by Sally Carthew]

[Text]

FRANCE is reported to have moved in a crack CRS force – the equivalent of the Special Air Service – in a large-scale tightening of security measures as a Front Independiste meeting today of Melanesians in the New Caledonian capital, Noumea, threatens to spark a violent reaction from an increasingly volatile anti-independence movement.

Resentment has grown among anti-independence factions since last December when France announced its intention to rule by ordinance to hasten reforms seen as synonymous with movement towards independence.

The Movement for a French Republican New Caledonia (RPCR) coalition, which at the time held the majority in the Territorial Assembly, opposed all reforms, especially one aimed at returning land to its traditional Kanak (Melanesian) owners, and rejected the bill to authorise rule by ordinance. An Act of Parliament in February gave the government authority to issue the ordinances for political, social and economic reform, relegating the Territorial Assembly to a purely advisory role.

The coalition disintegrated in June when the RPCR's partner, the centrist Federation for a New Society (FNSC), crossed the floor to form a new coalition with the Front Independentiste, leaving a government council, elected from the assembly, with a Front Independence majority.

The Territorial Assembly is composed of 15 members of the RPCR, 14 members of the Front Independentiste and seven members of the FNSC who hold the balance of power.

In July, the Assembly formally rejected the land-tenure ordinance and ordinances for the recognition of Melanesian cultural identity and social and economic development of disadvantaged areas. But the four ordinances, with local representative suggestions for amendments, will be submitted to the French Council of State before adoption by the government and ratification by Parliament in February, 1983.

The disruption of the Assembly on July 22 by 30 anti-independentistes, armed with clubs, marked a turning point in the tension over the reforms which are designed to lead to the islands' independence.

The July incident came as the Assembly voted on the controversial ordinance for land tenure reform, entailing the formation of a land board to reclaim land for restitution to the original Kanak owners. Ten thousand demonstrators gathered in the main square and demanded rejection of the ordinance and dissolution of the Assembly. Brawls broke out between demonstrators and Melanesians.

Since then, as well as the mainstream anti-independence movement composed of supporters of the reactionary RPCR party and Caldoches (descendents of early settlers), a number of extremist right-wing groups, alleged to be armed, have emerged. Their ranks are said to include Pieds Noirs, embittered French colonists from Algeria.

According to the leader of the Parti National Caledonien which represents the Caldoches, Mr Georges Chatenay, the Pieds Noirs, who number about 1000, are an unknown quantity. "They live in the past and cannot see that the situation is different here.

"I hold the RPCR responsible for the present situation in regard to the Melanesians."

The land-tenure reform has been the main cause of bitterness among the Caldoches whose families have worked on the land for generations.

The board set up by the reform, within areas where it recognises traditional land rights, will be empowered to acquire land through private sales, pre-emption and expropriation.

The Kanaks make up 43 per cent of a population of 140,000. The remainder comprises Europeans (39 per cent), Polynesians (17 per cent) and a large number of Asians. Almost half the population is under 20 years of age.

Until recently, overt racism was rare and in fact, most so-called whites have at least one non-European ancestor. All races attend the same schools and work together. But racial distrust has developed.

"On the 14th of July we used to all dance in the streets, but this is no longer possible. After races in the bush everyone used to take part in a big party on the racecourse, now both blacks and whites hurry home," one Caldoche said.

Requests for a referendum on independence and the reforms have been refused and many New Caledonians consider that the Mitterrand Government is meeting the demands of the Front Independentiste at their expense.

The Front Independentiste envisages total reclamation of land by Melanesians and a Kanak socialist independence — a concept of independence said to be unacceptable to the majority of the population, including 25 per cent of the Melanesians.

A tribal elder from the Isle of Pines, Mr Francois Noere, said a socialist regime would "break down all edifices of traditional culture and isolate New Caledonia", making it vulnerable to manipulation from outside.

Mr Chatenay is urging the Caldoches to lay down their guns. He is negotiating with the Front Independentiste in an attempt to create accord between Kanaks and Caldoches, and his suggestions for a multi-racial independence recognising the Melanesian heritage have been well received by moderates in the Front Independentiste.

But the Caldoches, who produce beef and coffee on large properties, see the land reforms as a grave injustice and betrayal of their loyalty to France.

Mr Stanley Camerlyndk of the FNSC warned that the July events had been "symbolic", setting a precedent for future violence.

"People have been caught up in a kind of psychosis. They are afraid of what the future may hold — when people are frightened they make mistakes," he said.

Mr Camerlynck said he saw the bush and the islands, isolated and difficult to police, as the greatest area of potential problem. "There are extremists among Kanaks and Caldoches," he said.

To the members of the Front Independentiste the July incident was almost an act of sacrilege. "Under our laws, passed on by the elders, we don't do things like that. We consider that this disqualifies these factions from further discussion as to the future of New Caledonia," the leader of the Front Independiste, Mr Jean-Marie Tjibaou, said.

"Our people were enraged by the events, and we had a lot of trouble keeping them calm afterwards.

"The Kanaks have always been a very peaceful people and that is why we were subjected to colonialism.

"Like other Pacific islanders we have a tradition of welcoming strangers — a tradition which was used against us."

Of fears that people would be asked to leave the country with the advent of independence, Mr Tjibaou said: "We are no more savage than anyone else. People will have the option of taking up Kanak citizenship or preserving their own. They are welcome to stay providing that they are prepared to accept the new institutions which we will create. We will need labor and expertise, so no one will be asked to leave.

"For us the main issue is land; the reclamation of land taken from us. France is moving in the right direction with the reforms."

The Front Independentiste have released a program for independence that begins this month with the take-over of non-urban lands, moving towards total control of all land outside Noumea by September, 1983. A provisional date for independence has been set — September 24, 1984.

SOLUTIONS TO ECONOMIC PROBLEMS EXAMINED

Canberra THE AUSTRALIAN in English 24 Sep 82 p 17

[Text]

GOVERNMENTS in Papua New Guinea have moaned for years about being blamed for economic disasters caused by others.

Now, thanks mostly to the recent election, phrases such as "international commodities market collapse" and "unacceptably-high American interest rates" trip freely from the tongue of any grassroots MP addressing a group of semi-literate constituents.

Of course, PNG has an unusually open economy, more vulnerable than most to market moods. But this easy shrugging off of any real responsibility for the performance of the economy has been compounded by the change in government in early August.

The government of Sir Julius Chan was eager in its last few months to spread the gloomy gospel of international export crop price collapse, and felt after its defeat that the Pangu camp of Mr Michael Somare had slyly blamed it for the poor cash crop returns.

Normally, Bougainville copper contributes about kina 50 million ($35.5 million) annually to the PNG economy. But because of copper prices and also, to a far lesser extent, falling grades, its contribution will be nothing this year and next year.

Prices for the country's non-mineral commodities are expected to average 30 percent less in real terms during this decade than in the late 1970s.

The answer, according to the governing Pangu party's policy document — its little blue book — is to stabilise prices in stores, encourage better prices for crops, work to introduce cheaper and alternate forms of energy, speed up appropriate foreign investment, streamline work permits and National Investment and Development Authority procedures, promote PNG people into more businesses, change the system of land procedures so that land is quickly available for rural and industrial development, plan resettlement schemes and industrial estates, support trade unions and healthy industrial relations, balance the programme of development in the transport sector and develop more tourism on PNG's terms.

Government spending is to be pruned back even further than this year's 3 per cent. Although revenue shortfalls caused the Chan government to cut its expenditure plans by k9 million following a mid-year review, the lion's share of this money was taken from capital works that had not yet begun.

Development

A result has been indirectly to shift the brunt of the unemployment problem on to the private sector where sub-contractors, in Lae especially, have been going through very trying times.

But now the Somare Government is seriously discussing the possibility or making several thousand public servants redundant. Golden handshakes, determined by salary scale and years of service, will conceal the longer term budgetary benefit initially.

It is also likely to scale down overseas commercial borrowing, debt repayments have risen from K56 million in 1980 to more than K100 million this year, although a large portion of this sum is for the development of the Ok Tedi gold/copper mine due to be flying out its first gold shipment in mid-1984.

The Government has pressed, like its predecessor, for a revision of the current five-year aid agreement with Australia. Reversing its previous proudly-held policy of seeking a 5 per cent annual reduction in aid in real terms, it now wishes to see zero decline until mid-1985, then a 2 per cent decline until the agreement expires in mid-1986.

This would amount to an extra $13 million this year, on top of the $242 million already allocated. And already, because of the contraction of Papua New Guinea's budget and the topping up of the aid figure to keep pace, as agreed, with the Australian inflation rate, the actual proportion of the PNG budget given in untied Australian aid has increased again during the last couple of years, following a sharp decline from about 50 per cent at Independence in 1975 to about 28 per cent in 1980.

The Australian Prime Minister, Mr Fraser, is keeping PNG waiting on his answer on the aid review, perhaps partly to give the new government time to show its true resolve.

The kina, valued at about $1.35, will probably remain strong, or overvalued, depending on your outlook. There continues to be a difference of opinion on this between the finance department and the central bank, the Bank of Papua New Guinea, which is more keen to let the kina fall a little.

These options, now being considered as the budget, to be handed down on Melbourne Cup day, is finalised, are principally those of the bureaucracy, and are considered unexceptional by the private sector.

But the business world does raise its eyebrows at statements like that of the deputy prime minister, former economics student, Mr Paias Wingti, who said: "Although we are seeking to encourage growth, we are still more concerned to see that the resulting benefits are distributed fairly."

For there has been zero growth in the 1980s, a decade which is already seeing the beginning of a pattern of mass urban youth unemployment, with its inevitable result in a crime increase. Most Papua New Guineans in employment are comparatively young.

The chairman of the biggest commercial bank, Mr Henry Klink, took on that post before he was 25. Thus today's graduates, let alone high school leavers, are already queueing up for jobs that won't be vacated for 30 or 40 years.

Red tape

In this context, lack of growth spells big trouble, though there is currently some debate about whether the official economic data have failed in the past to present a positive enough picture.

The commanding heights of the private sector remain in expatriate hands, and this will surely continue until the natural enthusiasm of most Papua New Guineans for business is linked to an insistence on building capital, despite the extensive demands of the extended family.

The Government has promised to cut the cumbersome red tape that surrounds potential investors in PNG, though this has been promised before. The private sector would, on the whole, prefer the Government to back away from the current wide-scale extension of its business activities, and concentrate on improving — or providing — basic services.

More than 20,000 people are now employed by public enterprises, compared with 50,000 public servants. A total of about k450 million of public funds has been injected into these 42 enterprises, of which according to Professor Michael Trebilcock, visiting researcher with the private sector's Institute of National Affairs, only six usually earn a normal commercial return on capital.

MINERAL INDUSTRY PROSPECTS EXAMINED

Canberra THE AUSTRALIAN in English 24 Sep 82 p 15

[Text]

IF PROOF was needed that the Papua New Guinean economy is in serious trouble, the latest financial report from Bougainville Copper Ltd provided it.

For the first time since establishing its huge copper and gold mine on the PNG island of Bougainville 10 years ago, BCL is losing money. In the first six months of 1982 the company's consolidated net loss was $19.77 million. Further losses are expected.

For PNG, which normally relies on BCL for its single biggest income contribution, this is extremely bad news.

It is also rather embarrassing for BCL, a subsidiary of CRA, which is in turn a subsidiary of the London-based Rio Tinto-Zinc Corporation Limited. In 1969 the chairman of Rio Tinto-Zinc, Sir Val Duncan, described the Bougainville mine as the "jewel in our crown", and until recently BCL has had a reputation as a super profit-maker.

In 1978, for instance, it made $183.8 million — the biggest profit recorded that year by an Australian company.

What has gone wrong? BCL general manager, Mr Paul Quodling, says the explanation is quite simple.

"Metal prices are the lowest they've been since the end of the war — probably in real terms since the 1920s," he said.

Since the price slump is a result of a general decline in international business activity, there is nothing that either BCL or the PNG Government can do to speed up recovery. They have time on their side, since ore reserves indicate the Bougainville mine is good for another 20 years.

Mr Quodling does not expect the recession to last more than three or four years.

"We've always had a highly fluctuating income," he said. "Metal prices, particularly copper, have always been up and down. This is a particularly bad down.

"But once we ride over this period, the prognosis in the longer term is still quite good."

Meanwhile, the mine is not much more than a holding operation, and there are rumors that some of the 4500 employees are in danger of losing their jobs. Mr Quodling denies this, but it is a qualified denial.

"We will be looking at our activities and curtailing some activities not essential to production," he said. "This would result in a decrease in job opportunities, but there's no retrenchments of our own staff."

Despite the discouraging outlook, PNG continues to pin its hopes of economic salvation on mineral production. With the agricultural sector in the doldrums, and with the absence of any secondary industry to relieve the dependence on export income, it has no other option.

The main source of hope at present is the huge new gold and copper project at Ok Tedi, about 18km from the Irian Jaya border in the Star mountains. The story of Ok Tedi is an example of the breathtaking speed at which PNG has been thrust into the twentieth century.

Discovery

Until 1963, when the first Australian government patrol officer fought his way through the dense rain forest and rugged terrain, the people of the Star mountains had never encountered Europeans. Less than 20 years later they are part of one of the most technically challenging mining operations ever undertaken.

The first patrol officer noticed green-tinged pebbles, evidence of copper mineralisation at Mt Ian, 6km north of the mine site at Mt Fubilian. He took samples back to his superiors, but the significance of his discovery was missed.

Five years later, geologists employed by the American Kennecott Copper Corp discovered mineralised float at the Ok Tedi-Ok Menga confluence, and traced it back to its source at Mt Fubilian. Extensive exploration during the next three years confirmed substantial tonnages of copper ore there.

But after unproductive talks with the PNG Government — then on the verge of independence — Kennecott withdrew from the project in 1975. The government decided to investigate further on its own, and to try and interest other major companies in eventual management of the mine.

The investigations revealed mineral wealth beyond the government's, and probably Kennecott's, wildest dreams. Capped with gold and containing a porphry copper core, Fubilian is one of the most valuable mountains in the world.

Ok Tedi Mining Ltd, a public company which plans to invest $1300 million in the project, was formed in February last year. The PNG Government has a 20 per cent holding in the company.

The open-cut mine at Mt Fubilian is expected to have a working life of 25 to 30 years.

The first stage of production will begin in 1984, mining and processing 22,500 tonnes a day of the gold-bearing ore cap. This will provide an early cash flow before stage two starts in 1986, when both gold and copper ore will be mined and treated.

In the third and final stage, scheduled to begin in 1989, 45,000 tonnes of copper will be mined a day.

The potential return from the first stage alone, during which 1200 ounces of gold ore will be processed a day, is substantial.

But it is not as enormous as was envisaged when the decision to go ahead was made. At that time the international gold price was about $US850 an ounce. It is now about $US430.

The company is relying on the income from the first stage to help finance the second and third and to repay some of its debts. Before an ounce of gold is extracted it will have spent about $700 million.

Enthusiasm

The main reason for the huge pre-production expenses, is the mine's inaccessibilty. Faced with building everything from roads to towns to the mine itself, Bechtel-MKI, the prime contractor, was forced to bring in all the nec-

Eager to please both the provincial and national governments, and no doubt wary of creating the sort of resentment the BCL mine has caused at Bougainville, the company stresses locals will be involved in the project as much as possible.

It points out that 80 per cent of the more than 3000 people already employed by Bechtel-MK are Papua New Guineans.

But the number of nationals employed will drop rapidly when construction is over, and a study of the project's social and economic impact found only a small proportion of people in the western province will benefit directly from the mine. Most will receive only indirect advantages, such as the use of facilities built by the company.

The same study found, despite the financial gain to the national government in the form of its 20 per cent equity, taxes and royalties, the project was likely to have only weak links with the country's economy as a whole.

The governor of the Bank of Papua New Guinea, Sir Henry Torobert, disagrees. He says Ok Tedi already is an important factor in the national economy because of the foreign investment it has so far attracted.

Sir Henry believes Ok Tedi is one of the few bright spots on an otherwise gloomy economic horizon. "It's about the only positive sign so far as investment is concerned right now."

IRIAN JAYA REBEL LEADER ARRESTED IN RABAUL

Melbourne THE AGE in English 21 Sep 82 p 9

[Text]

PORT MORESBY, 20 Sept. — Irian Jayan guerilla leader Seth Rumkorem and nine of his men have been arrested and jailed in Rabaul, Papua New Guinea — after a 1300-kilometre canoe voyage to escape punishment at the hands of the Indonesian Government.

Foreign Affairs and police officials here believe Mr Rumkorem was attempting a desperate voyage across the Pacific to seek political asylum in either the Solomon Islands or Vanuatu.

Rabaul police arrested the refugees and impounded their frail 12-metre outrigger canoe after they called in at Rabaul on Friday for food, fuel and other supplies.

It was not known at what point on the coast Mr Rumkorem's voyage began between Jayapura, Irian Jaya's capital, and the PNG border town of Vanimo.

In Rabaul District Court today, the 10 faced charges of illegally entering PNG. None entered a plea and they were remanded in custody until 28 September.

Mr Rumkorem is one of the "old guard" leaders of the splintered Operasi Merdeka Papua (OPM), which has been waging an intermittent "war" against Indonesia since the former Dutch colony was incorporated into Indonesia in 1963.

Foreign Affairs sources said Mr Rumkorem's OPM faction had been largely inactive over the past few years, unlike "other ratbag OPM factions that believe in a military solution".

"Nevertheless, the Indonesians would probably like him to be returned to Irian Jaya to settle old charges," said one source.

For this reason, it was thought unlikely that Mr Rumkorem or his followers would be forcibly repatriated to the Indonesian authorities.

However, should the Rabaul District Court convict the group of illegal entry, the PNG Foreign Affairs Department could be faced with difficulties in "disposing" of them.

Both the Governments of the Netherlands and Sweden, once popular destinations for OPM dissidents, have indicated that they are not interested in taking more political refugees. And it is not known if Vanuatu—publicly sympathetic to the OPM separatists—would want a growing colony of political activists.

Yesterday, PNG's new Foreign Affairs and Trade Minister, Mr Namaliu—asked to comment on the Rumkorem arrest — repeated his statement on Thursday that illegal entrants would be "dealt with according to the law". AAP

PRESIDENT HOLDS POST ELECTION PRESS CONFERENCE

Colombo DAILY NEWS in English 23 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] President J.R. Jayewardene yesterday said that he planned a post-mortem on the presidential election results before deciding when he would call the next parliamentary election.

"In any case I must have it before July 1983. It's a question of a few months," he told foreign correspondents who were here to cover the October 26 election.

How long would it take and how thorough was that post-mortem going to be?

"Depends on the state of the body," laughed the President, who remarked that he had had more fun fighting the 1977 election from the opposition than this week's election from the government.

He categorised last Wednesday's battle as "mathematical" saying: "I was fighting the 50 percent, not my oppopent. It is very difficult to get 50 percent."

He declared that he would not have liked a second count because that would have meant he did not have the absolute majority support of the electorate. Some of the points he made yesterday were:

--The emergency was not going to be kept going for long. "It'll only be a matter of a few days, perhaps."

--He was not planning any review of Mrs Bandaranaike's civic rights. The opposition raised this during the campaign, but the people voted against them. The question of review was one for the President. The election was no reason for review. Was he planning to review it in the near future?--Not now."

--The people of the Jaffna district had voted against Eelam. This was clear if the votes polled by the two anti-Eelam parties that ran there were totalled. He had always argued that the majority in the North and the East did not favour Eelam.

Onions and chillies were a factor on which the SLFP won votes in Jaffna. He would continue his dialogue with the TULF.

--Did he, in his campaigning round the country, find some of his MPs unpopular and were any changes due?

"In any case I'll have to do that. After five years changes are necessary."

Any changes in the cabinet? "Not as a result of the election."

--He never had any doubts he would win. The 1977 figures had almost pre-determined that. "It's a mathematical victory," joked Mr Jayewardene.

--What did Mr Jayewardene feel was the most important factor that gave him this victory? During his campaign round the country what did he consider the people most appreciated about his policies?

"I don't think I went into that very deeply. Most people appreciated freedom. Not only freedom in a political sense, but the freedom to do a job, the freedom to live and eat as you want. The youth especially seemed to like it."

Mr Jayewardene said his strategy for calling an early election was influenced by the fact that the opposition was in hopeless disarray.

"I thought let's take them on when they are not prepared, and before they get together either as the SLFP or around a common candidate."

Asked whether he was concerned about the SLFP gaining votes above their 1977 level, he said: "I must be concerned when my opponent gets stronger. If they were not in disarray, they would have been stronger."

"The timing of the election was governed by the disarray in the opposition. I had no doubt that whenever we called it, we would not be defeated whether the election was this year or next year. But then it might have been harder to fight the 50 percent."

Discussing the World Bank and the IMF, Mr Jayewardene said that he fully endorsed a recent statement by India's Finance Minister that the developing countries could not do without ehse agencies.

"We might not agree with their policies but we need their money," he said, explaining that Sri Lanka's government revenue was swallowed by recurrent expenditure alone, leaving nothing for development.

MAHAVELI PROJECT SOLVES ENERGY CRISIS

Colombo SUN in English 23 Oct 82 p 4

[Article by Suren Peiris]

[Text] Sri Lanka at present has an installed capacity of 330 M.W. and an energy generation of 1500 Giga watt hours. This gives a generation rate of 74.2 kilowatt hours per capita, which is one of the lowest rates in Asia, compared with 130.0 for India, 315 for Philippines, 479 for Malaysia and 4,325 for Japan.

About 75 percent of the population of Sri Lanka live in rural areas; only a little over 10 percent has an electricity supply. The industrial development plans of the Government, including the establishment of the free trade zone are also dependant on the availability of additional power resources.

Another factor which came into consideration is the very high rate of inflation prevailing throughout the world and this upward trend would continue in the coming years.

The longer the implementation of a project is delayed, the higher the eventual construction cost would be. It was under these circumstances that the Government of President J.R. Jayewardene decided to accelerate the implementation of the Mahaveli programme.

Also it is seen that the hydro-power generation capacity in the next two to three years will be insufficient to meet the requirements. Therefore, action was taken by the Ministry of Power and Energy to meet the short-term requirements by the installation of gas turbine plants with a total installed capacity of 60 M.W. Additional gas turbine plants will also be installed to meet the requirements up to the end of 1983, when the first hydro-power installation under the accelerated Mahaveli programme is scheduled to be commissioned.

Prior to this, two small hydro-power stations of 40 M.W. at Bowatenne and another at 30 M.W. at Canyon would be commissioned. But it has been seen that this too would not be sufficient to meet the nation's power requirements. The Bowatenne project was commissioned in 1981.

The accelerated programme has been designed not only to provide a perennial water supply to the lands for cultivation but also to add 450 M.W. to the national power supply.

Under the Victoria project, hydro-power of 210 M.W. will be installed with a further provision of another about 210 M.W. to be installed later. Further, under the Maduru Oya project which is to be completed this year, there is provision for a small power house with an installed capacity of 9.75 M.W. will be constructed.

Under the Kotmale project, it has been proposed to install two units of 67 M.W. each, at the power plant capable of generating 400 million K.W. hours of firm energy and about 100 million K.W. hours of secondary energy. Under the Randenigala Project which is expected to begin this year, it has been proposed to have an installed capacity of 122 M.W. Also under the construction of the Rantembe reservoir, the power plant to be installed will have an installation of around 49 M.W.

According to the generation expansion planning study of the Ceylon Electricity Board (October 1981) the demand forecast in respect of the power needs has been estimated as:

Year	Maximum demand on M.W.
1981	370
1982	425
1983	500
1984	560
1985	630
1986	700
1987	770

The contribution from the Mahaveli programme towards the generation of power would be as follows:

Bowathenna	40 M.W. x 1 --	40 M.W.
Victoria	70 M.W. x 3 --	210 M.W.
Kotmale	67 M.W. x 2 --	134 M.W.
Randenigala	61 M.W. x 2 --	122 M.W.
Rantembe	24.5 M.W. x 2 --	49 M.W.
Kotmale Extension	67 M.W. x 1 --	69 M.W.
Victoria Extension	210 M.W. x 1 --	210 M.W.
	Total:	834 M.W.

Additionally provision has been made to install another 210 M.W. power plant at the Victoria Project by the construction of another tunnel at a later date. Further, the Canyon Power Project would have a power plant for about 30 M.W.

It has been estimated that the cost of generation of energy by fuel is 20 times more than that of hydro-power. Further, it has been seen that the cost to generate energy by using fuel is about Rs. 2 per K.W. hour and through hydro-power it is only 10 cents.

Therefore, undoubtedly it could be said that the Mahaveli Project would meet the energy requirements of the country.

FURTHER MODIFICATION ON PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION

Colombo SUN in English 25 Oct 82 p 1

[Article by Lalith Allahakoon]

[Text]

The "Proportional" Representation system of voting which is expected to come into operation during the forthcoming General Election is to undergo further modifications.

One major change now being examined by experts is the introduction of a cluster system — a method which will enable political parties contesting General Elections to determine the order in which the candidates should be picked.

According to the proposed system a number of polling booths will be allocated to each candidate of respective parties, and arrangements will also be made to exhibit the names of candidates against the symbol in the ballot paper.

The list of candidates of each party will also be introduced so that the "first" in the list will be elected to the House automatically if the party to which he belongs secures a higher number of votes.

The election officer of each district will subsequently determine the number of seats secured by each party after considering the votes cast, so enable him to elect the MP according to the votes obtained in their respective clusters.

Another system now being considered is to prepare the priority list based on the votes cast in electoral district.

SLFP ANALYSES DEFEAT

Colombo THE ISLAND in English 26 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Text]

THE Secretary of the SLFP in a press statement issued yesterday attributes the defeat of the SLFP to 'delay in solving domestic problems' of the SLFP, the role of LSSP candidate Dr. Colvin R. de Silva and the advantage enjoyed in the Press, Radio and TV to the maximum by the government to 'hoodwink the masses'.

The following is the full text of Mr. Wickremanayake's statement:—

Sri Lanka Freedom Party expresses its gratitude to 2,548,438 voters and all anti-UNP political parties and groups who waged a determined attempt by using their vote to oust the undemocratic administration of Mr. J. R. Jayewardene on 20th October, 1982.

Although it was unsuccessful, the results show that over 700,000 more people than the number voted for the SLFP in 1977 have recorded their disapproval of the policies of the UNP administration. This is indeed a great encouragement to the patriotic forces of this country.

It is true that the differences that existed within our own ranks and the delays in solving the domestic problems of our party have also contributed to some extent to weaken our campaign.

We believe that all anti-UNP forces expected a single common candidate to face the election against President J. R. Jayewardene. Our attempts to achieve this end was not entirely successful due to the views held by the leaders of the LSSP who thought that they had a right to be considered by all anti-UNP forces to be the common candidate who could defeat the UNP. This selfish approach to important national political issues had brought great disaster even in the past as it has done at this time. The legal argument submitted by Dr. Colvin R. de Silva during the election campaign against our candidate to the effect that even if he won, he would be disqualified, which was made use of by Mr. J. R. Jayewardene in his campaign confused the minds of the voters and probably compelled them to refrain from voting for our candidate. We consider this as a great betrayal of the peoples cause.

The Government of President Jayewardene made use of the advantages they enjoyed in the Press, Radio and TV to the maximum to hoodwink the masses and to put across their point of view only. In this situation the contribution made by 'Dinakara' and 'Aththa' papers to protect the peoples cause will be highly appreciated by all patriotic forces.

We were aware at the beginning of the campaign, the tremendous hardships we had to face against the unreasonable attempts of the Government, financial and other difficulties which the Government was not facing due to the fact that they are in power. Yet the courage and determination displayed by the members of the SLFP, as well as the activities of the anti-UNP parties were admirable. The voters of Jaffna who were benefited by the Agricultural policies of our government had shown their solidarity with the other section of the country who voted against the UNP. To them we express our appreciation.

The people's verdict could be used by the Government to continue their undemocratic and dictatorial methods to maintain them in power. We warn the masses that the Government will definitely pass more burdens on the people in the next few weeks. The Government in an economic mess which is unable to present the budget is groping in the dark and playing with the lives of the people. The international money lending institutions are discouraging any relief to the poor in the form of food subsidies and the like.

In this situation we point out the necessity for all anti-UNP forces to get together on a common programme of work to face any situation that will be created by the UNP Government and safeguard the interests of the people.

TULF CHARGED WITH ISSUING LEAFLET

Colombo THE ISLAND in English 26 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Article by D.B.S. Jeyeraj]

[Text]

The General-Secretary of the All-Ceylon Tamil Congress, Mr. Kumar Ponnambalam yesterday charged that the leaflet calling upon Tamils to vote for the Tamil Congress had been issued by the TULF itself. Mr. Ponnambalam, in a statement to "The Island", states that realising the boycott was a failure, the TULF had issued this leaflet to save face.

The text of Mr. Ponnambalam's statement is as follows.

"It's a scream to hear Amirthalingam say that he expected President Jayewardene to win as that was his reading of the situation in the country. With seven TULF MPs including himself being out of the island for the good part of a month before the elections, how he came to such a conclusion with pompous finality beats me. Perhaps, he was only reflecting what he really wished to happen at this election.

"Amirthalingam's saying that the TULF was not concerned about the election and kept out of it and did not carry out a systematic campaign of boycott is absolutely false. For, in the statement that they released to only the Tamil papers on September 19, 1982, they called upon the people to boycott the elections and specifically not to vote for the Tamil candidate. Still, they did not have the guts to hold public meetings and tell the people their stand. Instead, they held some so-called seminars inside private homes and in back gardens. MPs Sivasithamparam, Yogeswaran, Alalasundaram spoke at such seminars and they were subject to a barrage of questions, nearly ending up in the break up of those seminars. Some TULF members, who were sent to Trincomalee for such seminars, held three such seminars which ended up in chaos. These same people, thereafter, refused to go to Batticaloa to hold such seminars. Will the TULF deny this?

"Amirthalingam says that certain sections of the TULF took independent decisions and cites Batticaloa as one instance. The Batticaloa and Amparai districts defied the TULF's decision and publicly announced this at their respective district meetings. M. Sivasithamparam, who hurried to Batticaloa on Friday, October 8, to get the TULF high command in those two districts to reverse their decisions, took the train back the same day with his hopes shattered. Make public the replies Sivasithamparam got from the TULF high command there.

"Amirthalingam refers to a bogus leaflet issued by the TULF calling upon the Tamils to vote for the ACTC and says that this contributed towards the harvest of votes for the ACTC. Will Amirthalingam deny that the TULF distributed these leaflets on the morning of election, day when they realised that their call for a boycott was going to be a total failure, so that they could save face?

"Amirthalingam boasts that the Jaffna district polled only 50 per cent, the Wanni 60 per cent and the Eastern Province 70 per cent and this indicated the success of the TULF call for non-participation. All their life that party has pursued a negative approach in politics. I do not deny there was a drop in the poll in these areas. But, it must not be forgotten that if the vast majority of the Tamil voting population in these areas had gone to the polls it would never have been possible for the UNP candidate to have obtained 52.9 per cent of the total votes polled enabling a victory on the first count. One can now say with certainty that the TULF's call for non-participation of Tamils in this election was a sinister move to help the UNP candidate with an electoral victory on the first count. This is why Amirthalingam, in his observations to the media, confesses that President Jayewardene's victory was envisaged.

I have gone to every village in the North and the East during the last one and a half months. I know the mood of the TULF supporters. If Amirthalingam and his like know what their people are thinking of them, all TULF MPs would be embarking on trips round the world."

TULF FINISHED, SAYS KUMAR

Colombo THE ISLAND in English 26 Oct 82 pp 1, 3

[Article by D.B.S. Jeyeraj]

[Text]

"The All-Ceylon Tamil Congress will not summon a Constituent Assembly of Tamil Eelam as stated in my manifesto because I did not get the 7 lakhs of votes required for that purpose, said Mr. Kumar Ponnambalam yesterday.

"The Tamil Congress, however, will carry out a programme of action leading to such a measure" he said.

Mr. Ponnambalam said that he was not happy about the number of votes he received. "I expected a minimum of five and a half lakhs" he said.

"But I have finished the TULF politically in Tamil areas."

The Tamil people are thoroughly dissatisfied with the TULF, he said.

Outlining the reasons for this Mr. Ponnambalam said that in the first place, the TULF had not

. The result of the Presidential election was something which the TULF had expected, said Opposition leader Mr.A.Amirthalingam yesterday.

"We were not concerned about the election and kept out of it altogether", he said.

"Since we did not carryout a systematic campaign of boycott, certain sections of our Party took independent decisions and backed certain candidates'", said Mr.Amirthalingam. He cited the case of a large turnout for Mr. Kumar Ponnambalam in Batticaloa as one instance.

Mr.Amirthalingam said that the appearance of a bogus leaflet stating that the TULF had called upon the Tamils to vote for the All-Ceylon Tamil Congress is a contributory factor toward the Tamil Congress harvest of votes.

Referring to the polling in the North and East, Mr.Amirthalingam said that more than half of Jaffna had kept away. In the Wanni and the Eastern Province, too, there was a significant drop in the polling percentage which indicated the success of the non-participation call of the TULF, said Mr.Amirthalingam.

Commenting on the performance of the UNP and the SLFP in Jaffna, he said that the vote for the SLFP had been a protest vote against the Government. "The memories of the 1981, incidents seem to be lingering in the minds of the Jaffna people and the vote against the UNP seems to suggest this", he said.

Mr.Amirthalingam was confident that the TULF would continue to retain the support it enjoyed in the North and East in the event of a general election.

TAMIL VOTING ANALYSED

Colombo THE ISLAND in English 24 Oct 82 p 6

[Article by D.B.S. Jeyaraj]

[Text]

Sri Lanka's first ever Presidential elections are over and Mr. J. R. Jayewardene has been elected as the President of multi-racial, multi-religious Sri Lanka — A People's President!

The voting pattern of the Sri Lankan heterogenous electorate has again spotlighted the different trend of behaviour of Sri Lankas second largest ethnic group the Sri Lankan Tamils as opposed to the other ethnic groups in the country. Although the Sri Lankan Tamils have once again registered a non-conformist stance there are certain features which may well signify a break with the past in the future.

The influence and impact of the Tamil-speaking voter was felt in different degrees. The Ceylon Workers Congress went along with the UNP while the Democratic Workers Congress was with the SLFP. The imporved performance of the UNP in Nuwara Eliya and Kandy Districts is attributed somewhat to the CWCs support. In the case of the Muslims there is no exclusive organisation which could ensure a bloc vote. However Muslims have basically reflected the voting pattern of the Majority community with perhaps the tilt towards the UNP.

It is the Sri Lankan Tamil who has in his voting created a peculiar pattern.

The impact of the Tamil voter was felt in several instances.

The United National Party won the majority of votes in 21 of the 22 electoral districts. The only district which it lost was Jaffna, a pre-dominantly Tamil area. The All Ceylon Tamil Congress came first there.

The narrowest margin of lead recorded by the UNP was in Batticaloa. In B'caloa the UNP got 40.05 per cent of the votes while the Tamil Congress came second with 39.22 per cent of the votes. Batticaloa is also a predominantly Tamil area.

The only province which was captured by the Sri Lanka Freedom Party was the Northern Province. The North consisting of the Jaffna and Vanni Districts gave the SLFP 100,521 votes while the UNP and Tamil Congress got 80,614 and 98,784 each. The North is predominantly Tamil.

The Jaffna District had the lowest turnout of voters 44.16 per cent apart from giving the UNP its poorest poll 20.54 per cent. Incidentally Batticaloa gave the SLFP its poorest poll 18.06 per cent.

DECREASE

Also all districts which had a significant concentration of Sri Lankan Tamils showed a decrease in the voter turnout as against other areas. Jaffna, Vanni, Batticaloa, Trincomalee, Digamadulla (Amparai) and Colombo registered a poll of less than 80 per cent. In all other districts the poll percentage was more than 80 per cent. (In Colombo one other possible reason could be the large-scale emigration to foreign countries in that district). The reasons for the Tamil voter behaviour can be attributed to various factors.

The chief political party of the Tamils the TULF took a decision of "neither participating nor voting". Although the decision was tantamount to a "boycott" the TULF never rigidly said so. The Tamil Congress jumped into the fray with the twin cry's of "Referendum for Eelam" and Tamil Solidarity.

The TULF did not give any directives to the Tamil people as to how they should vote. Their official statement however specifically mentioned that the Tamil Congress did not warrant the support of the Tamil people.

But the nature of the Presidential election had to embrace in its scope all sections of the country irrespective of race, religion and region. Regardless of the TULF's attitude all 5 national party candidates visited Tamil areas inclusive of Jaffna and solicited support. Also there was a marked absence of communal politics on the platforms of the major national parties. Economic and certain non-communal political issues proved to be the back-bone of the Presidential election campaign. There ws also a refreshing phenomenon of Sinhala and Tamil speeches on almost all platforms of the national parties. The only campaign that smacked of racism was Mr. Kumar Ponnambalam's who made distinctly communal overtures.

In a hustings sans the TULF and devoid of communal politics the Tamil voter had to make up his own mind and fend for himself to the best of his ability. Fulfilling a basic law of nature various forces set about to fill the political vacuum created by the TULF.

As far as the TULF was concerned it took up a stand of "non-participation" rather than boycott. TULF critics insinuated that this was a calculated move designed to support the UNP. Since the TULF never attempted to make its call an "effective boycott" several people felt that the decision of non-participation was actually a cover-up for indirect UNP support. The end result however seems to be that the UNP has not received the Tamil support it expected.Also the TULF's wisdom in taking up a stand equivalent to a boycott without taking steps to ensure one is something which is questionable in view of later developments.

The TULF call according to Mr. Amirthalingam was a success. More than half of Jaffna had not voted. In other districts like the Vanni, Trincomalee, Batticaloa and Digamadulla the poll percentage was much lower than in 1977. TULF sources also say that among these districts the turnout among Tamil voters was much lower than other communities in those areas.

WILDERNESS

However, the story currently going around Tamil political circles is that sections of the TULF including MPs have tacitly canvassed support for other parties. Some had opted for UNP, some fo SLFP and some for the Tamil Congress. Some hard-liners however tried to campaign for an effective boycott. In the absence of a uniform policy the TULF call became somewhat a "call in the wilderness".

On the basis of percentage the TULF call has certainly had its impact but abstention from voting has not been that successful. The most conspicuous drop in voting was in the Jaffna and Batticaloa districts. But even there statistics indicate that in Jaffna a little less than a half of those who voted for the TULF in 1977 have voted for other parties while a little more than one thirds of those who voted for the TULF in 1977 have voted for other parties in Batticaloa.

In the case of the Tamil Congress the performance of its candidate was certainly much better than expected. Compared to the DDC polls the congress has certainly fared well. The aim of the Congress was to re-capture the power and influence it enjoyed among Tamils prior to 1956. The exercise of the Presidential election was merely to identify possible power bases. The Congress had nothing to lose and everything to gain by its attempt. Although the polemic of a Mandate for Eelam was flaunted by it in actual terms it was the appeal to Tamil solidarity which was fruitful. Mr. Kumar Ponnambalams' appeal was to Tamil emotion on the basis of community consciousness (The only Tamil against five Sihalese etc.) Despite TULF opposition the appeal has been successful particularly in the East. Mr. Ponnambalam also obtained 9,808 votes in the seven provinces other than the North and East. For a party which had no organisation in the East and most parts of the Vanni the Tamil Congress performance is certainly satisfatory. The TC—TULF battle too had its own share of intrigues and in-fighting. There was the mysterious power-cut at the Chunnakam power station which coincided with Mr. Ponnambalams TV performance, thereby causing a complete black-out in the Jaffna area. There was also the appearance of a mysterious leaflet allegedly issued by the TULF leadership which called upon the Tamils to vote for the Tamil Congress. Mr. Amirthalingam and the printing press owner have dissociated themselves from the notice. The Tamil Congress has scored over the TULF by obtaining 35 percent of the votes the TULF received in 1977. But on the other hand the Tamil Congress spoke about a "Referendum." The relatively low poll the Congress received (Mr. Ponnambalam wanted 7 lakhs to form a Constituent Assembly) could also be termed as a negation of the Eelam Mandate of 1977. Also could the Tamil Congress poll the same amount in a confrontation with the TULF?

The upset of the whole election however was the SLFP's performance in the North. Various factors contributed to this there was the economic issue of import substitution; the farmer of cash crops like onions and chillies yearns for SLFP days of import bans as today he is being hard hit by cheaper imports.

EDITORIAL: EELAM LOSES OUT TO ECONOMICS

Colombo THE ISLAND in English 24 Oct 82 p 6

[Text]

While Mr. Kumar Ponnambalam, carrying the TULF banner temporarily borrowed from Mr. Amirthalingam, came riding, riding upto the front rank of the final Presidential election line-up ahead of even Dr. Colvin R. de Silva, UNP ideologues in the midst of their jubilation have not hidden their disappointment over the party's performance in the North and the East. While Jaffna district was the only one where the defeated SLFP candidate could get ahead of the President, in the Wanni district encompassing Mullaitivu, Vavuniya and Mannar the combined SLFP and All Ceylon Tamil Congress votes surpassed the UNP total while in Batticaloa district it was the same story though the UNP did manage to win both districts finally on the individual breakdown.

While the statistical jugglery and the post-mortems will be carried out with acrobatic and morbid zest a deeper examination of the motivation of the voters in these areas point to what can prove to be a new development in national politics. The call for a boycott by the TULF and TELF was patently a failure and we are happy about this as a newspaper which had consistently called on the Tamil people not to withdraw from this decisive election. Although under the new system of proportional representation the old electoral unit is no longer a valid category old habits die hard and political analysts, who had for long been wedded to the electorate as a category in their calculations, have manage to dig up some of the results at least on an electoral basis. According to these while Jaffna has voted for the ACTC as against the UNP and the SLFP electorates like Kopay had overwhelmingly voted for the SLFP. It is not difficult to discern a trend here. While in the Jaffna town the political war cry of a separate State would have been attractive to the more politically militant townsfolk in outlying areas such as Kopay, which are predominantly agricultural pockets, the old 1970—77 import substitution agricultural policies of the SLFP under which the northern farmer prospered would have been the draw. The same appears to have been true of the East as well.

In this context the question arises whether the hardy, no-nonsense people of the North have chosen to place economics over politics in the electoral pyramid. Accepting the truism that economics is at the heart of any meaningful national development it can certainly be justifiably argued that it was the lack of any economic development in the North which had generated the present mood of discontent among the Tamil people. The bitter truth is that all Sinhala political parties have treated the Tamil parties such as the Federal Party and the ACTC as convenient pawns in their parliamentary power games. While some of the leaders of these parties were as a result perhaps able to get a few crumbs from the tables of the Government the Tamil areas as a whole remained neglected and backward.

The significance of the terrorist movement in the North was that it rose as a challenge to this effete colaborationist politics of the Tamil political establishment. But the gun-toting adventurists are not Jaffna and this is a fact that even responsible leaders sometimes tend to forget. By voting in substantial numbers for a non-separatist political parties such as the UNP and the SLFP the northern people have demonstrated that they are able to view matters from a broader perspective than their leaders.

This is the real challenge to the Government. The question is how best can the Government develop the North and the East and give their predominantly agricultural population better prices for their products. In this context the appeal made by the Minister for Rural Industrial Development Mr. Thondaman is timely and goes to the core of the issue. Mr. Thondaman has cautioned the Government not to treat these votes as "communal votes" and pay special attention to the problems in the North and the East. This indicates the line of thinking which the UNP in victory must follow as regards the Tamil people living outside Sinhala areas. It will be easy to succumb to the temptation of surrendering to a mood of bitter anger about "being let down" by the Tamil people but this is not the approach of statesmen. To the extent that they have voted for Sinhala parties such as the UNP and the SLFP the Tamil people have shown their willingness to get out of the trough of sterile separatist politics and it is upto the Government to convert this into something more meaningful by launching on a systematic economic development of the North and the East.

JVP APPEALS FOR UNITY WITH SLFP

Colombo THE ISLAND in English 23 Oct 82 p 3

[Text]

The Janatha Vimukthi Peramuna, which came third at the Presidential Election, said in a statement issued through its General Secretary Lionel Bopage yesterday that the election result showed the futility of trying to defeat the UNP through the SLFP which had resulted in a UNP victory. The statement appealed to all left and progressive sections within the SLFP to support the JVP.

The JVP issued two statements yesterday, one by Secretary Bopage and the other by Presidential candidate Rohana Wijeweera. Mr.Wijeweera said that the JVP had registered a definite progress on the basis of the results and that the party had emerged as the only genuine left party.

He said that the JVP alternative programme had suffered a temporary setback but the UNP and the SLFP had proved by their past record their failure to salvage the people from the present crisis.

He said that the people would realise that the JVP is the only alternative from the present crisis of high prices, unemployment and inflation produced by the UNP's open economy.

Mr.Bopage in his statement said that although the UNP had used state power and the mass media to ensure its victory, it would be rendered helpless before the burgeoning economic and political crisis in the months to come.

The results proved that the JVP was the only anti-UNP left force in the country, he said.

BRIEFS

SLFP LEADER SEES DEFEAT AS TEMPORARY--Even though he was defeated, the swing of votes in the Presidential election was more toward the SLFP than the UNP, Mr Hector Kobbekaduwe, Presidential candidate for the SLFP said in a statement issued yesterday. Taking 1977 as the base, there had been a swing of 9.3 percent toward the SLFP, while there had been only a 2 percent swing in favour of the UNP. "The temporary defeat" thus, would soon be transformed, he has said. Mr Kobbekaduwe claimed that the time given for the SLFP to face the Presidential Election was of extremely short duration. Yet, the masses had taken on his struggle as their own struggle, and by that, given him much courage. He would never forget those who had sincerely joined him in his efforts, he said. Mr Kobbekaduwe has said that anti-imperialists, lovers of democracy and all patriotic forces should unite to face conditions that would definitely result from the deteriorating living conditions. "With my determination and self conviction, I will stand by the people. I will not retreat. Whatever the battle might be, I will not quit the field of battle. That is the promise that I can give at the moment," Mr Kobbekaduwe has said. He has also thanked on behalf of the SLFP, all those who helped him in many ways during the presidential campaigns and specified the Maha Sangha, other religious leaders, all political parties, trade unions, youth organisations and intellectuals. JVP MEMBERS IN QUANDRY--The rank and file of the Janatha Vimukthi Peramuna (JVP) are in a quandary over the party's performance at the Presidential election last week. According to reliable JVP sources, a majority of members, members, including several party high-ups, did not want their leader Rohana Wijeweera to contest the Presidential Election but devote all their energy to the forthcoming General elections. The sources also said that the JVP has distributed one million more membership forms this time expecting that the party, with 800,000 already enrolled, would poll at least 1.5 million votes, but, in fact, they polled only 273,000 votes at the election, which exposed the weakness of the party. Certain influential sections have demanded from the party politbureau the reason for the JVP polling only 273,000 votes, when its membership strength alone was 800,000. ERSHAD INTERVIEW WITH ARAB DAILY SUMMARIZED

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 2 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Meena, Sept 29:--The Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad has said Bangladesh will encourage investments from Saudi Arabia and other Arab countries and extend promotional facilities in this regard, reports BSS.

In an interview with an Arabic language daily AL OKAZ at Arafat he said, "Private sector has been given enough opportunities to grow but we have to build a bridge of confidence and understanding between the private and public sectors".

Gen. Ershad told his interviewer, "we are working on priority basis to revitalise our economy and build up economic infrastructures in the rural areas." Such steps would stop influx of rural population to the urban areas, he said adding "now the people need not have to come to the towns and live at the mercy of the urban people sacrificing their honourable identity which they have in their own villages".

Replying to a question the CMLA said, the wrong policies of the past had caused deterioration to the economy of Bangladesh. High rate of population growth and negligence to the rural areas in the past resulted in the influx of rural population to the urban areas.

Gen. Ershad referred to various reforms undertaken by his Government in judicial, administrative and education sectors and said, "we have to stop the rural people leaving from their own places and that is why we are taking administration to the rural areas to ensure quicker service to them. The village will be made centre of all development activities instead of present trend of urban-oriented development programmes.

The CMLA described as "very strong and close" the relations between Bangladesh and Saudi Arabia. He praised the leadership of King Fahd and said the countries of the Muslim world were sure to come closer and have better understanding among themselves for strengthening the unity of Muslim Ummah.

In this context, Gen. Ershad reminded the holy message of Arafat which called for strengthening the Muslim Ummah by consolidating solidarity and fraternity among the Muslims world over.

Gen. Ershad thanked the government of Saudi Arabia for making good arrangements of security, movement and welfare of the pilgrims during the Hajj. It is really a gigantic task which has been performed very well to the satisfaction of all, he was quoted by the paper as saying.

On the Palestine issue, the CMLA told the paper 'our policy is very clear; we are always with our Palestinian brothers in their just struggle to have their own homeland. We should extend all possible help to the Palestine movement to achieve their rights.'

ERSHAD TALKS TO PRESS ON RETURN FROM SAUDI ARABIA

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 2 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad returned home on Thursday morning from Saudi Arabia where he performed Hajj and had "fruitful talks" with King Fahd on bilateral economic cooperation and other issues reports BSS.

Talking to reporters at the Airport the CMLA said that during his stay in Saudi Arabia he met the Saudi monarch thrice, once formally and apprised him of the economic situation of Bangladesh.

Begum Ershad, the Foreign Minister Mr. A. R. Sham-ud-Doha, Mr Justice Bardrul Haider Chowdhury of the Supreme Court, PSO to the Commander-in-Chief Maj. Gen. Atiqur Rahman, Vice-Chancellor of the Engineering University Dr Wahiduddin Ahmed and the Editor of ITTEFAQ Mr. Anwar Hossain who accompanied the CMLA also returned.

Gen. Ershad said that the Saudi King expressed his keen interest in the economic progress of Bangladesh and had assured all possible assistance in this regard.

The CMLA told a questioner that King Fahd was well acquainted with the problems of Bangladesh. He pointed out that there was a commitment of five hundred million dollar Saudi assistance. The present Government prepared projects worth 120 million dollars for the utilisation of the help.

He said that in the past matching projects were not prepared to utilise the Saudi help and that was why the amount of assistance was not disbursed. More projects are being prepared to utilise the fund.

Gen. Ershad said that he had also discussed with King Fahd the question of balance of payment problems and bank deposit. 'We have also discussed Iran-Iraq conflict' and the Saudi monarch agreed with him on the need for revival of the Islamic peace mission to put an end to the war.

Asked if he had discussed with King Fahd regional issues the CMLA said "We had gene- lems". [as published] The Saudi monarch he added was keen to see our relations with neighbours "friendly".

Gen. Ershad said that he had also apprised King Fahd of his coming visit to New Delhi. The Saudi monarch expressed the hope that problems between Bangladesh and India would be solved bilaterally.

The CMLA said that he had extended invitation to King Fahd to visit Bangladesh which the monarch accepted gladly.

Paying tributes to King Fahd the CMLA expressed his firm belief that the Saudi monarch would be able to lead the Muslim world.

Gen. Ershad said that several Saudi businessmen met him and expressed their eagerness to make investments in Bangladesh where congenial conditions for investment were created.

The CMLA said that during his stay in Saudi Arabia he also met PLO Chairman Yaser Arafat, President of Guinea Ahmed Sekou Toure, Maldives President Maumoon Abdul Gayyoom and invited them to visit Bangladesh. The PLO chief is expected to visit Bangladesh soon he said.

He said 'brother Arafat' narrated to him how 7,000 helpless Palestinian and Lebanese people including children and women were massacred by Israelis in West Beirut.

Gen. Ershad pointed out that he had reiterated to Arafat Bangladesh's total support to the cause of the Palestinians and said Bangladeshi people were fighting shoulder to shoulder with their Arab brothers.

The CMLA said that he came to know from the PLO Chairman that many Bangladeshis were injured while fighting the Zionist forces in Beirut and many others passing their captive days in Israeli prisons.

He assured Arafat that many more in Bangladesh were ready to shed more blood for the cause of the Palestinian people.

Gen. Ershad who looked contented said "Hajj gives one more self-confidence and unbounded happiness." He said during the Hajj he had realised more intimately what the Islamic fraternity is. Two million devotees from various parts of the world assembled at Arafat on this holy occasion he added.

The CMLA said that he had prayed to Allah on behalf of the nine crore people of Bangladesh and sought divine blessings for the welfare of the nation and consolidation of Islamic brotherhood.

Gen Ershad said that he had visited Bangladesh Haji camps in Saudi Arabia to see for himself the condition of the pilgrims. Eight Hajis died of sickness there he added and observed that it was better to check health condition before undertaking the trip for pilgrimage. He said there should be books in Bengali with all information regarding Hajj in them.

DCMLA Rear Admiral M. A. Khan and Air Vice-Marshal Sultan Mahumd, Ministers and high ranking civil and military official were present at the airport to receive Gen. Ershad.

TEXT OF ERSHAD SPEECH AT 6 OCT DELHI BANQUET

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 7 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 6:--The Chief Martial Law Administrator, Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad expressed his conviction here tonight that both India and Bangladesh must be good friends and that 'we will find honourable and equitable solutions to our problems' reports BSS.

Speaking at a banquet given in his honour by Indian Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi, the CMLA said that the relationship between the two countries was not dictated solely by the harsh realities of geography, contemporary history and culture. 'Essentially, it is influenced by a compulsive element of humanism and togetherness--the desire to maintain peace and sustain it' he added.

Referring to his last six months in office, General Ershad said during this period he had consistently maintained that 'our relations should be based on goodwill and neighbourliness, on large heartedness and understanding, free from pre-independence and inherited inhibitions and firmly established on the principles of sovereignty'.

'I am convinced that we must be friends--I mean good friends, and it is in this spirit that I have come to Delhi, quite confident that by the grace of God, we will find honourable and equitable solutions to our problems'.

General Ershad stressed that exchange of visits between the two close neighbours 'should not only be encouraged but, given the advantages of our day and age, made spontaneously routine and informal'. It is through such exchanges he said, that we can build up a relationship of trust and cooperation in a truly pragmatic and candid fashion.

The CMLA said that during the last six months his Government had undertaken the process of nation building with a sense of total commitment. This Government, he noted aims to derive the maximum benefit for the people by ensuring their rightful participation in Government whose mechanism he pointed out 'must be capable of responding to the need of rural Bangladesh quickly and effectively.' He said 'we have worked hard, and I would like to believe that we have in fact already made progress'.

General Ershad felicitated Mrs Gandhi and her government for being unanimously nominated to host the seventh Non-aligned conference and recalled India's pioneering role in the Non-aligned Movement. He reiterated Bangladesh's firm commitment to the principles of non-alignment as much as are committed to the Charter of the United Nations. He hoped that India will play a positive and effective role in the years to come towards creating conditions of peace and stability.

Condemning the recent Israeli aggression and barbarism in Lebanon, the CMLA said that his country would continue to lend its strongest support for the Palestine brethren in their demand for independent homeland. In this context he also commended that Arab peace plan announced recently at Fez and fully endorsed Saudi King Fahd's appeal to international community to assist the rehabilitation of both the Palestinian and Lebanese people.

On the Gulf war between Iraq and Iran, the CMLA said that both the good offices committee of the Non-Aligned Movement and the Islamic Conference Peace Commission should jointly continue their search for a peaceful settlement of the conflict.

Text of Speech

Your Excellency, Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi, Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen.

My wife and I are greatly honoured by the gracious and hospital welcome accorded to us and the members of our delegation. We thank you for your kind references to our country and our people on whose behalf I convey to you and the people of India our warmest greetings,

Excellency,

Bangladesh is now in her twelfth year of independence. These have not been easy years and, quite honestly, we still have difficult years ahead of us. It is a reality which I would submit, the people of Bangladesh are learning to face with courage, determination and a maturity born out of sacrifice and suffering. During the six months since this government assumed office, we have therefore undertaken the process of nation building with a sense of total commitment. This government aims to derive the maximum benefit for our people by ensuring their rightful participation in government whose mechanism must be capable of responding to the needs of rural Bangladesh quickly and effectively. We have worked hard and I would like to believe that we have, in fact, already made progress. The cornerstone of our policy is to achieve administrative decentralisation--to take the government to the people, and it is to this end that we have decided to transform that famous post-colonial and far flung outpost, the Thana, into the basic unit of administration from where we can directly take our development efforts to the 68,000 villages of Bangladesh.

Excellency,

I would have liked to avail the opportunity of this visit to share with you and the people of India at length the work we have done, and are doing in Bangladesh in the fields of agriculture, industrial and economic development as a whole, judicial reforms, educational and social welfare, health and population control; and towards mobilising both our not insubstantial natural and human resources; towards improving our system of communications in a manner which will open the way for the ninety million people of our country to strive towards greater self-reliance and towards building a society free from hunger and deprivation. I do not have the time to do so, but warmly welcome you and the leaders of India to see for yourselves the enormous problems we face, and the dedicated efforts being made by our people to solve these difficult problems in what are perhaps the most adverse and neglected conditions in the subcontinent. By the Grace of God, we propose to overcome these difficulties and pave the way for a brighter future, hopefully in our own lifetime.

I find it easy to describe our efforts and surroundings to you because you yourselves have set an outstanding example in numerous fields of developmental work and a programme of austerity. India can be justly proud of her highly cumulative experience in becoming a grain surplus economy, one of the largest industrialised nations in the world and a net exporter of technology. Your experience can contribute greatly towards regional cooperation for development in South Asia, and I am pleased to say that the forum in which seven countries of this region have so far participated during the last two years has already progressed to an extent where we may soon be able to meet at the political level to expand even further those areas of understanding and cooperation which we have together identified, and which involve over eight hundred million people. What better way to promote peace? And Excellency, how can we undertake any development effort for our people whatsoever without peace?

I would humbly submit that the relationship between our two countries is not dictated solely by the harsh realities of geography, contemporary history and culture. Essentially, it is influenced by a compulsive element of humanism and togetherness--the desire to maintain peace and sustain it. During our six months in office I have consistently maintained that our relations should be based on goodwill and neighbourliness, on large heartedness and understanding, free from pre-independence and inherited inhibitions, and firmly established on the principles of sovereignty. Excellency I am convinced that we must be friends--I mean, good friends and it is in this spirit that I have come to Delhi quite confident that by the Grace of God, we will find honourable and equitable solutions to our problems.

Excellency,

I take this opportunity of felicitating you and your government on being unanimously nominated to host the Seventh Conference of the Non-aligned Movement. It is only befitting that you should do so in the context of India's pioneering role in the movement and the great contributions which your late revered father, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and later you yourself have made towards maintaining and securing the principles and objectives of Non-alignment. We in Bangladesh are firmly committed to Non-alignment as much as we are committed to the Charter of the United Nations. We believe that this movement is a dynamic force which can effectively stabilise the current dangerous trend of tension areas rapidly proliferating through polarisation at the global level. I have no doubt that India will play a positive and effective role in the years to come towards creating conditions of peace and stability particularly in those areas where war and aggression not only continue to take a heavy toll of life and property but also perpetuate the violation of territorial integrity of Non-aligned states.

The recent events in Lebanon exemplify such a violation in all its aspects and I am sure that the people of India and Bangladesh are one when we say how shocked we are to witness in this day and age naked aggression and barbarism committed by a so-called member state of the United Nations. Not only has Israel flouted all principles of the UN Charter but she is responsible for continuing this aggression in full view of the international community. We commend the Arab Peace Plan recently announced at Fez and fully endorse His Majesty Fahd bin Abdul Aziz's appeal to the international community to assist in the rehabilitation of both the Palestinian and Lebanese people. We will continue to lend our strongest support for our Palestinian brethren in their demand for an independent homeland. Like yourselves, we believe that there can be no lasting peace till the rights of the Palestinian people are recognised and their future guaranteed and secured by the international community.

The Gulf War is a tragedy for all of us. Both the Good Offices Committee of the Non-aligned and the Islamic Conference Peace Commission of which our respective countries are members should in my opinion jointly continue their search for a peaceful settlement of this conflict which has already taken so many lives and has caused so much grief and deprivation to even those who are not directly involved in the war. I am sure that the leaders of both Iran and Iraq want peace and I can only hope that we can together exert all our efforts to bring the way to an end as early as possible.

Excellency, as host designate to both the next Summit Conference of the Non-aligned and of the next Commonwealth Heads of Government you and your government carry a heavy burden arising out of conflicts such as the ones I have referred to; out of injustices such as exist in the wholly unreasonable prolongation of the Namibian crisis; out of unresolved issues such as the Global Round of Negotiations reflecting social and economic anomalies and inequalities affecting mostly the Least Developed Countries I assure you of our maximum cooperation in these and all other issues which confront us.

Excellency in the final analysis we must dare to create a world as it should be--where those who are hungry are fed, where those who are poor escape the degradation of want, where restraint among nations and peaceful settlement of disputes is a pervasive substitute for confrontation and violence and where the walls of racism and colonialism, dominance and hegemony, mistrust and antagonism are pulled down once and for all in the undoubted recognition of our interdependence and the fact that the future of each of our nations depends upon the cooperation of all of our nations.

It is my firm conviction that visits such as this between two close neighbours should not only be encouraged but given the advantages of our day and age, made spontaneously routine and informal. It is through such exchanges that we can build up a relationship of trust and cooperation in a truly pragmatic and candid fashion. I take this opportunity to renew my invitation to Your Excellency to visit Bangladesh next year and to state that we are eagerly looking forward to the visit and hope that it will take place soon.

Excellencies, Ladies and Gentlemen may I now request you to join me in a toast:

--to the health, happiness and long life of Her Excellency the Prime Minister of India;

--to the continued peace, progress and prosperity for the friendly people of India;

--to the everlasting friendship and cooperation between Bangladesh and India.

ERSHAD TALKS TO BANGLADESHIS IN SINGAPORE

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 12 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Oct. 11:--The Chief Martial Law Administrator, Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad, said here today that a favourable climate had been created for local and foreign investments in Bangladesh, reports BSS.

Addressing Bangladesh community here at a local hotel, the CMLA advised them to make their best efforts to attract foreign entrepreneurs to invest in Bangladesh availing themselves of all the facilities now being extended to them.

Referring to recent worldwide recession, General Ershad said, like many other countries Bangladesh was also adversely affected by this. "However, we hope to overcome the situation with united and sincere efforts by all Bangladeshis living at home and abroad," he said adding, "We are determined to achieve self-sufficiency and reduce our dependence on external aid."

The CMLA explained his audience the situation under which the present Government had to take the responsibility and added the Government had been trying to build a new society based on equity and justice.

He outlined the major reforms being brought about by the Government in different sectors like administration, agriculture, family planning and education and said, if we could successfully implement these reforms, then we should be able to build a new Bangladesh.

Foreign Minister Mr. A. R. Shams-ud-Doha was present on the occasion.

General Ershad who made a stop-over here on his way to Fijian capital Suva to attend the third Commonwealth heads of Government regional meeting for Asia and the Pacific left for Sydney this evening.

ERSHAD INTERVIEW WITH ARAB NEWSPAPER REPORTED

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 5 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Arab Peace Plan is a very significant step toward the dawn of a new era of Muslim unity and solidarity, according to Chief Martial Law Administrator and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces Lt. Gen. Hussain Muhammed Ershad.

In an interview with Arab News during his recent visit to Saudi Arabia Gen. Ershad said that for the first time 20 Arab League countries have signed an agreement, "a thing which never happened before." He congratulated King Fahd on playing a very vital role in bringing these countries together. The significance of the plan was agreement on the Palestine state with Jerusalem as its capital, withdrawal of troops from all occupied territories and the right of all Middle East countries to live in peace.

He criticized the Beirut massacre as coldblooded murder, the like of which had never happened in modern history.

Lt. Gen. Ershad arrived in Saudi Arabia to perform Hajj. He said he got more details about the horrifying events in Beirut after talks with PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat. He said the victims of this inhuman tragedy have crossed 6,000 "and has now touched 7,000-8,000." The Christian militia, in collaboration with the Israelis, are responsible for it. The way the peace forces left in a hurry shows the international conspiracy, he added.

He supported King Fahd's appeal for the rehabilitation of Lebanon and said Israel must pay for the damage and destructions of Lebanon. The cases should be taken to the International Court of Justice as such acts should not go unpunished, he demanded.

He termed the Iran-Iraq war as a tragedy for the Muslim world and said he had discussed it with King Fahd to find an early settlement. In this Holy month, he appealed to both the countries to come to an understanding and stop loss of life and property.

Talking about his visit to India next week, Ershad said it is a very important one and we want to settle all our outstading problems in an atmosphere of friendliness and good neighbourliness."

"The Farakka water is the major issue for discussion and a settlement has to come very soon". The present agreement expires Nov. 4, so not much time is left," he added. He said "I know water is one of the major problems for India but it is also problem for Bangladesh. However, I am quite optimistic about the results of my visit."

Other minor issues like border demarcation can be solved easily. On the disputed island, he said joint surveys are being conducted and data is being collected. Talks will be held after this work is over. "I am quite sure that something tangible will come out of the talks," he added.

His country's relations with Pakistan are normal. We have cultural and trade agreements with that country. The only issue between the two countries relate to nearly 400,000 Biharis in Bangladesh, who have opted for Pakistan citizenship. However, talks are going on and recently Pakistan had agreed to take 7,000 of them of which 4,000 are soon leaving and others will leave after some time. He thanked Saudi Arabian government for providing funds and planes for sending these people to Pakistan. He said he has aleady sent an invitation to Pakistan President to visit Bangladesh.

Similarly, the relations with Burma, Nepal and China were very good. He said "we are engaged in the economic revival of the country and we have to do a lot to improve the condition of people."

Bangladesh will hold elections next year at the village level which will form the basis for democratic process in the country, he said. "At present, we are trying to make administrative changes and we want to decentralize the setup," he added.

ERSHAD, CHOWDHURY GREET NATION ON MUSLIM HOLIDAY

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 28 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] The Chief Martial Law Administrator, Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad has called upon the richer section of the society to come forward to the services of the suffering humanity being inbued with the ideals of sacrifices, reports BSS.

In a message on the eve of Eid-ul-Azha, the CMLA said that the nation had made pledge to build a "new Bangladesh" and added, "we are now engaged in establishing social justice--the achievement of economic emancipation for the people by maintaining austerity and eradicating corruption."

He conveyed "Eid Mubarak" to his countrymen and to the brotherly people of all Muslim countries and said, celebration of Eid-ul-Azha will be a success only when we shall be able to realise the inner message of the example of great sacrifice set by Hazrat Ibrahim (A).

Gen. Ershad said, let us offer munajat on this holy day to Allah so that we can devote all our economic and social activities to the path ordained by Allah. Let us also put in our efforts to bridge up the gap between the rich and the poor on the basis of mutual co-operation and feelings.

The CMLA said, may Allah, the Merciful, give us strength to follow the ideals of Eid-ul-Azha in every field of our national life.

Ahsan

Another message adds: President Ahsanuddin Chowdhury on Monday expressed the hope that the spirit of sacrifice as embodied in the rites of Eid-ul-Azha would "inspire all of us" to rededicate ourselves to the welfare of the people and the country.

In a message to the nation on the eve of the holy festival the President called for keeping oneself free from jealousy and greed following the teachings of the solemn occasion.

He said the Eid-ul-Azha reminded the Muslims as well as the whole of mankind the sacrifice made by Hazrat Ibrahim (A) at the call of Allah, the Merciful.

President Chowdhury said that the practice of the teachings of Eid-ul-Azha in our day-to-day life would lead us to a happy and peaceful life.

The President greeted the brotherly people of the Muslim countries and prayed for consolidation of the unity and solidarity of the Muslim Ummah and world peace.

COMMITTEE DECIDES TO UPGRADE THANA ADMINISTRATION

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 8 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Kazi Montu]

[Text] The government officers will be made accountable to the people's representatives at the thana level administration in future.

It was dicided in the meeting of the National Committee for implementation of Administrative Reorganisation held on September 30 at the CMLA Secretariat.

The committee has decided to upgrade the thana administration at the initial stage of the reorganisation of administration deferring constitution of new districts. It considered the division level administration as unnecessary.

The meeting of the committee was presided over by its Chairman DCMLA Rear Admiral Mahabub Ali Khan and attended among others by Finance Minister A.M.A. Muhith, Agriculture, Minister Obaidullah Khan, Home Minister Maj. Gen. Mahabbat Jan Choudhury, five Zonal Martial Law Administrators, Major General Nuruddin, Cabinet Secretary, Home Secretary, Finance Secretary and Establishment Secretary. Originally the committee had eight members.

It was suggested in the meeting that the coordination of inter-district administration by the district-level Martial Law administrators should continue until people's representatives are elected.

But there must be constitutional provision in future to ensure participation of the armed forces in the local bodies after transfer of administration to the elected people's representatives, the committee stressed.

It is learnt that separate charters of duty will be framed for Zilla Parishad, Thana Parishad and Union Parishad to avoid overlapping of their functions as happened in the past.

The committee, however, did not discuss Union Parishad Administration in the meeting.

Revenue collection maintenance of law and order and judiciary will be handled by separate sets of officers.

The chief executive officers of thanas will be designated as thana commissioners instead of deputy commissioners as recommended by the Administrative Reorganisation Committee.

The committee has dropped the proposal for creation of the posts of assistant commissioners (Development).

The BCS (Administrative) officers drawing pay in the scale of Tk 1400-1800 will be appointed thana commissioners. If sufficient number of officers belonging to this pay-scale group is not available the remaining be posts will filled in with the officers drawing pay in the scale of Tk 1400-2225.

According to a decision of the committee, Thana Parishads will be entrusted with the responsibility of setting up and supervising the growth of cottage industries with the assistance of IRDP Currently the Small Industries Corporation (BSIC) is doing the job.

It is learnt that Thana Parishad chairmen are likely to be nominated by the Government to function till election of Thana Parishad is held on the basis of new electoral rolls.

The Committee has fixed the status of Thana Parishad chairmen below the members of Parliament.

Before the constitution of the implementation Committee the Administrative Reorganisation Committee headed by DCMLA Rear Admiral Mahbub Ali Khan had recommended that thanas should be made basic units of administration, subdivisions should be upgraded as districts and elected local government at district, thana and union levels should take over all functions of development administration, and the responsibilities of regulatory and static administration may be transferred to the elected council within a time frame.

PLANS TO IMPROVE CHITTAGONG, TRIBAL WELFARE TOLD

Chittagong Committee Meeting

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 4 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] A meeting of the Council Committee on Chittagong Hill Tracts was held in Dacca on Sunday with the Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad in the chair reports BSS.

The meeting decided to draw a comprehensive plan for construction of office and residential buildings in the thana headquarters in Chittagong Hill Tracts districts to be taken up under the administrative reorganisation scheme.

Similar plans will be drawn up for the thana headquarters to be developed under the same scheme in other parts of the country.

The committee meeting which discussed in general the progress of development works in the Hill Tracts districts decided that a separate scheme be drawn up for sinking and resinking of deep tubewells in these districts to meet the requirement of drinking water.

The meeting also decided to create a cell in the Establishment Division to expedite the posting of officers for filling in the vacant posts in the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

It recommended that Cabinet Ministers should visit these districts to see the progress of development work there.

The meeting was informed that work on the construction of seven thana health centres in Hill Tracts districts is in progress. The construction of a 50-bed hospital at Ramgarh is under active consideration of the government.

The meeting was also informed that 1 500 landless Jhumia families will be rehabilitated in the unclassified state forest during the next two years. Of these 178 families have already been rehabilitated and 122 more will be settled this year.

The Forest Department has another scheme for raising pulp in unclassified state forest land under which 840 affected Jhumia families will be rehabilitated.

The meeting was attended among others by the DCMLAs Rear Admiral M. A. Khan and Air Vice-Marshal Sultan Mahmud, Minister for Foreign Affairs Mr. A. R. S. Doha, Minister for Finance and Planning Mr. A. M. A. Muhith, Agriculture Minister Mr. A. Z. M. Obaidullah Khan, Home Affairs Minister Major General Mahabbat Jan Chowdhury, the Chief of General Law Administrator Zone 'B' Major General Abdul Manuddin Khan, Zonal Martial Law Administrator Zone 'E' Major General K. M. Abdul Wahed and Director General BDR Major General R. A. M. Golam Mukhtadir.

Editorial Praises Moves

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 5 Oct 82 p 5

[Text] It has been the policy of the government to give as much importance to the tribal areas and to the people living there as possible, and this policy is being pursued consistently and vigorously. This, of course, is a part of the general policy of accelerating development in areas which are relatively backward, and of securing, in particular, the welfare of the disadvantaged. Special groups which have not been given in the past the amount and kind of attention they deserved to have cannot be ignored any longer. Developmental goals this country has been trying to attain are goals for bringing about meaningful changes in the standard of living of all the people, irrespective of their background or the area they inhabit. A committee of the Council of Ministers has been formed to look after the particular problems of the Chittagong Hill Tracts. This Committee met on Sunday last under the chairmanship of Lt. Gen. H.M. Ershad, the Chief Martial Law Administrator. The decisions that were taken in the meeting reflect the government's keen desire to expedite the growth process in the concerned districts and to help the tribal people in their efforts to advance.

Work has been started to rehabilitate landless Jhumia families, and nearly one hundred eighty families have already been rehabilitated. The rehabilitation is taking place in the unclassified state forests and the target this year is rehabilitation of more than one hundred and twenty families. In fact it is expected that a total of fifteen hundred families would be rehabilitated in the course of the next two years. This certainly is a commendable programme. The landless deserve to have particular attention, and when they come from areas in which economic activities, and therefore employment opportunities, have been rather limited for long in comparison to the other areas of the country, this attention should be close and given without fail.

Attempts are also being made to boost economic activities in these areas. This is evident from the decision of the Council Committee to have a separate scheme drawn up for sinking and re-sinking deep tubewells. This would facilitate activities in the agriculture sector and largely meet the requirement of drinking water. Construction of seven thana health centres is in progress. The question of establishing a fifty bed hospital at Ramgarh is also reportedly under active consideration. The Forest Department has undertaken a project for raising pulp in the unclassified state forest land, and it is expected that this would facilitate rehabilitation of nearly eight hundred and fifty Jhumia families. The point is that serious efforts are being made to develop the area and that the efforts are multi-dimensional.

The Council Committee seems to have particularly considered the question of administrative support that must be given to developmental efforts if these are to succeed. A decision has been taken to draw up a comprehensive plan for construction of office and residential buildings in the headquarters of those thanas in the Chittagong Hill Tracts that would be included in the programme for administrative reorganization. A cell is also being created in the Establishment Division for filling in, expeditiously, posts that are lying vacant in the area. More frequent visits by the Ministers to the tribal areas to see for themselves the progress of development schemes have also been recommended. All familiar with the tribal areas, the tribal people and the special problems they are faced with will appreciate both the measures the government has taken so far and the spirit behind those.

SCANDINAVIAN STATES GRANT AID FOR RURAL UPLIFT

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 23 Sep 82 p 8

[Text] The Swedish Ambassador Mr. Peder Hammarskjold, the Danish Charge d'Affaires Mr. Jene Ege, head of Norad Mission Mr. Helge Svenson and head of Swedish Development Co-operation Mr. Rolf H. Lickfett on Wednesday met the Minister for Local Government Mr. Mahbubur Rahman at his office chamber in the Secretariat reports BSS.

The heads of the Nordic Embassies and Missions came in connection with the involvement of Nordic countries like Sweden, Denmark and Norway in the implementation of 100-thana Intensive Rural Works Programme sponsored by the Local Government Ministry.

Welcoming the visitors the Minister said that the present government attached topmost priority to the development of rural areas and rural people.

The Nordic countries so far committed Taka 32 crore for an initial period of three years for development of rural infrastructure like roads, small irrigation and drainage facilities, development of rural markets and construction of thana and UP offices and community centres. The programme will involve an expenditure of about Taka 500 crore in 100 thanas within the next eight years.

The Swedish Ambassador stated that his country is thankful to the Government of Bangladesh by being able to participate in the rural development of the country through Intensive Rural Works Programme (IRWP) and his country would find this opportunity to expand the programme in a bigger way. In this context he had mentioned the need for integration and proper cooperation between different agencies involved in the rural works more specifically between food for works and rural works. He then mentioned government's commitment in this respect in the Aid Consortium meeting held in Paris in April 1982. He also emphasised on the proper organisational capability of the rural works programme so that it can handle larger investment in rural works forthcoming through IRWP.

The Minister informed the Ambassador that this Ministry would co-ordinate the local development activities through the local bodies with the participation of local people and as such the food for works and rural works will be integrated with each other with the food input from the Ministry of Food.

The Minister also informed that a radical re-organisation has been made to the existing ad-hoc temporary establishment of works programme by elevating it to a full fledged works programme wing which will ensure proper implementation of rural works.

He further stated that the works programme wing will ensure proper accountability, define job responsibilities and establish proper chain of command amongst the officers and staff of the wing for efficient implementation of the programme.

Under the changed circumstances works would be taken up solely on its merit and developmental orientation and will not get preference on political consideration. The Minister also assured that the works programme wing would facilitate proper implementation of the works and would help in expanding the programme further.

The representative of the three countries felt very encouraged to know the recent efforts & endeavours made in the government in organising the rural works into sound organisational footing and also having commitment of this Ministry in intensifying the rural development activities at the grass-root level. The representatives also informed the Minister that their respective countries would look forward for greater co-operation and participation in funding the Intensive Rural Works Programme in Bangladesh.

ENVOY SPEAKS IN 8 OCT UNGA DEBATE ON LEBANON

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 9 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] United Nations, Oct. 8:--Bangladesh told the General Assembly last night that the latest Israeli holocaust in Lebanon had rendered the Middle East more explosive than ever before, reports IINA.

Speaking in the general debate, Permanent Representative Khwaja Wasiuddin expressed his country's abhorrence over the massacre of a large number of innocent Palestinians and said that the situation in the troubled region posed a serious threat to international peace and security.

This was due to Israel's persistent denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people he said. Bangladesh viewed the question of Palestine as the core of the Middle East problem.

There would be no peace unless the Palestinian people exercised their legitimate right to return to their homeland and their right to self-determination and established a state of their own under the leadership of the PLO, their legitimate representative Mr. Wasiuddin said, adding Israel should withdraw completely from all territories occupied since 1967.

Bangladesh chief delegate was distressed at the continuing conflict between Iran and Iraq which Bangladesh as a member of the Islamic Peace Committee had tried to resolve peacefully. He appealed to both countries to stop the armed conflict and resolve the differences through peaceful means.

Equally disheartening were the still unresolved crises in Afghanistan and Kampuchea, he said calling for withdrawal of all foreign troops from those countries, so that the people there could determine their own destiny without outside intervention.

Referring to the Namibia issue, he appreciated the sustained mediatory efforts of the five Western powers in evolving an agreement on Namibia's transition to independence.

NEW GUILDELINES FOR FOREIGN EXCHANGE CREDIT ANNOUNCED

Dhaka THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 15 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Bangladesh bank on Thursday announced a set of new guidelines for commercial credit in foreign exchange.

The guidelines, a Bangladesh Bank Press release said, would help interested parties to submit only deserving proposals to Bangladesh Bank with appropriate documentation in a manner that would enable Bangladesh Bank to process these proposals expeditiously.

Proposals for loans on commercial terms would now be received by the Exchange Control Department (Controller of Foreign Exchange) of Bangladesh Bank which would scrutinise these proposals in the light of Government policy and process it further for decision by the Standing Committee on Hard Term Loans.

It may be recalled that this Standing Committee on Hard Term Loans headed by the Finance Minister was set up sometime back to consider and decide proposals for loans on commercial terms keeping in view the overall foreign Exchange debt service burden of the Government and prudent management of debts.

Various issues and matters connected with consideration of such commercial loans by the Government are set out below for information and guidance of all concerned:

Loan proposals on commercial terms can be initiated by any public sector agency or by the private sector. These proposals generally comprise supplier's credit/buyer's credit provided by official export credit agencies of various countries, commercial banks and other financial institutions or private funds. Ordinarily loans with medium term maturity of 1 to 12 years or effective interest rate of 5% and above would be considered as loan on commercial terms. These loans can be used for setting up industries both in public and private sector or could be used for procurement of equipment, ships, etc. or could be general purpose loans provided to the Government. Terms and conditions of loans of official export credit agencts are generally standard and, therefore, proposals for such loans can be processed expeditiously provided the loan proposal is supported by commitment from the official export credit agency concerned. In case where such export credit agency wants guarantee from the Government of Bangladesh Bank, then such loan has to be routed through one of the two development financial institutions viz BSB/BSRS which will act on behalf of the Government and arrange for necessary local security against the loan.

In case of other institutional loans or loans from private sources normally no guarantee from the Government or Bangladesh Bank will be issued. In such cases the users of the loans should make appropriate arrangement through their banks for providing guarantee to the foreign leaders. Bangladesh Bank can at best assure or guarantee that foreign exchange cover will be provided according to the approved repayment schedule on receipt of local counterpart Taka. In case where Government itself or Bangladesh Bank is the borrower, guarantee by Bangladesh Bank or the Government can be provided through appropriate instrument; but no guarantee from any foreign bank will be provided. The terms and conditions of the loan envisaged above would suggest that the projects/purposes for which the loans would be used should be either foreign exchange earning or import saving or of high national priority, so that the foreign exchange loans can be repaid from the foreign exchange earning or saving of the concerned project. In case of loans from financial institutions or private sources, rate of interest could be either fixed or linked with LIBOR or prime lending rate.

DACCA DELEGATE ADDRESSES GROUP OF 77 MEETING

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 11 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] New York, Oct. 10: Bangladesh has decided to host next year one of the Group-77 expert meetings as a step to back the commitment of the Group, Industries and Commerce Minister Mr Shafiul Azam said here on Thursday, reports BSS.

Addressing a ministerial meeting of the Group, he said, Bangladesh would set up a special inter-ministerial unit on the activities of economic cooperation for developing countries (ECDC). Its work would be periodically reviewed at the highest level.

Mr Azam called for close coordination among the member countries and evolving an effective negotiating strategy to maintain and promote the interests of the Group during the current session of the General Assembly.

Describing the deterioration in the current international economic environment as 'unprecedented and alarming' the Minister observed that for the first time the developing countries had registered a negative growth rate.

He told the meeting that various factors including decline in the export, increasing cost of imports, and soaring inflation had pushed the developing countries, particularly the least developing nations to the 'brink of economic collapse.'

Mr Azam pointed out that the export price of jute and jute goods, which collectively make up 85 per cent of the country's exports, was today in real terms lower than they had been in the past 30 years.

Referring to the recently formed International Jute Organisation (IJO) the Minister expressed the hope that it would help improve conditions for jute exports which was of vital importance for a number of countries including Bangladesh.

The Minister pointed out that the flow of assistance for the least developed countries had failed to reach anywhere near the target envisaged in the programme. 'In reality it has declined resulting in increasing the burden and hardship on our already weak and depressed economies.'

Expressing concern at the food situation in the developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries, the Minister regretted that no progress was made towards establishment of a world food security system. 'Neither have we been able to establish a food security system of our own among the developing countries', he said.

Mr Azam told the meeting that Bangladesh noted with growing concern the steady decline of multilateral institutions and multilateral programmes. 'We are particularly distressed by the erosion of authority and responsibilities of the UN specialised agencies' he pointed out.

The Group 77, he said, must do everything in its power to defend the UN system and reverse this unfortunate decline in multilateral assistance.

HIGH COMMISSIONER TO AUSTRALIA PRESENTS CREDENTIALS

Dhaka THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 15 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Sir Ninian Stephen, the Governor-General of Australia appreciated the constructive efforts of the present Government of Bangladesh to implement the policies conducive to economic growth and wellbeing, according to an official handout.

Sir Ninian Stephen's appreciation came when the new Bangladesh High Commissioner Mr Harun-ur-Rashid presented his credentials to him at the Government House in Canberra on October 7. The Governor-General had further stated that Australia had been a friend of Bangladesh from time of its independence and relations between the two countries continued to grow in different levels.

Regarding the role of Bangladesh in international forums Sir Stephen said that Bangladesh was an active and respected member of variety of international forums and the efforts of Bangladesh to contribute towards peace and security in the region and the positive approach taken by Bangladesh on so many matters of international concern were praiseworthy.

Presenting his credentials the Bangladesh High Commissioner said that the two countries had many things in common and expressed the hope that he would strive to promote further the ties of friendship and cooperation between Bangladesh and Australia during the term of his office.

The High Commissioner informed the Governor-General of the constructive and corrective measures taken by the present Government to tackle manifold problems confronting Bangladesh. The envoy also appraised the Governor-General of the initiative of Bangladesh in creating a climate of trust and understanding with its neighbouring countries and in this context referred to the concept of South Asian Forum for Cooperation which had made significant progress.

DEPUTY ADMINISTRATOR DISCUSSES ELECTRIFICATION PLANS

Dhaka THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 13 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Sayestaganj (Sylhet) Oct. 12:--The government is determined to implement rural electrification programme throughout the country by 1995, Deputy Chief Martial Law Administrator Air Vice Marshal Sultan Mahmud said here today reports BSS.

He said the initial investment for the execution of the programme at the present money-value will be around Taka 2100 crore with a foreign exchange component of Taka 1400 crore.

The DCMLA who is in charge of the Ministry of Energy and Mineral Resources was speaking at the energisation ceremony of Sylhet Palli Bidyut Samity (PBS)-1. Rural Electrification Board (REB), the executing agency for the programme, has drawn up a 17-year master plan to develop an infrastructure of total electrification of the country in five phases.

Brig. Sabihuddin Ahmed, Chairman, R.E.B. and Syed Mohammad Shahiahan, President of the samity also spoke on the occasion.

Air Vice Marshal Sultah Mahmud said the rural electrification programme has the potentialities for building a strong economic infrastructure of the country adding the government was promise-bound to develop the socio-economic base of rural Bangladesh.

While highlighting the role of rural electrification in the backdrop of total national development the DCMLA said, electrification was not only an important element of infrastructure, but a precondition for development. The government has given priority on rural electrification for accelerating the pace of development the Air Vice Marshal added.

Referring to the administrative reorganization, the DCMLA observed that distribution of power through palli bidyut samity was a significant and far-reaching step in the decentralisation process. He said the programme of the samity was a fine example of self-reliance of self-administration. He hoped the hard and sincere labour of samity members will not be confined alone in the economic development but would bring about a planned peaceful and bountiful change in the whole socio-economic pattern.

On the question of crores of Taka being invested in the various samitys, the energy minister said the main objective of this huge investment was to change the lot of rural people. He called upon the local people to come forward and invest in industry and agriculture as soon as they get electricity.

The DCMLA said the government was aware of the hardship the people are facing because of high cost of diesel and kerosene. He said the programme of rural electrification will continue to get priority to mitigate the sufferings of the commonmen. With people's total support the programme will be executed at the earliest possible time the DCMLA added.

The Minister thanked the people and the Government of the United States for their financial support for implementing the project.

Chairman of the Rural Electrification Board Brig. Sabihuddin Ahmed said in over two years' time after the first samity was energised nearly one lakh houses were electrified. He said Taka 438 crore will be spent in five years ending next year enabling 125 thanas to get electricity. He said till now the Board has erected 3200 miles of distribution line against Power Development Board's distribution line of over 11 thousand miles.

Terming the enthusiasm of the consumers as "very good" Brig. Sabihuddin said we want to bring about a "revolution through rural electrification."

INDIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER CLARIFIES POSITION ON RIVERS

Dhaka THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 13 Oct 82 p 8

[Text] Following is the full text of the Press release issued by Indian High Commission in Dhaka on Tuesday, reports BSS.

"There has been some unnecessary speculation and comment in sections of the Bangladesh media based on an incorrect report in a local newspaper to the effect that India had declared nine rivers, including the Ganga and the Brahmaputra, which are common to India and Bangladesh, as "national rivers".

The correct facts are explained below: "In India, inland water transport comes under the purview of the state governments which normally administer and undertake development schemes relating to routes within their respective territories. This naturally gives rise to problems in undertaking adequate measures for improvement and of co-ordination and standardisation with respect to important inland water transport routes on major rivers which traverse more than one state. There have, therefore, been proposals from time to time to declare such major interstate inland water transport routes as "national waterways" as provided for in the Indian Constitution, similar to the "national highway" system covering important inter-state roads for which the Central Government is directly responsible. On October 6, 1982, a Bill to declare the Allahabad-Haldia stretch of the Ganga-Bhagirathi-Hooghly river as a "national waterway" was unanimously approved in the Indian Lok Sabha. While welcoming the Bill, several members of Parliament suggested that various other major river systems in India like the Narmada, Godavari, Krishna and Tapti also be declared as national waterways. The Indian Minister of State for Shipping and Transport, Mr Sita Ram Kesori, who piloted the Bill, assured the members that the Government would carefully consider the demand.

METRIC SYSTEM TO BE IMPLEMENTED BY 1 JAN 1983

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 8 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] A number of organisations and undertakings including all private trade and commerce are required to introduce the Metric System of weights and measures on January 1 next year according to a Gazette notification issued on September 11 last, reports BSS.

These organisations and undertakings are (1) Directorate of Food, (2) Cable Industries, (3) Bangladesh Biman Corporation, (4) Trading Corporation of Bangladesh, (5) Metrology Department, (6) all research organisations and (7) all private trade and commerce.

According to the provisions of the Standards of Weights and Measures Ordinance 1982, no weight or measure other than those in the Metric System can be used in respect of these organisations and undertakings after the expiry of six months from January 1. Accordingly, this transition period of six months will expire on June 30 next year during which the new system of weights and measures will have to be introduced compulsorily.

There is, however, no bar in introducing the new system in any organisation or undertaking before the date fixed by the government for the purpose. The new system can be introduced beforehand according to the convenience of the organisations and undertakings.

It may also be mentioned here that the Government had earlier fixed July 1, 1982 as the date for introducing the Metric System in the pharmaceutical industries. As such the transition period of six months in respect of the pharmaceutical industries will expire on December 31 next.

The Standards of Weights and Measures Ordinance 1982 provides for penalty for use of non-standard weights or measures after the expiry of the transition period. Whoever uses any weights and measures or makes any numeration other than in accordance with the standards of weights or measures prescribed by the Government shall be punished with imprisonment for terms which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to one thousand taka, and for the second offence, with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years and also with fine.

In this connection may be mentioned that enough weights (masses) in Metric system are available with the authorised manufacturers. Such manufacturers are manufacturing and selling weights according to specifications prescribed by the Bangladesh Standards Instituton. Beside, these are also available with the dealers in the local markets and in the Bangladesh Standards Institution, 3 DIT (Extension) Avenue, Motijheel Commercial Area, Dhaka-2.

All traders and others concerned have been advised to acquire Metric weights and measures immediately and contribute to smooth and timely introduction of the new system in the country.

BANKS PLAN MOVE TO OFFSET EFFECTS OF RECESSION

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 9 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Mostafa Kamal]

[Text] The nationalised commercial banks of the country plan a major thrust to help generate economic activities in the rural and housing sectors. The measure is designed to off-set the adverse effects of economic recession owing to national and global factors, said the Governor of Bangladesh Bank, Mr Nurul Islam, in an interview with the TIMES.

Underlining the effects of recession now prevailing, he said it even restricted positive effects of credit operations by the banks calling for a new shift in this policy.

Elaborating, he said the poor performance of the overall economy during the past fiscal year (1981-82), when the growth rate was almost nil, had aggravated the unemployment situation.

Negative growth in the agriculture sector (2.2 per cent), which contributes 54 per cent towards the national income and employs 75 per cent of the labour force, severely handicapped a vast chain of economic activities that resulted from purchase, sale, processing, and transport of agricultural produces.

The growth in the industries sector was much less than the preceding year, while the trade and transport sectors also recorded negative growth.

In such a situation, the Bangladesh Bank Governor said the banks could do very little for those sectors which could not market their produces due to recession. The banks also cannot generate economic activities by themselves.

Although the rate of inflation came down globally during the past year, international economic growth had not been encouraging. Bangladesh thus continued to face adverse terms of trade, and export earnings did not mark an increase. The demand for our exports was also slack Mr Nurul Islam said.

Anti-inflationary Steps

Some anti-inflationary measures, like opportunities for declaring untaxed income, vigorous drive for collection of taxes, and various government fees and bills during past one year had a salutary effect and the rate of inflation came down from more than 10 per cent to slightly more than 7 per cent.

The Bangladesh Bank Governor said that the declaration of Taka 273 crore untaxed income had reduced the quantity of floating money. The permission to invest such money in industries could have a favourable impact on production, and would be good for the economy as a whole.

Unemployment

The rate of unemployment was soaring in countries like Bangladesh which now were experiencing about 20 per cent unemployment rate.

The drive against smuggling, corruption, and other undue practices would have positive impact on the economy in the long run. However, for the moment these contributed to the reduction of some activities thus adding more heads in the list of unemployed people.

Rural Credit

Mr Nurul Islam said that against such a backdrop the commercial banks of the country had been instructed to substantially increase rural credit. This was meant for boosting non-agricultural rural economic activities like viable cottage industries, handicrafts etc.

The Bangladesh Bank Governor could not mention the exact quantum of money to be pumped into the rural sector, but said it would be "substantial". The aim was to compensate the slump in growth in other sectors, and also to help raise the production of goods and services which are in good demand to meet our needs, he said.

Housing Sector

In the housing sector which registered 4 per cent growth during the 1981-82 fiscal year, the banks would contribute more than Taka 80 crore to the House Building Finance Corporation to help expand its activities in a bigger way.

The Bangladesh Bank Governor hoped that expansion of activities in the rural and the housing sectors would help to ease the unemployment to some extent.

WORLD BANK UNHAPPY WITH BANGLADESH BANK PERFORMANCE

Dhaka THE NEW NATION in English 14 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] The bad performance of the Bangladesh Shilpa Bank (BSB), entrusted with the task of industrialisation with the foreign assistance has generated concern among the donor agencies including the World Bank.

The World Bank is learnt to have registered its dissatisfaction by asking the BSB to refrain from receiving applications for loans against new industrial projects. But it has promised disbursement of credit for the already sanctioned projects.

In an appraisal of the performance of the BSB the World Bank observed that the financial institution was not worth of getting credit, in any way as it had failed to substantially contribute to the growth of a viable private industrial sector.

The organisational flaws, defective policies and irrational procedures were mentioned as reasons for the failure of the BSB to rise up to its task.

Cash flow problems faced by the BSB due to its institutional difficulties have stood in the way of its debt servicing and meeting its commitment to the projects already sanctioned.

It is learnt that many of the BSB approved projects have not sprung up in spite of the disbursement of its loan commitment to them. Consequently, the list of the BSB-approved projects has kept on becoming long, but the growth of industrial sector has remained spectacularly slow.

The International Development Agency (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank, provides bulk of the credit received by the BSB from different foreign donors.

It was suggested by the World Bank to conduct a thorough-going study of the situation prevailing in the financial institution with a view to working out ways and means to rectify its institutional and procedural defects. But the study should be undertaken by a consultant acceptable to the IDA.

Immediate appointment of a managing director and three general managers has also been suggested by the World Bank. At present the BSB is managed by an acting managing director. Following the withdrawal of the World Bank's financial support for the BSB from this week it is likely that 50 per cent of the appraiser staffs will be transferred to loan recovery section, a source said.

JUTE, TEXTILE MILLS BACK TO OWNERS IN DECEMBER

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 2 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] A special meeting of the Consultative Committee for Ministry of Industry and Commerce was held in Dacca on Friday with the Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. H. M. Ershad in the chair reports BSS.

The meeting which reviewed the country's export import and industrial policies decided that the jute mills and the textile mills belonging to the Bangladeshi nationals be returned to their owners by December 16 next.

It was suggested in the meeting that incentives for export be further augmented to achieve the current year's target of export and the procedures for import of raw materials for export-oriented industries be simplified. Customs rules should have to be rationalised to ensure their easy availability it pointed out.

The meeting suggested that necessary measures be taken to strengthen stock exchange to attract domestic and foreign investments.

Other suggestions included provision for easy and cheap transportation facilities to gear up economic activities and ensuring security and stability of industrial investment through appropriate policy measures.

The CMLA gave a patient hearing to the suggestions made by the members of the committee and disclosed that appropriate action has already been initiated.

He reminded the officials that the decisions taken by the Government should be implemented promptly by the functionaries of the Government organisations and agencies at the field level.

He gave the directive that heads of different government agencies should start consultations with representative group of trade commerce and industry for ensuring effective implementation of policies already adopted by the government on import export industry trade and tariff.

General Ershad informed the meeting that during his stay in Saudi Arabia where he went to perform Hajj he had meetings with Saudi industrialists and business community. They showed keen interest in undertaking joint ventures in Bangladesh.

He said possibilities of joint ventures in Bangladesh with participation of Saudi investors may be explored particularly in the field of food and fruit processing and canning industries.

The Chairman of the Consultative Committee Industries and Commerce Minister Shafiul Azam, other members of the Committee, leading businessmen and industrialists and top executives of commercial banks were also present at the meeting.

RAILWAY EARNINGS INCREASE, SECURITY IMPROVES

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 2 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Railway Administration has attained a significant improvement in all branches of operation with the active participation, hard work and dedication of its employees since promulgation of Martial Law according to a Press release in Dacca on Friday night reports BSS.

Refuting an allegation published in a Bengali daily in its September 28 issue the Press release said that the particulars mentioned "give an erroneouse and misleading picture of the existing stage of improved law and order and crime rate in the trains" and at stations of Bangladesh Railway.

The paper in the article had stated that the crime on board the trains has increased during the last eight months as compared to the same period of 1981.

The Railway earnings have increased from Tk 41 crores during the period of April to August 1981 to Tk 57 crores during the same period of 1982 showing a rise of over 40 per cent the Press release said. The punctuality of trains in case of mail and express is 90 per cent as compared to 75 per cent in 1981 and punctuality of passenger trains is now 85 per cent compared to 65 per cent of the previous year. It is expected that the figure for the month of September 1982 will still be better; the number of engine failures has also been less than the corresponding period of 1981.

The number of accidents since imposition of Martial Law has been only 55 as against 67 during the corresponding period of the last year; most of these accidents have occurred due to poor track condition in Rajshahi, Ammura and Bagerhat-Rupsa sections where works for track rehabilitation have already commenced.

The Press release said that there has been no dacoity with murder since imposition of Martial Law in any of the trains either in East or West Zone of the Railway. There has been only one case of killing in the railway premises at Sylhet Railway Station.

In other seven cases dead bodies were found lying on the track after killing by accused so as to suggest these were cases of suicide or run over by trains.

There have been 24 cases of robbery in the past five months of Martial Law as against 18 in the first three months of 1982. There has been an increase in the cases of theft numbering 132 registered with the police as opposed to 123 such cases in the first three months.

The Press release pointed out that the rise presumably is due to better according and detection of cases of pickpocketing and petty theft. It may also be mentioned that there has been no report of poisoning by "Dhutra" on any train in the period since Martial Law. There have been 134 cases of smuggling of which 99 cases have been detected since imposition of Martial Law as opposed to total detection of 94 cases in first eight months of last year registering a rise of about 30 per cent in the detection of smuggling cases. Better detection of smuggling cases shows increased alertness and vigilance. It may also be stated here that in number of cases deterrent actions have been taken against police personnel whenever any negligence or carelessness on their part found. As many as 51 such officials have been either dismissed or suspended. The number of culprits apprehended by the GRP has shown a substantial improvement. Only in the Chittagong Zone as many as 2561 persons has been arrested and sent for trial as against only 866 persons apprehended during corresponding period of last year.

Bangladesh Railway runs every day 350 trains on its system carrying over three lacs passengers per day. Thus in each month over ten thousand trains have been run carrying over nine million passengers so far in 1982. The incidence of dacoity or robbery when compared to number of trains run gives a more realistic picture of the law and order situation. Most of the thefts and burglaries have occurred in the yards and not on trains. The Railway has requisitioned the services of 600 Ansars to augment the strength of the normal Railway Police. In this respect a scheme for strengthening the Railway Police and streamlining the Railway Nirapatta Bahin i have been forwarded to the Cabinet Division for necessary action the Press release added.

Maximum safety and comfort of the passengers is the objective of the present Railway Administration which is striving against accumulated backlog of neglect and inefficiency to provide travelling public with legitimate and rightful facilities the press release observed.

The Govt has adopted firm policy of taking prompt and effective action against incidence of neglect or dereliction in duty. It is hoped that with the cooperation of travelling public Bangladesh Railway will be able to provide still better record of performance in future the press release said.

INDIA REPORTED INTERESTED IN LONGTERM GAS IMPORT

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 6 Oct 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Hasan Saeed]

[Text] India wants to buy 1.5 trillion cubic feet of natural gas from Bangladesh over a period of 20 years.

Although Bangladesh has not finalised its thinking on the sale it has indicated to New Delhi that upto one trillion cubic feet of gas can be made available for the proposed period.

Bangladesh has proven gas reserve of 10 trillion cubic feet from its 10 active gas fields. It was, however, believed that Bangladesh gas reserve would be much higher than the existing proven estimate.

Chief Martial Law Administrator General Ershad and Indian Prime Minister Mrs Indira Gandhi meeting in New Delhi today is expected to discuss the matter. Officials of the two countries may later finalise the details of the sale.

India had shown its interest in Bangladesh gas in July 1980 when a secretary-level delegation flew into Dacca to initiate the talks for the purchase of the gas.

India needs the gas for meeting chronic energy crisis in West Bengal where a left alliance is running the government.

If the two countries agree to the figure of one tcf and taking the recovery ratio at 0.75 per cent, it would mean gas supply to India at the rate of 100 million cubic feet per day.

Bangladesh will first separate the condensate and higher hydrocarbons and export primary methane.

It will take between two and half years to three years to lay the pipelines from Bangladesh gas fields to the delivery point in India. The time for the commencement of the gas supply to India, if the agreement is reached, will finally depend on availability of funds and time taken for construction of pipelines and other installations and facilities. India has not identified the delivery point.

Bangladesh needs to construct a gas supply grid to improve security of the delivery system. River Jamuna will pose a major problem in lying the pipelines.

It was expected in Dacca that India would bear the cost of the construction of the pipelines, currently the cost of lying a 24-inch pipeline for a 110-mile-long project in Bangladesh is roughly Taka 13 million per mile. India could raise the funds from the World Bank and other international financing agencies.

There appears to be a difference between the two countries over the price of gas to be reached at the delivery point in India. The cost of gas will depend on development of the gas fields, processing and refinement, transportation, storage, domestic consumption as well as effect on enviornmental pollution.

In the last official discussions, Bangladesh delegation suggested that the price of gas should be in terms of thermal equivalent of crude oil, after adjusting the price so obtained with transportation, refining and storage cost necessary for processing crude petroleum, in addition to a premium for the non-polluting enviornmental effect of using gas.

PAKISTAN AGREES TO TAKE MORE STRANDED PAKISTANIS

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 6 Oct 82 p 1

[Article by Zainul Abedin]

[Text] Pakistan will take an additional number of 2,336 stranded Pakistanis raising their total to 7,000 a reliable source said.

A number of fresh clearance from Pakistan were received by the nonlocals in the past couple of days.

However, it is not known how these additional number of people will be repatriated.

The source pointed out that Pakistan had agreed to take 25,000 of its citizens at the end of talks between late President Ziaur Rahman and Pakistan President Ziaul Huq.

Of them, about 18,000 were repatriated in 1979 by ship.

When the talks for repatriation were renewed early this year Pakistan had reportedly indicated its willingness to take the remaining 7,000 stranded Pakistanis while the negotiation for total repatriation of the stranded Pakistanis continued.

However, Pakistan provided clearance to only 4,664 to the surprise of the Bangladesh Government officials who however were optimistic that the Pakistan authorities would reverse their decision.

It may be added that there were about seven lakh nonlocals in Bangladesh. Of them, 4,62,000 had enrolled themselves with the International Committee of Red Cross for their repatriation to Pakistan. Only 12,2,000 stranded Pakistanis could be repatriated till 1974 when the biggest ever transshipment of people under repatriation programme was stopped.

Meanwhile, the second batch of 192 stranded Pakistanis, including 16 babies, left Dhaka on Tuesday for Karachi by Bangladesh Biman raising the total to 352 Pakistanis and their 42 babies.

Brotherly Relation

Meanwhile a Press release from Pakistan Embassy in Dhaka on Tuesday said, Federal Minister for Information and Broadcasting Raja Mohammed Zafarul Huq received the first batch of non Bengalis at Karachi Airport on behalf of President Ziaul Huq and the Government of Pakistan.

Expressing gratitude towards UNHER Saudi Arabia and other friendly countries for cooperation in making repatriation arrangement, Raja Mohammed Zafrul Huq said that the relation between Bangladesh and Pakistan was extremely good and brotherly. 'The two nations have been cooperating with each other in almost every sphere of life including international development and economic relations' he said.

BANGLADESH DELEGATE TO HEAD GROUP OF 77

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 10 Oct 82 p 1

[Text]

UNITED NATIONS, Oct. 9:—Mr. Farooq Sobhan of Bangladesh was elected last night the Chairman of the Group of 77 (developing countries) that makes him the spokesman for the Third World at the U.N. till September next, reports IINA.

The election of Mr. Sobhan, Deputy Permanent Representative of his country to the U.N. was by acclamation. He was a nominee of the Asian group.

"It's great honour for Bangladesh" Mr. Sobhan told IINA correspondent after his election which took place at the concluding session of A G-77 ministerial-level meeting. The group now consists of more than 120 countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

"I feel very conscious of the challenge and the complexity of the task ahead", he added.

In the weeks ahead Mr. Sobhan said, his principal concern would be intensification of co-operation among the developing countries, opening of discussion with the western countries for the purpose of launching global negotiations and harmonising positions of the developing countries on priority economic issues before the current session of the U.N. General Assembly.

The North-South dialogue is stalled because of objections by developed countries principally the United States over procedures agenda and time-frame.

BRIEFS

BANGLADESHIS IN BEIRUT--Dubai, Oct. 11: About 400 Bangladeshis died in Lebanon while fighting side by side with the Palestinians against the Israelis, Bangladesh's Minister for Manpower Air Vice-Marshal Aminul Islam has been quoted as saying. According to a report in Dubai daily GULF NEWS, Air Vice-Marshal Islam who arrived in Abu Dhabi last Saturday on an office visit, said a number of other Bangladeshis were either missing or were wounded and some had also been taken to prison by the Israelis. But the Minister declined to answer if they had been sponsored by the government to fight alone with the PLO. "The important thing is that they come from our country. It is unimportant who sponsored them," he was quoted as saying. He described Dhaka's relations with Arab countries as "excellent". [Excerpt] [Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 12 Oct 82 p 1]

WHEAT FROM UK--Bangladesh will receive 5,000 tons of wheat from the United Kingdom as grant under an agreement signed between the two countries in Dacca yesterday, reports BSS. The quantity of wheat, valued at approximately Taka 1.56 crore, will be used under Food for Works Programme sponsored by the government during 1982-83. The agreement was signed by the Secretary, External Resources Division, Mr Mofizur Rahman, and the British High Commissioner, Mr F. Miles, on behalf of their respective governments. Since liberation the British government has given Bangladesh a total of 176,000 tons of wheat including yesterday's 5,000 tons as grant to Bangladesh. Besides, the British government has also been providing substantial amount of project, commodity and technical assistance to Bangladesh. Speaking on the occasion, the British High Commissioner said the quantity of wheat had been provided to Bangladesh on her request on bilateral basis. Mr. Miles said that Britain contributed 19 per cent total assistance given to Bangladesh by the European community in multilateral frame work. Mr. Mofizur Rahman thanked the British government for providing the grant and said this gesture was symbolic of Britain's concern about our food sector. PAPER REPORTS 11 OCT TALKS WITH FRENCH MINISTER

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 12 Oct 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 11.--The Indian and French Defence Ministers today reiterated the need for strengthening and expanding defence cooperation between their two countries, in terms of the memorandum of understanding signed by the two, and to help promote such cooperation as an instrument for preserving and promoting the rights of man.

In their talks at the South Block and later at the Hyderabad House banquet, hosted in the French Minister's honour by Mr R. Venkataraman, Indian Defence Minister, the leaders emphasized the need for their two countries to build on the links already established by their Governments during the past year and earlier.

The wide-ranging discussions between Mr Charles Henru, French Defence Minister, and Mr Venkataraman covered a broad spectrum of bilateral defence cooperation. The Mirage deal, the supply of the first batch of 40 and the manufacture within the country of a later lot also figured in the discussions.

But the Mirage deal, according to the Defence Ministry spokesman, came up only in passing, as part of an overall discussion.

Mr Henru, during the discussions, pointed out that with the nationalization of the French arms industry, he saw no difficulty in the sharing and transfer of technology between France and India. France would be willing, he said, to provide technical training to Indian personnel in French arms manufacturing and training institutions.

The two-hour talks between the two Ministers, attended by senior aides on both sides, covered, according to a Defence Ministry Press release, the question of strengthening defence cooperation.

Mr Venkataraman told Mr Henru that India had been using French equipment, like tanks and jet fighters, for a number of years. India has also been manufacturing, under licence, French equipment, like the Alduette helicopter. The two countries had concluded a memorandum of understanding, which covered the acquisition of the Mirage-2000. This, he said, was a further step towards the establishment of sustained cooperation in the field of defence.

Mr Venkataraman pointed out that since the early days of Indo-French cooperation, India's industrial base had expanded considerably, and the nation was now in a position to take up not only the manufacture, but even research and development activities, in wider and more sophisticated areas than was possible earlier.

Mr Henru, who is accompanied by his wife, was received by Mr K. P. Singh Deo, the Chiefs of Staff of the Army, Navy and the Air Force, the Defence Secretary, Mr P. K. Kaul, and the Secretary, Research and Development, Dr V. S. Arunachalam. Mr Henru is calling on the Prime Minister tomorrow.

At the banquet, Mr Venkataraman described Mr Henru as a man who may appropriately be termed to represent the "spirit of France". In this spirit was embodied the indomitable will of man and his most cherished fundamental values of "liberty, equality, fraternity". The people of India had inscribed in their Constitution the right of the individual to justice, liberty and equality, and the duty of the State to promote amongst the people a feeling of fraternity.

The Defence Forces, he added, served as an instrument for preserving and promoting the rights of man. "I believe that the cooperation we are now engaged upon would help strengthen this instrument, so that we may ensure peace and freedom for our people and enable them to pursue the goals of liberty, equality and fraternity.

"Though this is the first visit to our country by a French Defence Minister, cooperation in the defence sphere between our two countries has been significant. This cooperation has now been recognized in the memorandum of understanding signed between us, which I have no doubt, will contribute significantly to the evergrowing relationship between India and France", Mr Venkataraman added.

CPI GENERAL SECRETARY DISCUSSES LEFTIST MOVEMENT

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 12 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] Bhubaneswar, Oct. 11.--Mr C. Rajeswara Rao, general-secretary of the Communist Party of India, said here today that six Left and democratic parties proposed to begin a nationwide movement for the introduction of the system of monopoly purchase of foodgrain by the Government instead of the existing procurement system, provision of remunerative prices for farmers' produce and revamping of the public distribution system.

Addressing a Press conference here, he said the shape of the movement would be decided by the parties which had given their consent--the CPI, CPI(M), All-India Forward Bloc, Revolutionary Socialist Party, Democratic Socialist Party and the Workers and Peasants Party. Other Left and democratic parties were being contacted.

Mr Rao said the system of procurement in different States had failed to mop up marketable surplus foodgrain which was essential to meet the shortfall of 20 million tons this year caused by drought, flood and other natural calamities. The Government must introduce a system of monopoly purchase of foodgrain and fix a remunerative price to make the scheme successful. The public distribution system should be streamlined.

Mr Rao demanded that the price of Rs 122 a quintal, fixed for procurement of rice, be enhanced to Rs 140 a quintal and the procurement system be replaced by monopoly purchase by the Government.

Labour-intensive work schemes should begin immediately in affected States.

He felt that a scheme similar to the employment guarantee scheme in Maharashtra should be introduced in other States. Recovery of lands and collection of land revenue must be suspended. Advisory committees consisting of representatives of different political parties should be set up at all levels to help the Government tackle the situation.

Making a special mention of Orissa, Mr Rao said that the State had suffered from cyclones, floods and drought. The Centre must aid the State to save people from famine.

Mr Rao said the spectre of famine was looming large over different parts of the country. He demanded that the Centre make available adequate quantities of foodgrain to meet the situation.

WRITER EXAMINES 'DEVELOPING CRISIS' IN CPI

BK100218 Delhi INDIAN EXPRESS in English 30 Sep 82 p 6

[Article by H.K. Dua, "The Developing Crisis in CPI"]

[Text] A fierce debate is raging in the Communist Party of India [CPI], the outcome of which will decide the future of the party, and the leadership of Mr C. Rajeswara Rao, which is being challenged by his critics. Polemics apart, the debate involves the CPI's attitude to Mrs Indira Gandhi's government on the one hand, and the party's relationship with the CPI (M) and the BJP [Baharatiya Janata Party] on the other. As is natural in the affairs of the CPI, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union is known to be taking a deep interest in the debate and has perhaps decided to influence its outcome.

Mrs Gandhi is the focal point of the debate. Whatever the past relationship between Mrs Gandhi and the CPI, lately she has exhibited considerable edginess, almost irritability, on the anti-Indira line which the Left in general and the CPI in particular has adopted. She gave vent to her feelings during her reply to the no-confidence debate in the Lok Sabha last month. Mrs Gandhi accused the leftists in India of "sell-out to Right reactionaries" and then went on to assert that "betrayal" by the Indian leftists was known to their mentors. Reports from Moscow suggest that Mrs Gandhi picked up the theme in her conversation with the Soviet leaders. The not-yet-contradicted reports said that Mrs Gandhi had spoken of "the negative attitude" of the Left forces in India at her talks with Mr Brezhnev. She accused these forces of trying to destabilise her government by ganging up with rightist parties. Such an attitude was destructive, UNI [reports] Mrs Gandhi as having told Mr Brezhnev.

Why at all Mrs Gandhi chose to discuss issues of domestic politics in Moscow is not clear. Apparently she is exercised over the CPI's choosing to share the anti-government platform with the CPI (M) and BJP and she thought it better to take up the issue with the Soviet leadership which could make the CPI give up a confrontationist path and toe her line.

What reply Mr Brezhnev gave to Mrs Gandhi is not known but enough indications are available from within the CPI that Moscow has begun pressing the party to give up the anti-Indira line. Mr Mohit Sen, who is more pro-Moscow than any other senior functionary in the CPI, is in Moscow these days. CPI's denial notwithstanding, there are reasons to believe that Mr N.K. Krishnan, was summoned to Moscow on 24 September for important consultations on the relationship between the CPI and CPSU on the one hand and between the CPI and Mrs Gandhi's government on the other.

Another CPI leader, Mr Yogendra Sharma--who has emerged as a known critis of Mr Rajeswara Rao in the party--was also in Moscow recently. On return from Moscow Mr Yogendra Sharma wrote a letter to Mr Rajeswara Rao questioning his leadership. Recently he circulated a note to several CPI leaders and the party's sympathisers to stress that Mr Rajeswara Rao's pro-CPI (M) line which is pushing the party to sharing the platform with the BJP is suicidal for it. Mr Yogendra Sharma had talks with Soviet functionaries in Moscow after Mr Rajeswara Rao's recent meeting with Mr Yuriy Andropov, the fastest rising man in Moscow at a time when the Brezhnev era is coming to an end, and Mr Boris Ponomarev, an alternate member of the Soviet Politburo and a party theoretician. Mr Yogendra Sharma in his note has sought to prove that what Mr Rajeswara Rao told the CPI on return about the CPSU's view of Mrs Gandhi is not correct and that there is a sharp divergence between the CPSU and the CPI--which Mr Rajeswara Rao did not care to report to his colleagues--on the Indian situation.

Moscow could be having many faces. But if all the praises Mr Brezhnev sang for Mrs Gandhi during her Moscow visit are any indication, then what Mr Yogendra Sharma is telling his colleagues in the CPI shows that the Soviet Communist Party does not want the CPI to create trouble for Mrs Gandhi. There are reasons for Moscow's fondness for Mrs Gandhi. A leftist government in India is a distant dream and Moscow's best bet in the present situation can be only Mrs Gandhi who in the communist jargon may be a bourgeois leader but who, when the crunch comes, will take an anti-imperialist stand. Mrs Gandhi is to take over as chairman of the non-aligned movement in March next year and this attaches importance to the hypothesis that the Soviet Union would need to be on her side more than ever before. Moscow may genuinely feel that the CPI's current anti-Indira line is wrong; it could also be expecting the CPI--as it has often in the past--to subordinate its domestic politics to the needs of Soviet foreign policy.

If Mr Yogendra Sharma's note is to be believed, the Soviet Communist Party had noted three "positive" features in Mrs Gandhi--her foreign policy, her capacity to maintain national unity and her will to fight Right reaction. The Soviet view is that a bourgeois leader like Mrs Gandhi has to face many problems and pressures, but the CPI should try to grasp Mrs Gandhi's positive features. Also, the CPI should not ignore the large number of "democratic" elements within the Congress (I). There is a section within the CPI which is backing the CPSU position and this section is likely to mount an attack on Mr Rajeswara Rao at the meeting of the party's Central Executive Committee which has been specially summoned to meet here on 6 October. Already his critics are spreading the word that in his zest for joining hands with the Marxists and opposing Mrs Gandhi the CPI general secretary has chosen to defy the Moscow line.

The CPSU has been cited as having particularly opposed the line followed by Mr Rajeswara Rao on the CPI's sharing the platform with the BJP in protest against the induction of the Bhajan Lal government in Haryana, for setting up Mr H.R. Khanna as a joint opposition candidate for the presidency, for participating in last year's farmers' agitation for higher prices which Moscow thinks will only help kulaks, and for joining the rightist trade unions in the prolonged strike in the public sector undertakings in Bangalore.

These issues were discussed by the CPI's National Council in July and Mr Rajeswara Rao's stand in favour of joining a broad antiauthoritarian front along with the CPI (M)--and also with the BJP--was questioned by his critics. Mr Rajeswara Rao survived the challenge when a resolution approving the party's decision on the Haryana question and the presidential election was approved by 76 votes to 20. In a rare exhibition of boldness, Mr Rajeswara Rao said after the National Council meeting that there was no single centre of the world communist movement and the policies of the CPI were decided in India and not outside. This statement certainly pleased the Marxist but could not have been relished in Moscow. How far the Soviet Communist Party goes to step up pressure on the CPI to fall in line remains to be seen. How far Mr Rajeswara Rao will succeed in his apparent attempt to achieve for the CPI some autonomy from the CPSU on India's domestic questions cannot be known at this stage either. The meeting of the CPI's Central Executive Committee and developments within the party during the following weeks are going to be significant in this connection. Mr Krishnan, the most senior leader in the party after Mr Rajeswara Rao, will be back from Moscow before 6 October, and his report to the CEC is being keenly awaited by Mr Rajeswara Rao's friends and foes alike.

The CPI is in an unhappy situation. The party began its career as far back as 1925 but is still riddled with some basic questions, failure to answer which has blocked its growth. After 57 years and numerous vacillations and u-turns, it is threatened with the prospect of losing its identity. It is faced with two difficult choices. One favoured by Mr Rajeswara Rao will take the party into the CPI (M) fold--on the Marxist terms--and entail participation in a broad opposition front against Mrs Gandhi's government. Mr Rajeswara Rao has invoked the resolutions passed by the 1978 Bhatinda congress and this year's Varanasi congress in support of his stand. The second choice, preferred by his critics, will take the party closer to Congress (I) government--on Mrs Gandhi's terms. In any case it is Hobson's choice for the party. Mrs Gandhi too, after her talks with the Soviet leaders, may be assessing whether in order to oblige her Moscow will really jettison its earlier attempts at a communist unity in India or Moscow's open support for her is merely tactical.

CPI LEADERS OFFER TO HELP FIGHT COMMUNALISM

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 7 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] CPI leaders in Parliament have offered their full cooperation to Prime Minister Indira Gandhi in efforts to combat the menace of communal riots as manifested in the recent disturbances in Meerut.

Mrs Gandhi called the CPI leaders on Monday for a detailed discussion on the Meerut violence, and in the course of the talks she sought the help of the CPI and all other secular forces to bring about immediate peace as well as a sense of security among the Meerut people in general and the minorities in particular.

The CPI leaders—Mr Indrajit Gupta, Mr Yogendra Sharma, Mr Ramavatar Shastri and Mr Kalyan Roy—offered their cooperation but at the same time put forward certain positive suggestions to effectively meet the situation.

According to Mr Yogendra Sharma, the 45-minute meeting was held in a cordial atmosphere and there was a free and frank exchange of views.

One of the major suggestions of the CPI leaders was that more Central Reserve Police and Border Security Force personnel should be deployed in Meerut since the minorities had lost all faith in the Provincial Armed Constabulary. Mrs Gandhi sought to point out that it would be wrong to suggest that the entire PAC was communal in character, but she conceded that there were communal elements in the PAC.

The CPI leaders raised the issue of the implications and repercussions of an all-party Parliamentary delegation visiting Meerut. While on the face of it there was nothing wrong in sending an all-party delegation of MPs to Meerut, the very fact that the BJP members were included in it could create problems. This view was shared by both sides.

The CPI leaders strongly felt that the Government should take necessary precautions to prevent any untoward incident during Dussehra and Muharram in North India, especially in UP and Bihar. Mrs Gandhi also agreed to the need for appropriate measures during these two festivals.

The CPI leaders were, however, sore that the Government was found somewhat unprepared to meet the disturbances in Meerut. They opined that such developments should have been clearly foreseen since tension was mounting for quite sometime in the area in the recent past.

Mrs Gandhi was put on the defensive on this issue and she candidly admitted that the Government did not have many officers competent to deal with such situations as the one which developed in Meerut.

EDITORIAL STRESSES RESPONSIBILITIES AS NONALIGNED HOST

BK161537 Delhi INDIAN EXPRESS in English 9 Oct 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Challenge and Opportunity"]

[Text] While formally announcing the dates of the Seventh Nonaligned Conference to be held in New Delhi next March, the external affairs minister has acknowledged the onerous responsibility developed on India. The physical preparations and infrastructural requirements for hosting a vast gathering with scores of heads of state in attendance can be taken in hand. Of greater consequence will be restoring to the movement a sense of positive purpose in a fast changing world situation in which the grouping has been often seen as a game of numbers. Declarations and resolutions are, no doubt, the most visible aspects of summitry, but the trees could be missed for the wood if the focus is on a package of palatable formulations and the more crucial emphasis on principles is overlooked. The forthcoming New Delhi conference thus offers both a challenge as well as an opportunity for India.

The circumstances in which India has been prevailed upon to host the conference illustrate the identity problem facing the nonaligned. Not only did a shared nonaligned label not come in the way of a meaningless military conflict between Iran and Iraq, but the continuing hostilities also came in handy for Iran and its supporters to blackball Iraq as a conference host, not necessarily for security reasons. Then followed an unseemly scramble between Cuba, the current chairman, and Iraq to stage a preparatory meeting at the foreign ministers' level. That these crises have been tided over does not indicate purposeful functioning. Not having pushed itself forward as a substitute host and having actually insisted on a consensus for moving the venue to New Delhi, India is in a position to lift the movement from the groove into which it has fallen. It can hark back to the values which gave birth to nonalignment.

The challenge lies in being able to rise above mere posturing which sometimes passes for nonalignment. India has to assert itself on a number of issues including the North-South dialogue, the gulf between the OPEC and non-OPEC Third World countries, the renouncing of the use of force in international relations and disengagement in both the nuclear and conventional fields. The prime minister's recent visits to Washington and Moscow have restored balance to India's relations with the superpowers. India's efforts, howsoever modest, for amicable relations with Pakistan and China have enhanced its prestige abroad.

Mrs Gandhi's reiteration of the need for withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan has put the problem in the larger perspective of violation of the sovereignty of a nonaligned country without making it an East-West issue. India is thus in a position to play a constructive role as chairman of the nonaligned conference if it does not see in the "honour" a need to toe anybody's line. However, much homework will need to be done and greater clarity brought to bear on a number of foreign policy issues on which the Indian position must be constructive and viable if, as chairman of the nonaligned conference, the country is not to suffer distortions in policy on account of rival pulls and pressures from within the nonaligned fold and from the rest of the world which will react to its statements or silence.

PAPER URGES IMPROVEMENT IN RELATIONS WITH FRANCE

BK271419 Delhi INDIAN EXPRESS in English 22 Oct 82 p 6

[Article by J.D. Sethi: "The French Connection"]

[Text] The French president, Mr Francois Mitterrand, is paying a 4-day state visit to India next month. Will New Delhi treat this visit as just a routine meeting or will it attempt to make a sharp turn in India's foreign policy which has now reached not one but several dead ends?

The balance of payments position is fast deteriorating. Indian goods are being priced out in the world market. Our excessive preoccupation with the superpowers has narrowed options elsewhere. Our nearly neurotic approach to Pakistan is yielding diminishing returns. India's nuclear programme has been exposed as still largely dependent on outside sources. And, above all, we are being pushed into an arms race without having a credible security doctrine or a reliable indigenous weapons base.

Is it possible to make a breakthrough in meeting one or more of these challenges in the context of Indo-French relations since France enjoys a unique position as an independent self-reliant middle power?

In the forthcoming negotiations, it would be far more fruitful for New Delhi to reverse the sequence of discussions. Instead of putting at the top the issue of the supply of nuclear fuel for Tarapur, it would be far better to take up the nuclear issue at the end. France is not a fully free agent in this matter as it is in most others. Some journalists have suggested that India might threaten to cancel some projects with France if that country refuses to become substitute supplier of nuclear fuel. If France has not yielded to American pressures, it will certainly not do so under Indian tactics. France is reported to have offered less stringent conditions at the secretaries' meeting but it will be tragic if the nuclear issue clouds more fundamental issues of Indo-French relations.

Because of the absence of a determined and coherent policy in New Delhi, India's experience with France in respect of cooperation in the nuclear field has not been very happy. France is also involved in the Baroda heavy water plant and in India's fast breeder reactor at Kalpakkam. In both cases the experience has been rather disappointing. The blame lies on both sides. We treat each project as independent of the overall relationship with a country with which we do not have political relations. India's foreign policy makers blundered in subjecting our relations with middle powers to political relations with superpowers.

There is a sharp contrast between the foreign policy stances of the two countries. France attacks both the superpowers when they impinge on its independence whereas India hesitates to criticise either. Ironically, non-alignment, which was supposed to provide a basis for Indian foreign policy, has made India dependent on both superpowers. France although technically not a nonaligned country is more nonaligned than most.

At the current meeting of the UN General Assembly whereas India was hesitant and squeamish, France was bold and aggressive. In an unusually outspoken criticism of the superpowers, the French prime minister, Mr Pierre Mauroy, said that they had tried to perpetuate "an unfocussed policy of blocs" which no longer corresponded to the situation in the world. He frankly admitted that the countries of the Third World including India, were the first to suffer in the superpower rivalry.

The French prime minister was most vocal in saying that "in the West, one of the superpowers makes sure of throwing into disarray the international monetary system to suit its national interests. It sets its budgetary and monetary policy without taking into account the possible consequences in other states." In the East, the other superpower continues directly or indirectly to make use of military force to oppose people's wishes to determine their own future. "This blindness on the part of the two superpowers is without doubt one of the principal causes of the present disorder. These words should have been spoken by the Indian delegation.

Even in the economic field, India has not comprehended the meaning of relations with a nation which has constantly struggled to have a self-reliant economy. In respect of technology, France is a very aggressive seller but in our list comes after the U.S., the UK, West Germany and Japan. France is very conscious of its independent policies in respect of arms sales and technology. Since no other country takes up this kind of an attitude, France should get the highest priority in India's policies in respect of collaboration during the next decade, particularly in the field of high technology.

The Soviet bloc countries are not in a position to supply any new technology and there is a great rush for going in for whatever is available in the West without bothering about the cost to the domestic economy. We have to distinguish between investment and technology. If we do that we will find that our policy of self-reliance in technology necessitates a very close relationship with France.

Last week the French foreign trade minister, Mr Michel Jobert visited India at the head of a powerful delegation. Mr Shivraj Patil, the Union minister of commerce, was wholly ill-equipped to talk to his French counterpart. All that he was worried about was India's growing adverse trade balance with France. Regarding greater promotional efforts, Mr Patil talked about the communication gap between business and industry on both sides. He did not bother even to ask how many Indian businessmen really spoke French. Is our support for Anglo-Saxonism that big a barrier to developing relations with all the non-English speaking world? In the final analysis of course, Mr Patil begged for more resources and technology. This is hardly the way of dealing with a country which has shown how to remain independent even when being an ally of a superpower.

The Indo-French Committee on Economic and Technical Cooperation agreed further to intensify their cooperation in various fields. Joint oil production, buy-back arrangements, third country projects, areas of new cooperation such as telecommunications, vaccine production, oceanography, etc, were dicussed. However, the basis of cooperation still remains limited.

Besides technology, defence is a crucial area of Indo-French cooperation. The French defence minister, Mr Charles Hernu, has offered defence cooperation to India over a wide field. India is already using or manufacturing French equipment and weapons such as tanks, jet fighters, helicopters, etc. Above all, France has offered to transfer weapons technology and provide technical training to Indian officers.

India and France have signed a final contract for the purchase of 40 Mirage 2000s. It is rumoured that France has offered the transfer of full production technology but India does not seem keen on it. The matter is very simple. Either we should not have bought these planes or in the light of the new realities of our security and foreign policy we must develop deeper cooperation with France in the field of military technology.

The difficulties in Indo-French relations may turn out to be a blessing in disguise if India and France can enter into serious negotiations to arrive at an understanding which bypasses both superpowers. France is known to act independently in defence of its national interests. India also claims to do that. This is an opportunity when Indo-Frnech relationship can be upgraded. Otherwise, we will end up depending on France rather than on the U.S. without much difference in substantive positions.

FORMER AMBASSADOR TO USSR DISCUSSES GANDHI VISIT

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 8 Oct 82 p 8

[Article by I. K. Gujral]

[Text] THE importance of Mrs. Gandhi's recent visit to the Soviet Union needs to be assessed from several angles. I shall deal first with an issue which is not central to Indo-Soviet relations but has attracted a lot of attention in our country, the issue of the Communist Party of India's relations with the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

According to reports by Indian correspondents emanating from Moscow when the Prime Minister was there, she talked to Soviet leaders about "the communists colluding with the rightists to weaken the country". These reports have not been contradicted. So one can assume that they are reasonably accurate.

This is, of course, not the first time when India's domestic situation has figured in Indo-Soviet talks. During her visit to Moscow in 1976, Mrs. Gandhi had talked of the "danger of rightist takeover . . . that had caused imposition of emergency". In 1977, the then Prime Minister, Mr. Morarjee Desai, had posed to the Soviets the question: 'why should you interfere in out internal affairs'. This was a direct reference to the CPSU's alleged influence on the CPI.

Even so, it is extremely significant that Mrs. Gandhi should have raised the issue. This raises the question whether in fact a change has taken place in the Soviet approach towards India. My assessment would be that it has.

As we know only too well, the Soviets whole-heartedly endorsed the official line on developments in India leading to the emergency in 1975. Since then, their perception has undergone a sea change.

CPSU functionaries dealing with India were distressed when they saw a step-by-step denigration of the CPI during the emergency. The results of the general election in 1977 made them realise that the CPI had paid a very high price for its close co-operation with the Congress. They found that the CPM had reaped rich dividends out of its different approach to the ruling party. Since then Moscow has appreciated the closer co-operation between the two communist parties. It naturally hesitates to advise the CPI to squander its hard earned credibility, particularly when Soviet theoreticians fully understand the "weak and sans-ideology base" of the Congress (I).

Honour For P.M.

I was in Moscow, when Mr. S. A. Dange, former chairman of the CPI, visited the Soviet capital and tried to project his line of thinking favouring co-operation with Mrs. Gandhi and the Congress (I). The reaction of his hosts was to downgrade his status. His residence was changed from the central committee's hotel 'Octoberskya' to the trade union's 'Sputnik' and the prestigious Zil car was replaced by a 'Chaika'. Moscow has not condoned his subsequent "sin of breaking the party".

Without in anyway detracting from the enthusiasm of the reception accorded to Mrs. Gandhi, I would wish to recall that a similar reception was accorded to Mr. Morarjee Desai during his two official visits in 1977 and 1979. Mr. Brezhnev and his senior colleagues have been present at the airport to receive and see off Indian prime ministers during all the visits that I have witnessed during my stay in Moscow. Ever since Mrs. Gandhi's visit in 1976, our prime ministers have been accorded a very high level of consideration. They have been put up in the palatial guest wing of the Kremlin. This honour is normally reserved for heads of state.

Unlike in 1976, this time Mrs. Gandhi did not have a private meeting with Mr. Brezhnev. But that might have been the result of his none too robust health. Mrs. Gandhi's talks with Mr. Tikhinov was significant in that he was meeting a top Indian leader for the first time. During Mr. Desai's visit in 1979, Mr. Kosygin was still the Prime Minister. And although Mr. Desai had a separate meeting with Mr. Brezhnev, substantive matters were settled in the talks wih Mr. Kosygin.

An unusual addition this time was the prime minister's meeting with a group of deputies of the USSR Supreme Soviet headed by an alternate member of the political bureau of the CPSU, secretary of the CPSU's central committee, chairman of the foreign relations commission of the Soviet of Nationalities of the USSR Supreme Soviet, Mr. Boris Ponomaryov.

In the Soviet Union the foreign relations commission is responsible mainly for contacts between parliamentarians of various countries but it has no role in the formulation of foreign policy. Once earlier, at my request, Mr. Ponomaryov and his commission had received the Lok Sabha speaker, Mr. Hegde, and his parliamentary delegation in 1979. Mr. Ponomaryov is one of the important personalities in the CPSU. As secretary of the CPSU he was not dealing with India but, of late, there seems to have been some change. He recently hosted a visit by Mr. Rajeswara Rao, secretary of the CPI, and he was present at all functions conducted with Mrs. Gandhi's visit.

Nuclear Plant Offer

The meeting of the commission was perhaps timed to enable him to meet our prime minister. Amongst others present at the meeting was the well-known Mr. Georgy Arbatov. He commands a very high position amongst Soviet intellectuals and is head of the Soviet Institute of American-Canadian Studies. His opinions are valued on issues relating to superpower relations. So far as I can recall, he had not met an Indian prime minister ever before. His presence can, perhaps, be understood in the context of the prime minister's recent visit to the U.S.A.

The visit on the whole has been useful. Since it almost coincided with the meeting of the joint commission, the bilateral economic relations have been further reinforced. Though no reference was made to our 'new economic policies', we should view Pravda's article of August 15 and Prof. Kumarov's article in this context.

The revival of the offer of a 1,000-megawatt nuclear power station needs study, as indicated by the prime minister. When Mr. Kosygin made the offer to Mr. Desai during his Delhi visit in 1979, the Indian side had some reservations in respect of the safeguards to which the plant would be subject. In the past we have purchased heavy water from the Soviet Union. Its safeguards provisions are the same as of all other members of the London club of suppliers of nuclear materials. We could not persuade the Soviets to modify these in any way. The position is not likely to be different now.

Mr. Kosygin had then told me that the USSR and the Comecon countries had undertaken a massive programme for developing nuclear energy. By the end of the century, they would be meeting 40 per cent of their needs from this source.

The Comecon countries had formulated a comprehensive plan regarding co-operation among them for building the required plants and machinery. While the reactors were being built in the Soviet Union, generators and other ancilliary machinery were being manufactured by the East Europeans. Mr. Kosygin had suggested that the H.E.C. at Ranchi could also be allocated part of the job to keep its order book full. The Indian energy programme could thus benefit from the economy of scale. The Soviets feel that it is uneconomical to pursue the step-by-step path and avoid a frog jump into the 1,000-mwt. technology. The view of our experts has of course been different.

Besides meeting official and party leaders, Mrs. Gandhi visited the star city — named after Gagarin. In 1979, Mr. Brezhnev had made an offer to Mr. Desai for sending an Indian astronaut into space. That was soon after my visit to a cosmodrome in Astarkhan to witness the launching of Bhaskara II. Our space experts were not in favour of the acceptance of the offer since it would generate expectations far ahead of our space-programme. Mr. Atal Bihari Vajpayee, the then minister for external affairs, and I held a different view. I continue to feel that travel of an Indian pilot in space will help generate popular interest in our space programme.

Arms Supply Issue

On the basis of my experience, I can say that India's policy of diversifying its sources of arms supply could not have gone unmentioned in Moscow, even if it was not raised at the summit meeting at which President Brezhnev and Mrs. Gandhi were present. As a sovereign nation, we are fully entitled to shop wherever we like. But the Soviets have often felt hurt when, in the process their equipment is denigrated. I know that they resent our talk of 'not putting all our eggs in one basket'. They treat it as a reflection on their credibility as arms suppliers and friends.

Apart from the bilateral economic and other issues, Pakistan inevitably figured in Mrs. Gandhi's discussions with the Soviet leaders. They are naturally concerned that the "Pakistan army dreams to go beyond Indus valley and the Gulf" as has been highlighted by Mr Fergus Bordewich in an article in The Asia magazine. It cannot be comforting for us either to learn that "Pakistani troops or advisory missions are stationed in 22 countries of West Asia": and that "the institute of strategic studies in Islamabad aspires to become the centre for the entire Muslim world".

This concern cannot but be heightened by the U.S. military supplies to Pakistan on the one hand and the statement of the U.S. ambassador to Pakistan, Mr. Spiers, that "work for Islamic bomb is still going on at Kahuta" and that "Pakistan's ongoing nuclear programme could give it basic capability to produce atomic weapons.

And though the joint declaration does not mention Afghanistan, Mrs Gandhi at her press conference reiterated India's known position. "We are against any type of interference but the issue was complicated by the flow of arms from outside the country to the rebels who are fighting the Kabul regime." There is nothing in this formulation to which The Soviet leaders can take exception.

China, too, figured in the talks, this time differently with Mr. Brezhnev trying to assure Mrs. Gandhi that any improvement in Sino-Soviet relations would not mean dilution of the quality of Indo-Soviet relations.

It is also notable that as a result of Mrs. Gandhi's visit, the Indo-Soviet treaty has been restored to its original status. The Janata had down-graded it. During Mr. Desai's visit to the Soviet Union, our experts had presented a new formulation "spirit of the treaty". The Soviet side was unhappy but accepted it.

I have personally witnessed four high-level visits of Indian leaders to Moscow and three similar ones by the Soviet side to New Delhi. One point emerged clearly in all these discussions. The Soviet Union and India have the same perception regarding peace in the region. This remains the bedrock on which Indo-Soviet friendship rests.

NEWSPAPER EDITOR IN CHIEF REPORTS VISIT TO PRC

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 8 Oct 82 p 9

[Text]

BEIJING, October 7 (PTI).

THE Chinese state councillor, Mr. Ji Pengfei, has said that the Sino-Indian border question should be settled in a "spirit of equality and mutual accommodation."

During an hour-long meeting with the editor-in-chief of Ananda Bazar Patrika, Mr. Asoke Kumar Sarkar, yesterday, Mr. Ji said: "If we cannot have a quick solution to the border question, we should put it aside and concentrate on improving relations on other fields."

A former foreign minister and vice-minister, Mr. Ji was quoted as saying: "We must not put border question as an obstacle and the people of the two countries can develop strong relations.

"We can generate positive response in world and it will be conducive to peace and stability in Asia and elsewhere," Mr. Ji said.

A day earlier, Mr. Sarkar had a separate meeting with Mr. Chien Qi Shen, China's deputy foreign minister. Mr. Sarkar, president of board of trustees of the Press Foundation of Asia, is on his way to Tokyo to attend its annual general meeting and executive meeting.

Mr. Sarkar raised the issue of Chinese support to insurgent elements in Nagaland, Manipur and Mizoram during his talks with the two leaders.

Mr. Ji informed Mr. Sarkar that China was no longer giving any assistance to rebel forces in India's north-eastern border. "China has not only stopped shipment of arms to them but also to communist movements in other South-East Asian countries," Mr. Ji was quoted as saying.

Mr. Sarkar also drew Mr. Ji's attention to the Naxalite slogan which said: "Chairman Mao is our chairman." "It is not possible for China to know what is happening everywhere," Mr. Ji said, adding that China would like to disown that it was providing inspiration to "Naxalites." "It is absurd to claim Chairman Mao as chairman of Naxalites," he said.

RAO MAKES STATEMENT ON GANDHI VISIT TO USSR

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 12 Oct 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 11.--India and the Soviet Union "were agreed" that a solution to the Afghanistan problem could, and indeed must, be found only through political negotiations and felt that the initiatives taken by the U.N. representative were useful, the external Affairs Minister, Mr P. V. Narasimha Rao, said in Parliament today.

Making a statement in both Houses on Mrs Gandhi's recent official visit to the Soviet Union, Mr Rao said India and Russia reviewed recent developments in the Indian Ocean, West Asia-South-east Asia, including Afghanistan, and Africa and were shocked and dismayed at Israel's "expansionist and aggressionist" policies in "flagrant" violation of the U.N. charter; its "unprovoked invasion" of Lebanon and "brutal and reprehensible massacre of civilians, especially of refugee women, children, and tortures perpetrated in prisons".

Mr Rao announced that the Soviet Union endorsed India's proposals for a convention on the non-use of nuclear weapon tests as a prelude to a complete test ban treaty. Both sides stressed the special responsibility of nuclear weapons States to take urgent measures towards disarmament, especially nuclear disarmament, and expressed their willingness to give serious consideration to all constructive proposals towards this end. India welcomed the Soviet Union's declaration not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, as an important step towards a complete ban on the threat or use of nuclear weapons.

The Minister said that the Prime Minister, Mrs Gandhi and the President, Mr Brezhnev, reviewed the economic relations between the two countries, which were already extensive and were steadily expanding. Mrs Gandhi's visit to the Soviet Union was preceded by the annual sesson of the Indo-Soviet joint commission on economic, scientific and technological cooperation. The commission reviewed the progress achieved during the last year and set targets for the immediate future.

Trade

Both sides would examine the possibilities of further expansion of cooperation in such areas as ferrous and non-ferrous metallurgy, coal and oil, machine building and power, and in several fields of fundamental and applied sciences and technology. India reaffirmed its resolve to ensure growth in the trade between the two countries of the order of one and a half to two times in the next four years.

In the course of discussions, Mr Rao said the President, Mr Brezhnev, referred to economic and other developments in his country and Mrs Gandhi availed herself of the opportunity to review developments in the neighbourhood and the situation in India and pointed to the necessity for national unity and strength in order to deal with the many challenges that India faced and how India's stability and adherence to non-alignment contributed to peace in its region and in the world.

The Minister said that the President, Mr Brezhnev and the Premier, Mr Tikhonov, accepted Mrs Gandhi's invitation to them.

India was confident that such high-level exchanges of visits would contribute to further strengthening of the relationship, invested as it was with a popular character on the enduring foundation of friendship, mutual respect and cooperation. India's relations with the Soviet Union had been tested by time and were without detriment to any other nation, Mr Rao said.

Mr Rao said that Mrs Gandhi's talks with Mr Brezhnev, set out in a joint declaration, had brought out the high value that the Soviet Union attaches to relations with India and its readiness to enlarge its cooperation with us in various fields. India reciprocated these sentiments.

Apart from being mutually advantageous, Indo-Soviet relations were an important factor for peace and peaceful co-existence in the world, he said, pointing out that the Soviet President had spoken warmly about India's adherence to non-alignment and work for international peace, cooperation and friendship.

Mr Rao said that Mrs Gandhi had in her public speeches and private discussions, emphasized India's deep concern at the deteriorating world situation and its determination to exert itself to the utmost for peace and disarmament. She had also explained India's consistent efforts to strengthen its economy and achieve technological self-reliance, as also its endeavour to normalize relations with its neighbours and to settle differences through discussions in spite of the increasing militarization of the region.

Both sides reiterated their belief that international relations should be based on the renunciation of the threat or use of force and on the respect for the integrity of States and non-interference in one another's internal affairs. They also called for effective measures towards general and complete disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, under effective international control.

In his preface to the statement, Mr Rao said that Mrs Gandhi, who had paid an official visit to the Soviet Union from September 20 to 26 at the invitation of the President, Mr Brezhnev, also visited Tellin and Kiev.

Mrs Gandhi had discussions with the Prime Minister, Mr Nikolai Tikhonov, the Foreign Minister, Mr Andrei Gromyko, and prominent members of the Supreme Soviet in Moscow and with leaders of the Estonian and Ukrainian republics in Tallin and Kiev, respectively.

In Moscow, she addressed a public rally organized by important Soviet organizations. A square in Moscow city was named after Jawaharlal Nehru at a special function. In Kiev, the honorary citizenship of that historic city and a doctorate by the Kiev State University were conferred upon her.

GANDHI, LOK SABHA DISCUSS ASSAM POLICY

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 8 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Prime Minister Indira Gandhi on Thursday assured that the Centre wanted to accommodate the leaders of the Assam agitation as much as possible, without harming the interests of the minorities and the nation.

Intervening during question hour in the Rajya Sabha Mrs Gandhi, however, bemoaned that the agitation leaders had taken an attitude of 'all or nothing.'

They had not responded to her appeal--made sometime ago after an air dash to Assam--that work could be started on the detection and removal of people who entered after March 1971, which had been agreed to by all, while negotiations went on for an overall settlement of the foreigners' issue in the State.

With the next rounds of talks announced for 6 and 7 November Mrs Gandhi said the government was not taking a rigid stance.

/She herself, she said, would be willing to intervene in the talks if there was some possibility of a solution emerging./ [in boldface]

She did not want to intervene otherwise, 'for where can we go if deadlock continues even after the intervention of the Prime Minister,' Mrs Gandhi asked.

The Prime Minister said the foreigners' issue and the agitation were a 'complex, delicate and emotional matter.' The government could not openly declare its stand on the issue of holding the Assembly elections--a point on which Opposition members repeatedly sought clarifications from her and Home Minister P C Sethi. 'It is my earnest desire to solve the Assam issue,' she added.

Home Minister P C Sethi said talks with the agitation leaders were likely to be resumed after Parliament session was over--perhaps on 6 or 7 November.

Mr Sethi admitted that despite 19 rounds of talks, basic differences persisted between the agitation leaders and the government on the fate of those entered Assam between 1961 and 1971. In effect, the agitation leaders were rejecting any overall agreement if their demand for the immediate disenfranchisement, and ultimate removal, of the entire immigrant population of 1961-71 was not conceded.

Questioned repeatedly on whether the AASU and the AAGSP wanted disenfranchisement even for those who had valid citizenship certificates, Mr Sethi said the agitationists had repeated their demand many times.

Mr Dinesh Goswami (Ind) contested the Minister's statement, saying that the demand was for the disenfranchisement of those without certificates.

In this main reply, Mr Sethi gave an account of the loss because of the agitation. He said so far 340 persons had lost their lives. The economic loss was also grave. In petroleum and chemicals alone, the loss came to Rs 1,272 crores; the railways suffered a loss of Rs 32 crores in revenue loss and reduction in passengers; and many projects had been delayed and the State exchequer had lost Rs 45 crores in revenue.

Mr Sethi refused to divulge anything on an Opposition question on rumours that government may hold the elections earlier. The Opposition wanted to know what the government views on this, because constitutionally elections in the State had to be held before 18 March 1983 and the electoral process, including revision of rolls, had to start six months before that.

Earlier, he gave a resume of the course of discussions in the past, including the last round of the tripartite meeting in which 'the Opposition participated,' and acted as a catalyst to bring about an agreement between the government and the agitation leaders.

He said the formula given by Janata leader Ravindra Verma had formed the basis for some of these discussions. It was a basis of discussion, and any question of government accepting it or otherwise did not arise, he told Mr Piloo Mody and others.

Mr Sethi said Mr Verma's suggestion was that all those 160,000 people who had entered Assam between 1961 and 1971 and obtained the citizen certificates should be recognised as citizens. The cases of those who had not obtained the certificates should be referred to a tribunal and those who fell in none of these categories should be deported.

Mr Sethi said this was not acceptable to the Assam agitators and the recent tripartite talks had come to a deadlock.

GANDHI OPENS SENIOR NAVAL OFFICERS' CONFERENCE

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 6 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] PRIME Minister Indira Gandhi said on Tuesday that the security environment around the country had become more complex warranting greater vigilance, report agencies.

A realistic policy would be to work for peace but at the same time the country should be ready to face any challenge, she told a conference of senior naval officers.

Opening the conference, Mrs Gandhi asked the naval officers to have both a short-term plan and a long-term perspective plan which would keep in view the development of the navy for the next two decades.

Mrs Gandhi underlined the need to give the highest priority to the indigenisation programme in navy.

While India needed sophisticated equipment for its defence forces, the approach should be to progressively reduce dependence on imports. Complimenting the navy in maintaining ships and other equipment in fit condition all the time, Mrs Gandhi underscored the need to improve cost-effectiveness in all the activities of the navy.

Mrs Gandhi said the land resources were being depleted rapidly and all nations were looking to the oceans for food and minerals. India also now had had the capacity to exploit its ocean resources and it was the only developing country to be accorded a pioneer status in this regard. Strengthening the navy and the coast guard assumed special importance in this context.

SCHEMES

Defence Minister R. Venkataraman said the Government fully recognised the need to give a new momentum for building up the navy. He called on the naval officers to make all efforts to implement their sanctioned schemes expeditiously.

The revised allocation of resources, he said, took into account the increased requirements of the navy for meeting its new responsibilities and provided a much higher outlay for it.

Noting that during the last one year two seaward defence boats, two landing craft utilities and one torpedo recovery vessel, all built within the country, had joined the naval fleet, Mr Venkataraman congratulated the shipyards as well as the concerned officers of the navy for the excellent performance.

Emphasising the need to give high priority to the training of naval personnel, Mr Venkataraman directed that the facilities at all the naval training establishments should be reviewed to take care of expansion in manpower as also updating in the light of latest developments in the techniques of naval warfare. The Government, he said, has decided to relocate the Naval Academy at Erhimala in Kerala.

Mr Venkataraman told the senior naval officers that the Government was alive to the welfare needs of naval personnel. The Government, he said, had sanctioned Rs 21.85 crores for the construction of family accommodation for naval personnel at Cochin, Bombay, Jamnagar and Port Blair.

In his address, the Chief of the Naval Staff, Admiral O. S. Dawson, stated that efforts were being made to consolidate all available resources and maximise the state of readiness of navy.

Admiral Dawson also underlined the various steps being undertaken to modernise the navy. In this regard, he said that stress was being laid on the indigenous production programme, which included the construction of Godavari Class frigates, seaward defence boats, landing craft and patrol vessels.

Admiral Dawson said that the navy kept the geopolitical oceanic and technological development in view while planning for the future.

GANDHI DISCUSSES LEBANON POLICY IN LOK SABHA

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 6 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] NEW DELHI, October 5 (PTI).

INDIA would take up the Lebanon question at the non-aligned conference here in March.

Stating this, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, declined to spell out the steps India would take as it was hosting the conference.

She was replying to members in the Rajya Sabha who wanted to know the step India was going to take at the non-aligned conference to resolve the Palestinian problem.

Earlier, in a statement she appealed for the involvement of all parties, including the super powers and the PLO, in arriving at a solution to the problem.

The "tragedy of Lebanon has been grafted on the tragedy of Palestine. The U.N. peace-keeping forces and others are there. There exist several resolutions of the U.N. Security Council and General Assembly and lately we have also had some noteworthy plans and proposals," she said.

"We have to initiate and encourage trends of conciliation and negotiations. The parties directly involved, which must include the PLO, need to play a major role. These efforts should also have the full involvement and support of the super powers."

About the role of the U.S. in encouraging Israeli aggression in Lebanon, about which members were critical, Mrs. Gandhi said: "We know Israel has received the support and encouragement from the U.S. but the U.S. is now condemning Israeli action. We hope the U.S. will take some initiative in bringing about the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon."

Mrs. Gandhi said the Indian National Congress had opposed the creation of Israel on the soil of Palestinians and its fears had come true with whatever had happened in Lebanon.

Mrs. Gandhi said she has no information about any Indian MP visiting Israel. If there is any such proposal by any political party to send any of its MPs to Israel, it was for that party to reconsider it, she added.

The Prime Minister made an identical statement in the Lok Sabha also.

Mrs. Gandhi said lands forcibly occupied must be vacated. Peoples who had been uprooted and rendered homeless must be rehabilitated and provided a state of their own.

LOSS OF LIVES

The Prime Minister in her three-page statement said countries in the West Asia region must be assured of their security within internationally-recognised frontiers.

A sense of urgency was essential. A very heavy price had been paid in the form of military destruction, loss of human lives and sufferings of hundreds of thousands of helpless human beings.

The Prime Minister said even today the atmosphere in West Asia was increasingly surcharged with emotions of anger and hatred, revenge and reprisals.

"All this must be ended. The use of force never brought any lasting solution", she said.

Members from all sides welcomed the Prime Minister's statement and shared the sentiments expressed by her in support of the Palestinians.

Among those who spoke after the Prime Minister's statement were Mr. P. Ramamurti (CPM), Mr. Shiva Chandra Jha (JP), Mr. S. W. Dhabe (Cong-S), Mr. Dinesh Goswami (Ind), Mr. Gopalswamy (DMK), Mr. Ram Naresh Kushwaha (Lok Dal), Mr. Ghulam Mohiuddin Shawl (NC), Mrs. Satyawani Muthu (AIADMK) and Mr. Ladli Mohan Nigam (Lok Dal-K).

KASHMIR CHIEF MINISTER STRESSES INDIAN UNITY

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 12 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] Srinagar, October 11 (PTI): The Jammu and Kashmir chief minister, Dr. Farooq Abdullah said the people of India might be separated by artificial geographical barriers but basically it was one nation.

Inaugurating a cultural evening, organised by the Kashmir Kanadha Sangh here last night, he said many patriots had sacrificed their lives before independence to remove artificial barriers between various regions and states to establish an Indian nation which would be strong physically, mentally, morally and economically.

He said such organisation would prove a stepping stone towards promoting mutual understanding between various states and regions thus bringing into fruition the India of the dreams of Mahatma Gandhi and Jawaharlal Nehru.

Present on the occasion among others was the ambassador of Bulgaria in India. A message of the Karnataka finance minister, Mr. Verappa Mouli, was read out at the function announcing a grant of one lakh rupees for setting up Karnataka information and cultural centre here.

Dr. Farooq Abdullah said India had "very good relations" with the countries now bracketed as "socialist countries".

Our struggle got inspired by their struggle to free themselves from imperialists and those relations have further been strengthened after the independence, he said.

Referring to the event when socialist countries stood by India during the most trying circumstances, he said, Bulgaria was one among those who had always extended their help and cooperation to India on the basis of equality.

The Bulgarian ambassador reciprocating the sentiments of the chief minister, said the people of Bulgaria held in great esteem the people of India.

Relations between the two countries, he said, "were excellent" and "we would work shoulder to shoulder to further enrich the friendship."

SHORTCOMINGS, PROBLEMS OF DEFENSE RESEARCH TOLD

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 30 Sep, 1 Oct 82

[Article by Jairam Ramesh]

[30 Sep 82 p 8]

[Text] ONE of the paradoxes of scientific research in India is the glaring discrepancy between its achievements in the field of space research and its continued and abject dependence on foreign suppliers, even for armaments of only moderate levels of sophistication. Nowhere is this more apparent than in the country's guided missile acquisition programme, a programme that has become the cornerstone of military strategy all over the world. When Indian scientists can build a satellite launching vehicle for the Rohini satellite or master the problems of guidance and control of a crippled INSAT, how is it that despite two decades of research and development they have not been able to develop a single missile system for use by the armed forces?

The answer for this is to be found in the fits and starts by which defence research has been conducted in this country, which in turn has resulted from a major failure of long-term planning for defence. This has led our defence planners to hunt perpetually for quick answers to immediate and specific threats. A typical example is the way in which the Defence Research and Development Organisation's programme to develop anti-tank missiles, taken up in 1961, was aborted after eight years of intense effort.

The DRO embarks on a mission to develop anti-tank missiles in 1961; by 1969 over a thousand such missiles had been developed and tested. But in 1969, the Army said that it wanted missiles with about twice the range and twice the warhead weight as the ones developed by the DRDO. Hence a collaboration agreement was signed between the newly established Bharat Dynamics and Aerospatiale of France for the indigenous manufacture of SS 11 anti-tank missiles. The SS 11 is a larger and an entirely different class of weapon as compared to the DRDO's anti-tank missile, a fact overlooked by the Public Accounts Committee in its criticism of DRDO in 1982, twelve years after the anti-tank missile project was abruptly terminated.

PAC's Criticism

The PAC bemoaned the fact that the kill probability of DRDO's missile was only 60 per cent, as compared to SS 11's 80 per cent, ignoring that it had taken twenty years of expensive development in France to attain this grade of performance. Had the PAC been a bit more thorough in its homework, it would have found out that a 60 per cent kill probability in the late sixties for a missile of the type developed by the DRDO was not at all unsatisfactory or cost- ineffective. (The British Mosquito missile that was then being offered to India was costlier and had a kill probability of 54 per cent).

Now, after ten years of collaboration with Aerospatiale, Bharat Dynamics is planning to enter into another collaboration agreement for the manufacture of the second generation Milan anti-tank missile. This is unfortunate, to say the least, for it would bypass the indigenous R&D capability that has been built up for this class of missile.

In 1970, the anti-tank missile programme at DRDO was wound up; there was no thought given to the possibility of producing these indigenously developed missiles at least for training purposes. Instead, DRDO was asked to begin work on a surface to air missile (SAM). Seven years later, DRDO succeeded in developing the SAM with the required range and warhead weight. But before this could be put into production, in 1977/78 the Air Force decided that medium range air defence was not a priority for this country; what was needed, the Air Force said, was a smaller missile with a range and warhead weight about half of the SAM developed by the DRDO. The SAM programme was therefore cancelled and all the work abandoned, as was done earlier in the case of the anti-tank missile. The recent acquisition of F-16s by Pakistan however has made the Air Force change its mind. But it is hardly in a position to get the SAMs developed indigenously, since the SAM project of DRDO was terminated three years ago and key people dispersed.

The same tendency to look for quick solutions often leads our scientists and publicists with the opposite error of grossly overestimating the potential military value of some of their scientific achievements.

SLV-3 As Missile

It is now widely assumed that the SLV-3 launch vehicle can be used as an IRBM with a range of 1500 kms and with a capability to carry a warhead in place of the fourth stage and the Rohini satellite. All that needs to be done, Space Department officials have been quoted as saying, is the provision of special heat shields to protect the warhead during re-entry into the atmosphere. This is because the re-entry will heat up the payload to over 2600 degrees centigrade but the fibre glass honeycomb heat shield used in the SLV-3 can withstand a temperature of only 650 degrees centigrade.

If it will be recalled, the SLV-3 launch was not entirely successful. The satellite was placed in an orbit lower than that planned. This was mainly because of the failure to achieve the burn-out velocity (needed to escape from the earth's atmosphere) with the required precision and because of an orientation misalignment of about one degree. The SLV-3 as launched had a measured error in burn-out velocity of about 3 per cent. The range of a missile is proportional to the square of its velocity. Hence, if the SLV-3 is used as an IRBM now it will have an error of about 135 kms on a range of 1500 kms (an error of 9 per cent, compared to the international standards of 0.05 per cent and below).

The error arises because of some inherent characterisations of the SLV-3 specifically on account of the use of solid propellants in all stages. Perfect chemical consistency of the solid fuel mixture is difficult to achieve and the burning rate of the solid fuel is not controllable precisely. Neither can thrust be precisely cut off. Errors are thus inevitable in the prediction and control of stage propulsion performance, such as thrust and specific impulse in solid propellant motors like the ones used in the SLV-3. The actual rocket motor impulse (thrust multiplied by time) delivered in flight is thus different from the required value. If the SLV-3 has to be used as a missile, it should be done after precisely controlling for errors in the performance of the propulsion system. This may be possible only through the use of liquid propellants (at least in the upper stages). Even the PSLV, the most advanced version of the SLV-3 scheduled for 1986-87 will use solid propellants for the upper stages.

R & D Projects

This, in brief, is the sad story of efforts to develop missiles indigenously. One thing stands out clearly — we just do not know how to match our responses to rapidly changing threat situations with the ready availability of advanced weapons systems from abroad and the dynamics of indigenous development programmes. The country at some specific point of time is confronted with threat A; in response to this the user (the armed forces) lays down a certain set of performance specifications for weapons systems to be developed and manufactured in the country. The indigenous R & D machinery swings into action but in the meantime, a new threat B arises. Does this invalidate threat A? Does it mean that planning is required only for threat B? Does it mean that a R & D project is halted in its penultimate stage without entering the manufacturing stage and without an opportunity being offered to local scientists and engineers to obtain operational feedback on the performance of systems they have designed so that flaws can be removed (if the anti-tank missile project of DRDO had been extended by a year or so in 1969, the kill probability of the missile could have been increased further, for the diagnosis for its not achieving the anticipated levels of kill probability on a sustained basis had been completed and measures to improve reliability through the use of temperature-insensitive propellants had been identified)?

If performance specifications are changed at the very end of a development programme, does it mean that a system designed on the basis of original specifications is a failure and should be discarded. And when the programme is forced to come to a halt, should there not be any mechanism to ensure that the capability developed during the programme life cycle is kept up to date? And should there not be any continuity in R & D projects and gradual upgradation of technological capability instead of quantum leaps? — the anti-tank missile project was worth about Rs. 1 crore, while the SAM project was a Rs. 50 crore programme!

[1 Oct 82 p 8]

[Text] THE first part of this article discussed indigenous efforts to develop anti-tank and surface to air missiles. Although these efforts have not resulted in the deployment of any missile system, a strong infrastructure in many areas vital for the development of any type and class of guided missile system like propulsion, guidance and control and warhead design has been established.

As far as propulsion is concerned there are two alternatives — solid and liquid propellants. Most of the world's short-range missiles use solid propellants, while in the IRBM and ICBM range, the trend is towards the use of liquid propellants. For missiles of ranges between these two, there is almost an equal distribution of solid and liquid propellants, although a trend toward the latter can be discerned over the past few years. But there are differences between countries — even at long-ranges the US believes in the use of solid propellants, while the USSR has concentrated on liquid propellants.

Solid propulsion technology is well advanced in this country and the Vikram Sarabhai Space Centre (VSSC) at Trivandrum has over a decade's worth of research, development and flight testing experience. There should be no problem as far as solid propellants are concerned, except that greater attention has to be paid to the storage aspect. As part of a military programme, solid propellants need to be smoke-free and have a long shelf life of ten to fifteen years; the propellants developed by the VSSC do not as yet have these properties.

Liquid Propulsion

The country has considerable experience with liquid propulsion also. The Defence Research & Development Organisation has flight tested medium thrust liquid propellant engines (30 tonnes) while the VSSC has a licence collaboration for developing a 60 tonne engine. These engines use a liquid propellant combination of nitric acid and unsymmetrical dimethyl hydrazine (UDMH). The VSSC-French process for manufacturing UDMH has now been licensed to IDPL for commercial-scale production; this should help overcome the main hurdle to the development of this process for while it is less carcinogenic and polluting than the process developed at DRDO, it has so far successfully manufactured only batches of a few kilogrammes while the requirement is in tonnes.

Warheads do not pose a formidable problem, at least as far as non-nuclear devices are concerned. However, the country has a long way to go before it acquires the capability to manufacture nuclear warheads. The main constraint here is that India has yet to master miniaturisation technology, and will face difficulties in devising an efficient fusing system (which is now almost totally electronic and chip-based).

One common misconception regarding the scope of a weapon's destructive power needs to be dispelled here. The area of lethality of a weapon is not proportional to its explosive yield, for a part of the blast is dissipated vertically. This implies that if yield increases eight times, the lethality increases four-fold. The same effect can be had by just doubling the accuracy. There is thus a trade-off between yield and accuracy and an increase in the latter can give one the same result at a lower cost. This is why it is imperative to pour money into electronics for defence.

Basic Expertise

Neither the power supply for the missile, nor the structural sub-systems, pose much of a problem for Indian engineers for there are a number of research, design and engineering organisation in the public sector and at the various institutes of technology which have basic expertise in this area.

It is guidance and control systems that are likely to pose the biggest challenge to Indian scientists and engineers. These are the only parts of a missile for which extensive flight testing is required. What is more, basic high quality electronic components are still not available. The Indian Space Research Organisation has developed inertial guidance systems but their applicability to strategic missile systems may be limited. For tactical missile systems, various technologies are in use all over the western world. There is a strong capability in India in the areas of radio command and wire guidance systems. However, newer and more reliable technologies like terminal guidance based on active radar and thermal imaging have emerged and the country needs to develop expertise in them if it is not to be left far behind.

In sum, an indigenous capability exists for developing almost all missile sub-systems, but in isolated pockets. What is now needed is horizontal integration among the various organisations and a determination to utilise the scientific capability available in the country in a planned and systematic way.

DOCUMENTS OF INDO-BANGLADESH TALKS IN DELHI

Text of Joint Communique

Dacca THE BANGLADESH OBSERVER in English 8, 9 Oct 82

[8 Oct 82 pp 1, 8]

[Text] Bangladesh and India on Thursday pledged to develop friendly and good-neighbourly relations for the interest of their peoples, a joint communique issued simultaneously from Dhaka and New Delhi at the end of Chief Martial Law Administrator Lt. Gen. H.M. Ershad's two-day official visit to India said reports BSS.

The CMLA and Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi during their talks resolved that such ties were clearly in the larger interest of the people of the two countries and also of peace and stability in the region.

The two leaders also expressed their conviction that increased cooperation among South Asian nations in a climate of mutual respect and equality should contribute to the welfare of the region, the communique said.

They welcomed the progress made towards this direction and noted with satisfaction that a comprehensive program me for cooperation would be launched by the Foreign Ministers of seven countries in near future.

The communique spoke about the talks two heads of government have had on bilateral issues and held out pledges to settle them through peaceful bilateral negotiations and further develop close relationship.

It called for expansion of Indo- Bangladesh economic cooperation in different fields for their mutual benefit.

Two leaders agreed for interim arrangement of sharing waters at Farakka for 18 months after the expiry of the present short-term accord on November 4, this year and directed the Joint Rivers Commission to ensure that a full and final solution is arrived during this period.

About South Talpatty they agreed that early talks should take place at the level of Secretaries to study the additional information exchanged on the basis of indepth examination of all relevant facts and principles.

The Secretaries should report to their Foreign Ministers for further necessary steps to be taken with a view to an early and peaceful solution of the island issue, the communique said.

The two heads of government briefly reviewed the progress on delimitation of the maritime boundary and reiterated that this should be resolved in a spirit of good neighbourliness.

Both sides reaffirmed to take effective steps to ensure that peace and tranquillity is maintained in their common border and that their respective territories are not used for hostile activities directed against the other.

About the trade deficit against Bangladesh two leaders agreed that their experts should examine long-term agreements for increasing exports from Bangladesh and expand bilateral trade. India has agreed to consider extension of credits to Bangladesh the communique said.

Following is the text of Indo Bangladesh Joint Communique:

1. At the invitation of Her Excellency Mrs. Indira Gandhi Prime Minister of the Republic of India, His Excellency Lieutenant General H.M. Ershad, ndc, psc Chief Martial Law Administrator, Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh paid a two-day official visit to India from 6-7 October 1982.

2. His Excellency Lieutenant General Ershad during his visit called on the Acting President of India, Sri M. Hidayatullah. They had a warm and friendly exchange of views.

3. The Heads of Government of Bangladesh and India held detailed discussions. Formal talks were also held between the delegations of the two countries. The Chief Martial Law Administrator of Bangladesh, Lt. Gen. H.M. Ershad, was assisted by Mr. A.R. Shams ud-Doha Foreign Minister of Bangladesh Mr. A.Z.M. Obaidullah Khan Minister of Agriculture Maj Gen. K M A Wahed psc, and other senior officials. Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi was assisted by Shri P.V. Narasimha Rao Minister of External Affairs Shri Pranab Mukerjee Finance Minister Shri Kedar Panday; Minister of Irrigation Shri A. A. Rahim Minister of State in the M/o External Affairs Dr.

P.C. Alexander Principal Secretary to Prime Minister Shri K.S. Bajpai Secretary and other senior officials.

4. Discussions were held in an atmosphere of friendship and great cordiality covering international, regional and bilateral issues. The two Heads of Government felt that the talks had contributed to strengthening mutual understanding and had confirmed their common desire to further consolidate the existing friendly relations between the two countries.

5. The two leaders reviewed the international situation and voiced their concern over the dangerous escalation of international tension endangering world peace and security and the continued deterioration of the global economic climate. They emphasised that peace and stability could only be ensured by strict adherence to the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter and of the Non-Aligned Movement especially respect for sovereign equality and territorial integrity non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries non-use of force and peaceful settlements of disputes

[Text] Following is the remaining part of Indo-Bangladesh Joint Communique (partly published in our Friday's issue).

6. The two leaders noted with particular concern the dangerous deterioration in the situation in West Asia which threatened both regional and global peace and security. They expressed their shock and revulsion at the recent wanton messacre of innocent Palestinians in Labanon and the aggressive actions of Israel against the Palestinian people and the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Arab countries. In condemning the Israeli invasion of Lebanon they called for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all Israeli forces from Arab territories. They reiterated their support for the just struggle of the Palestinian people under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, the sole and legitimate representative of the Arab people of Palestine. They emphasised that a comprehensive, just and durable solution of the West Asian crisis could only be achieved through the exercise by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights including the right to a sovereign independent state of their own.

7. The two leaders expressed great concern that the escalation of great power rivalry in the Indian Ocean posed a threat to the peace, security and stability of the region. They reviewed the efforts made by the Non-Aligned Countries to convene the International Conference on the Indian Ocean with a view to implementing the 1971 UN Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, which included inter alia a call for progressive reduction and evenual alimination of great power military presence including bases and attendant facilities from the Indian Ocean. They expressed their unhappiness that these efforts had not yet succeeded and called for their intensification so that the security of the states in the Indian Ocean could be strengthened.

8. The two leaders reaffirmed their consistent commitment to the policy of Non-Alignment and stressed the critical role of the Non-Aligned countries in safeguarding peace in the worlds in the struggle of peoples for independence and freedom, and for the alimination of all forms of exploitation and subjugation. They emphasised the determination of their Governments to work for the preservation of the principles of the Non-Aligned Movement as an independent global factor for strengthening the solidarity, unity of action and cooperation of the Non-Aligned countries and for promoting peace and understanding among nations. The two leaders recognising that the convening of the Seventh Summit Conference of Heads of State or Government at New Delhi was of exceptional significance in the present unfavourable development of international political and economic relations resolved to exert their maximum concerted efforts to make it a success.

9. The two leaders expressed their regret at the continued stalemate in North South relations and the deterioration in the climate of multilateral economic cooperation. They expressed the conviction that all efforts should be made to reach an agreement on the early launching of global negotiations consistent with the wishes of the vast majority of developing nations. They also urged that simultaneous efforts should be made to achieve progress in dealing with the problems of the least developed countries and in areas of critical importance to developing countries such as food energy financial flows and trade in the forthcoming meetings of the specialized agencies. The two leaders noted with appreciation the efforts made to foster economic cooperation among developing countries and stressed the need for these countries to agree on a charter of action for collective self reliance which would reduce their vlunerability to pressures emanating from the developed countries.

10. The two Heads of Government expressed their conviction that increased cooperation among the countries of South Asia in a climate of mutual respect and equality should contribute to the welfare of the region The two leaders welcomed the progress that had been made in promoting South Asian regional cooperation and noted with satisfaction that necessary preparatory work was well under way to launch a comprehensive programme for cooperation to be launched by the F. Ms. at their meeting.

11. The two Heads of Government recoginsed that friendly and good-neighbourly relations between Bangladesh and India were clearly in the larger interest of the peoples of the two countries and also of peace and stability in the region. They reaffirmed their commitment to promote the well-being of all their peoples and to raise the quality of their lives.

12. The two leaders discussed the actual experience by the two sides of the working of the 1977 Farakka Agreement which would be coming to its end on November 4th, 1982. They agreed that it had not proved suitable to a satisfactory and durable solution and that with its termination fresh efforts were necessary to arrive at such a solution. They directed the Joint Rivers Commission to ensure that a full and final agreement is arrived at by effective use of the time gained by the interim arrangements that have been worked out for the 18 months following the ending of the 1977 Agreement as incorporated in the Memorandum of Understanding signed by the two Foreign Ministers on October 7, 1982.

13. The two leaders noted with satisfaction the progress achieved at the recently concluded 22nd meeting of the Indo-Banladesh Joint Rivers Commission and the commitment to reach an agreement on an expeditious determination of the formula for sharing the Teesta Waters. They were confident that the Joint Rivers Commission would be able to finalise the sharing formula and arrive at a mutually acceptable permanent solution of the problem within the stipulated periods.

14. The two sides reaffirmed their commitment to complete as early as possible all steps leading towards the implementation of the 1974 Land Boundary Agreement. They agreed that intensified efforts should be made to speed up the process of demarcating the remaining sectors of the land boundary. They noted with satisfaction that the two Governments had signed the terms of the lease in perpetuity of the Tin Bigha corridor in pursuance of Article 1, para 14 of the land Boundary Agreement. The two Governments agreed to take immediate steps of complete the modalities of implementation of the lease terms including verification and marking of the leased area on the round. The Indian side affirmed that the terms of lease would be implemented as soon as possible even prior to the ratification of the Land Boundary Agreement of 1974.

15. The two leaders noted the discussions that had taken place at the official level in January 1982 on the question of New Moore/South Talpatty Island. They agreed that early talks should take place at the level of Secretaries to study the additional information exchanged on the basis of indepth examination of all relevant facts and principles. The Secretaries should report to their Foreign Ministers for further necessary steps to be taken with a view to an early and peaceful resolution of the problem.

16. The two Heads of Government briefly reviewed the progress made on the delimitation of the Maritime Boundary between the officials of the two countries in December, 1980 and January, 1982. They reiterated that this question should be resolved by mutual agreement in a spirit of understanding and good-neighbourliness and decided that the dialogue should continue at a mutually convenient date.

17. Both sides reaffirmed their resolve to take effective measures to ensure that peace and tranquility is maintained on the border and that their respective territories are not used for hostile activities directed against the other.

18. Both sides re-emphasised the need to stop illegal movement of people across the border and reiterated their determination to stop such illegal movement by all possible means including the strengthening of existing arrangements and mutual cooperation in this regard.

19. The two leaders reviewed the question of the extension of Railway transit facilities for Indian goods through Bangladesh territory. They agreed that modalities for such in-transit railway facilities may be worked out under the auspices of the Joint Economic Commission with a view to expidetious implementation.

20. The two leaders expressed satisfaction over the establishment of the Indo-Bangladesh Joint Economic Commission according to the Agreement signed by their respective Foreign Misisters at New Delhi on 7 October 1982 and decided that the Commission should meet in November 1982 at New Delhi to give necessary directives to the concerned agencies of the two Governments to take decisions required for removing existing bottlenecks, if any, and to identify new areas of mutually beneficial cooperation.

21. The two leaders noted the great potential for enlarged cooperation in the scientific, technological technical agricultural transport small scale rural industries and other fields including establishment of joint ventures. While emphasising the need for expanding Bangladesh's exports to India, they stressed that in the long term the best opportunity for reducing the trade gap between the two countries and for forging closer links of economic cooperation could be provided by joint collaboration between India and Bangladesh for establishing industries in Bangladesh the products of many of which could be exported to India. In this connection, they felt that the feasibility of setting up such projects inter alia as a sponge iron and steel complex manufacture of cement and newsprint, gas-based manufacturing units, carriage manufacturing units, diesel engines for agricultural pumps textiles and sugar mills and a wide range of small scale industries etc, should be urgently explored. They also recognised the immense scope of cooperation between the two countries in the field of railway and other transport infrastructure. They agreed that opportunities should be enlarged and incentives provided to both their private and public sector enterprises to enter into as many of such joint collaborative arrangements as possible. In order to facilitate such projects and for various development programmes India agreed to consider the extension of credits to Bangladesh.

The two leaders directed that concrete steps be taken to further promote bilateral cooperation in these fields and that the tasks and responsibilities entrusted to the Joint Economic Commission should be effectively implemented so that the objective of diversified, durable, and mutually advantageous cooperation between the two countries is furthered.

22. The two leaders recognised the need of further expanding the trade between the two countries and directed that the concerned Secretaries of the two Governments meet urgently to review their existing trade relations. In this connection they agreed that their experts should explore the feasibility of entering into long term arrangements for increasing exports from Bangladesh in respect of such commodities as urea, newsprint, bitumen wet blue leather special textiles etc. In the interests of mutually advantageous trade it was agreed that efforts from both sides would be intensified to reduce the existing imbalance in the trade exchanges between the two countries. In this regard the Indian side also emphasised the need for increased export promotion efforts by Bangladesh.

23. In reviewing the scope of their bilateral relations, the two leaders noted with satisfaction the signing of the Trade Agreement in 1980 the Tele-communication Agreement in 1981, the Memorandum of Understanding on Technical Cooperation in December 1981 and the protocol for Inland Water Transport and Trade in August 1982.

24. The two leaders emphasizing the ties of geography, history common traditions and culture that bound their two countries reiterated the importance of mutual exchange of visits at the highest levels and recognised that such periodic visits were useful in promoting friendly relations between them.

25. Expressing their satisfaction over the results of the visit of His Excellency Lieutenant General H.M. Ershad to New Delhi the two sides noted that their fruitful and constructive discussions had contributed greatly towards increasing mutual trust and friendship between the two countries

26. The Chief Martial Law Administrator of Bangladesh expressed his sincere gratitude to the Prime Minister, the Government and the People of India for the warm welcome and hospitality extended to him and the members of his delegation during their stay in India.

27. The Chief Martial Law Administrato of Bangladesh extended an invitation to the Prime Minister of India to visit Bangladesh. The invitation was accepted with pleasure

Text of Agreement on Joint Commission

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 9 Oct 82 p 5

[Text] The Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh;

Desirous of strengthening economic, trade, scientific and technical cooperation between the two countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit;

Having decided that this objective can best be secured by the formation of a Joint Economic Commission at Ministerial level;

Have agreed as follows :-

ARTICLE - I

The Government of the Republic of India and the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh hereby constitute a Commission for economic and technical cooperation to be commonly known as the India-Bangladesh Joint Economic Commission (hereinafter referred to as "the Commission").

ARTICLE - II

The tasks of the Commission may include the following :-

In the field of commercial and trade cooperation :

(a) to review matters concerning the commercial relations between the two countries for promoting and expanding these relations;

(b) to recommend measures and activities to develop and diversify the two-way trade between the two countries as well as to remove bottlenecks and reduce imbalances in the trade relations between the two countries, consistent with their international obligations;

(c) to identify areas for closer cooperation and to initiate such studies or investigations as may be necessary for the purpose;

(d) to promote close contacts between the business communities of the two countries through measures which may include, inter-alia, the sending of trade promotion missions and trade delegations.

In the field of scientific technological and industrial cooperation :

(a) to promote possibilities of increased investment consistent with the investment policies of the two countries;

(b) to explore the possibilities of establishment of industrial ventures through Joint Collaboration in Bangladesh and India and in third countries;

(c) to explore possibilities of enhanced cooperation between the financial and industrial institutions of the two countries;

(d) to identify and intensify technical coordination between the two Governments, their agencies and other institutions in the two countries.

(e) to identify common scientific and technological problems and formolate and recommend joint research programme which might lead to application of results in industry, agriculture, health and other fields;

(f) to facilitate sharing of scientific and technological information which may be of benefit to industrial and economic development in the two countries.

In the field of transport and telecommunications :

(a) to review the existing transport and communication links between the two countries and to promote further cooperation in this regard;

(b) to review telecommunication facilities between the two countries and to initiate action for their improvement for mutual benefit.

The Commission may also consider matters arising in the course of the implementation of the agreements between the two countries in force from time to time in fields of economic, commercial, scientific, technological and industrial cooperation or with regard to communications, including those which may be signed hereafter, and make recommendations for the successful fulfilment of those agreements.

The Commission shall also be competent to review other problems that might arise in implementation of this Agreement and other related matters that might be brought up by either party.

ARTICLE III

The Commission may also explore other areas of activities, not specifically identified in Article I of this Agreement.

ARTICLE IV

The Commission shall consist of representatives of the two Governments, with the representation of each Government headed by a Minister of Cabinet rank. The leaders of the two sides will act as Co-Chairmen of the Commission.

The Commission may appoint subcommittees and other bodies as may be necessary to deal with specific issues or fields of cooperation, to monitor progress of implementation of the Commission's decisions and to make appropriate progress reports or recommendations for the consideration of the Commission.

To facilitate the working of the Commission the Government of the Republic of India designates the Ministry of External Affairs to act as the Secretariat of the Commission in the Government of India and the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh designates the External Resources Division of the Ministry of Finance & Planning to act as the Secretariat of the Commission in the Government of Bangladesh.

ARTICLE V

The Commission shall hold its meetings not less than once a year. Meetings of the Commission shall be held in each country alternately. The Commission may invite to such meetings, as may be mutually agreed, the required number of experts and advisers. Special meetings of the Commission may be convened by mutual agreement.

Signed at New Delhi on the seventh day of October, Nineteen Eighty Two, in two originals, in English, each of which is equally authentic.

Text of Lease of Tin Bigha Area

Dacca THE BANGLADESH TIMES in English 9 Oct 82 p 5

[Text] "1. The lease in perpetuity of the aforementioned area shall be for the purpose of connecting Dahagram and Angarpota with Panbari Mouza (P.S. Patgram) of Bangladesh to enable the Bangladesh Government to exercise her sovereignty over Dahagram and Angarpota.

2. Sovereignty over the leased area shall continue to vest in India. The rent for the leased area shall be Bangladesh Tk. 1/- (Bangladesh Taka One) only per annum. Bangladesh shall not, however, be required to pay the said rent and the Government of India hereby waives its right to charge such rent in respect of the leased area.

3. For the purposes stated in para I above Bangladesh shall have undisturbed possession and use of the area leased to her in perpetuity.

4. Bangladesh citizens including police, paramilitary and military personnel along with their arms, ammunition, equipment and supplies shall have the right of free and unfettered movement in the leased area and shall not be required to carry passports or travel documents of any kind. Movement of Bangladesh goods through the leased area shall also be free. There shall be no requirement of payment of customs duty, tax or levy of any kind whatsoever or any transit charges.

5. Indian citizens including police, paramilitary and military personnel along with their arms, ammunition, equipment and supplies shall continue to have the right of free and unfettered movement in the leased area in either direction. Movement of Indian goods across the leased area shall also be free. For the purposes of such passage the existing road running across it shall continue to be used. India may also build a road above and/or below the surface of the leased area in an elevated or subway form for her exclusive use in a manner which will not prejudice free and unfettered movement of Bangladesh citizens and goods as defined in paras 1 and 4 above.

6. The two Governments shall cooperate in placing permanent markers along the perimeters of the leased area and put up fences where necessary.

7. Both India and Bangladesh shall have the right to lay cables, electric lines, water and sewerage pipes etc. over or under the leased area without obstructing free movement of citizens or goods of either country as defined in paras 4 and 5 above.

8. The modalities for implementing the terms of the lease will be entrusted to the respective Deputy Commissioners of Rangpur (Bangladesh) and Cooch Behar (India). In case of differences, they will refer the matter to their respective Governments for resolution.

9. In the event of any Bangladesh/Indian national being involved in an incident in the leased area, constituting an offence in law, he shall be dealt with by the respective law enforcing agency of his own country in accordance with its national laws. In the event of an incident in the leased area involving nationals of both countries, the law enforcing agency on the scene of the incident will take necessary steps to restore law and order. At the same time immediate steps will be taken to get in touch with the law enforcing agency of the other country. In such cases, any Indian national apprehended by a Bangladeshi law enforcing agency shall be handed over forthwith to the Indian side and any Bangladeshi national apprehended by an Indian law enforcing agency shall be handed over forthwith to the Bangladesh side. India will retain residual jursidiction in the leased area."

Memorandum on Ganges Waters

Dacca THE NEW NATION in English 9 Oct 82 p 3

[Text] Following is the text of the Memorandum of Understanding on sharing Ganges waters signed on Thursday in New Delhi.

During the visit of his Excellency Lieutenant General H. M. Ershad, ndc, psc, President of the Council of Ministers Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh and his meetings with Her Excellency Mrs. Indira Gandhi Prime Minister of the Republic of India, the two leaders discussed the actual experience by the two sides of the working of the 1977 Farakka Agreement, which would becoming to its end on the 4th of November 1982. They agreed that it had not proved suitable for finding a satisfactory and durable solution and that with its termination fresh efforts were necessary to arrive at such a solution.

The two leaders recognised that the basic problem of inadequate flow of waters in the Ganga/Ganges available at Farakka imposed sacrifices on both countries and that it was necessary to arrive at an equitable sharing of the waters avall: able at Farakka.

They further agreed that the long term solution lay in augmenting the flow available at Farakka and to this and directed their experts concerned to expedite studies of the economic and technical feasibility of the schemes which had been proposed by either side in order to settle upon the optimum solution for urgent implementation.

It was decided that the Joint Rivers Commission would complete the pre-feasibility study and decide upon the optimum solution within 18 months of the signing of this Memorandum, at the end of which the two governments would immedately implement the augmentation proposal agreed upon by the Joint Rivers Commussion.

Meanwhile, the two leaders agreed that the releases for sharing the flow available at Farakka for the next two dry seasons, and the joint inspection and monitorning arrangements for this purpose, would be as in Annexure 'A'.

It was further agreed that in the case of exceptionally low flows dnring either of the next two dry seasons, the two governments would hold immediate consulations and decide how to minimise the burned to either country.

It was also agreed that a further and final sharing agreement would be reached immediately after the completion of the pre-feasibility study of augmentation, in the light of the decision on the optimum solution for angmentatin that would be implemented following the pre-feasibility study.

Signed at New Delhi on the Seventh day of October nineteen hundred and eighty two, in two originals in English, each of which is equally authentic.

1. If the actual availability of waters at Farakka during a 10-day period is higher or lower than the quantum shown in column 2 of the Schedule it shall be shared in the proportion applicable to that period.

2. The Joint Inspection and Monitoring of the above sharing arrangement shall be the responsibility of a Joint Committee consisting of an equal number of representatives of each side. The Joint Committee shall be constituted immediately and shall establish teams to be stationed at Farakka and Hardinge Bridge.

These teams shall record at Farakka the daily flows below Farakka Barrage and in the feeder canal and the flows passing daily at Hardinge Bridge.

The Joint Committee which shall decide its own procedures and method of functioning shall submit the data collected by it and its teams and a yearly report to both Governments.

3. The Joint Committee shall be responsible for implementing the sharing arrangement. Any difficulty arising out of the implementation of the above sharing arrengements and of the operation of the Farakka Barrage shall be examined urgently by this Joint Committee and any ofference or disputes is not resolved by the Committee shall be considered by a Panel of an equal number or representatives of the two Governments to whom the Joint Committee shall refer the difference or dispute. If the differance of dispute remains unresolved by the Panel, shall be referred to the two Governments for urgent discussion.

SYMPOSIUM ON PERFORMANCE OF MULTINATIONALS REPORTED

Madras THE HINDU in English 8 Oct 82 p 8

[Article by G. Balachandran]

[Text]

ALTHOUGH there is a vast literature on the operations of multinational corporations (MNCs) in the developing countries, almost all of these relate to the performance of these companies in either Latin America or the Far East. Notwithstanding the fact that the presence of MNCs in India is not insignificant, there are very few studies available today that analyse their operations in some depth.

A recent "New Delhi Symposium on Multinational Corporations", organised by the Indo-Dutch Project on Multinational Corporations and sponsored by the Indian Council of Social Science Research, addressed itself to some of the aspects. Although the symposium was primarily concerned with the operation of Dutch multinationals in India, some of the topics discussed related to the field as a whole.

The rationale for MNCs in developing countries comes from their supposed ability to provide the host countries with new products, technology, capital and management skills. In addition, they are expected to act as lead agents in those places where export promotion plays an important role. In India policy makers are supposed to welcome the presence of MNCs not for their ability to bring in capital, but for their technology and ability to contribute to exports of manufactured goods from India.

Dominance

There is an impression that MNCs play only a marginal role in the Indian economy, in contrast to their dominance in other developing countries. Although the number of subsidiaries — defined as a company in which majority equity is held abroad by one share-holder — has been decreasing during the Seventies (from 188 during 1973-74 to 125 during 1978-79), the number of foreign controlled rupee companies (FCRC), defined as one in which 25 per cent or more of the equity capital is held by a foreign company or its nominee, has remained at well over 400 during the same period. Morever, since there are strict controls on the areas in which these FCRCs may operate, their dominance in selected sectors of Indian industry is quite substantial.

In a paper on the role of foreign firms in India, Dr. Ashok Desai quoted the following figures for the market share of foreign firms in 49 industries, classified into consumer goods, chemicals, engineering and electricals. In these groups, the market share of foreign firms were:

Consumer goods-64.0 per cent, chemicals-27.1, engineering 24.0, and electricals-47.8.

Place in daily life

At a more popular level, the place of MNCs in the daily life of an individual belonging to the upper and middle classes has been described thus by a journalist.

"The moment he gets up in the morning, he takes out his Colgate tooth brush over which he spreads Colgate tooth-paste (both products of Colgate-Palmolive (India) Ltd. (subsidiary of a U.S. company of the same name) for his morning brushing of the teeth ceremony which is preceded or followed by a cup of tea packaged and distributed by Lipton (Unilever-controlled) or Brooke-Bond (a subsidiary of a U.K. company).

The tea would have been made on a stove lighted by a match box manufactured by Swedish owned WIMCO. After this, for his morning shave lotion, he uses Palmolive lather shaving cream and after-shave lotion of the same company. The blade he uses is either Erasmic (of Hindustan Lever, a Unilever associate) made under collaboration or from stainless steel supplied by the foreign collaborator. Proceeding to his bath, he uses Lux or Rexona (Hindustan Lever) soap. He uses for his hair, Vaseline Hair Tonic (product of Ponds)..

For his breakfast, he takes Britannia bread (a product of Britannia Biscuit Company — a subsidiary of U.K. company), which is washed down with his favoured 'Nescafe" cup of coffee from Nestle's of Switzerland. To go to his factory or office, he dresses himself in a terylene suit or a mixed fabric dress consisting certainly of 'terene' manufactured by Chemicals and Fibres of India Ltd., a subsidiary of ICI.

He has to catch a Leyland Bus or in the alternative Tata-Mercedes Benz fitted with tyres manufactured by Goodyear, Dunlop or Firestone. In the office, he does a good deal of writing with Parker Quink or its variant Chelpark. In the office, he gets his facts and figures, through machines hired from IBM, ICL and he gets his material typed on a Remington typewriter. In the evening when he returns home, he has a cup of Bournvita (Cadbury's product.) He takes his children for a walk and they demand Cadbury's chocolate or Amul chocolate (which is manufactured under a licence from a foreign company).

He smokes cigarettes manufactured by the Indian Tobacco Company (a subsidiary of the British-American Tobacco company). But a friend advises him to take Charminar of Vazir Sultan, which has special links with Indian Tobacco. On important occasions, he goes for a lunch arranged by his friends in one of the India Tobacco Company's Hotels (Chola or Maurya) or to Oberai Sheraton..

At night his wife spreads a table for dinner with cutlery manufactured under foreign collaboration and serves him with poori fried in Dalda of Hindustan Lever.He retires to bed on a Dunlopillo (product of Dunlop) after taking, if he is on the wrong side of 45, Digene of Boots or the alternative Gelusil of Warner Hindustan. If he does not sleep, he takes Valium of Roche.

For his wife he, of course, gets the best cosmetic kit consisting of Ponds cold cream (manfactured by Cheseborough-Ponds Inc.USA) and face powder manufactured by the same firm and lipstick of Max Factor. His wife cooks in "Hawkins" or "Killicks" cookers (manufactured under foreign licence). When he is away, his wife sews some cloth pieces with Singer sewing machine or knits his pull-over or cardigan with Singer knitting machine (although these machines are made by Merrit they are marketed by Singer). When tired or bored she tunes on the radio/TV manufactured by Philips/Murphy/GEC.

For washing, of course, 'Surf' of Hindustan Lever or Rin of the same company is used by her.

While shopping, she does not forget to get 'Bata' shoes and chappals for the husband and children. If she has a headache (she often has it), Roches' Saridon is the answer or if the doctor advises differently Crocin is the substitute".

Given the recent liberalisation of entry of MNCs in India, it would be interesting to know how far the MNCs in India have fulfilled the expectation of the host country. It is also necessary to study at the same time some of the criticisms that have been levelled against the MNCs such as the practice of transfer pricing.

Exports

It is commonly believed that MNCs play a marginal role in the country's exports. Given the fact that the Indian Government has limited the sectors in which MNCs are allowed to enter and also the extent of equity participation, it is only natural that their overall participation rate in exports would be correspondingly limited. It is frequently held that the MNCs play a marginal role "not only in India's total exports, but also in product-wise or industry-wise exports from India in which these companies are operating."

More recently, a study by the Indian Institute of Foreign Trade (IIFT) came to the conclusion that they account foronly two per cent of India's manufactured exports. Another study concluded that generally an inverse relationship exists between the degree of foreign collaboration involvement and export performance.

Indeed, until recently, there has been only one qualified exception to the above studies, a survey by the Indo-German Chamber of Commerce, done in 1973, which found that, at least in the case of Indo-German collaboration, "joint ventures are of advantage for Indian export efforts."

At the New Delhi symposium, however, the two papers which dealt with the export performance of MNCs in India concluded that the role of MNCs in exports from India is far more important than commonly assumed. Mr. Sanjaya Lall and Mr. Sharif Mohammed contended that the empirical studies done so far have not been sound because they have been based on restricted samples. Their attempt to analyse econometrically the influence of foreign ownership on the export performance of 24 industries showed that "foreign presence has a positive and significant effect on export propensities."

Further study in depth

The other paper (by this correspondent) dealt only with engineering exports from India and the conclusions were based on the total exports of all engineering exporters and not on a sample study. This paper too found a positive relationship between the level of foreign collaboration and exports.

In addition it found that during the period 1975-76 to 1978-79, the growth rate in engineering exports was positively related to the degree of foreign collaboration. It would seem, therefore, that the question of MNCs and their export performance from India still remains open and needs to be investigated afresh in depth. Especially since the results of such studies would have definite policy implications, they need to be done rigorously.

One of the major justifications advanced for the participation of MNCs in the Indian economy is the presumed access to high technology as a result of such participation. In discussing technology in relation to MNCs, it is necessary to distinguish between the technology that is introduced in India as a direct result of the involvement of the MNC and the technology that is a by-product of the MNCs' R & D in India.

Technology level

As far as the level of sophistication of the technology introduced into India by MNCs is concerned, there is really no study which has gone into this area in a systematic manner. Moreover, given the fact that technical payments abroad are strictly controlled, any study of the technology level of MNCs (as also other firms with technical collaboration only) must take into account the regulatory controls imposed by the government on royalty rates, technical fees etc.

There seems to be no study pertaining to collaboration in India which has related the age of technology to the technical payments. However, it would be surprising if any study were to show that the age of technology used by MNCs is more than that of technologies used by domestic firms in similar product lines.

In fact the few studies that exist (not relating to India), show that the age of technology transferred by an MNC to its collaborator progressively increases as the degree of collaboration decreases. Regarding R & D, there is again insufficient evidence to show that MNCs have performed worse than purely Indian firms.

It is true that import substitution played a powerful role in inducing the MNCs to locate R & D units in India. But then this has been the major inducement for R & D in Indian industry, whether MNC or Indian.

R & D intensity

Again, it is true that the R & D intensity (measured by the ratio of R & D expenditure to sales) is much lower in the case of MNCs in India compared with the R & D intensity in the parent organisation. Against this we have the fact that (i) the level of R & D intensity in Indian industry is very small, (ii) there is no positive evidence to suggest that the R & D intensity of MNCs is lower than that of purely Indian firms in comparative product lines, and (iii) according to the Department of Science and Technology, of the 29 companies incurring R & D expenditures of more than Rs. 1 crore each during 1980-81, 11 were public sector companies and 12 were MNCs. Of the remaining six, two had multiple technical collaboration, three were in non-engineering fields and one was in steel making.

It would seem, therefore, that in the private sector, there is a bit of evidence to suggest that R & D intensity and level of collaboration have some positive correlation.

One of the major issues relating to operations of the MNC is their impact on the balance-of-payments front. Generally speaking, past studies of MNCs operating in India have produced results unfavourable to the MNCs on this account. The IIFT study, for instance, concluded that "at an overall level, excluding net equity outflow and purchases of imports from the State Trading Corporation and the open market, the operation of all foreign subsidiaries (in the sample study) have a negative impact on the balance of payments."

Balance of payments

A paper presented at the symposium (analysing only the Dutch MNCs) concluded that "a majority of the Dutch companies, operating in India, had negative balance of payments effects." However, there are some methodological issues which need to be clarified before a definite conclusion can be drawn about the operation of the MNCs.

First, the studies assess the balance-of-payments of MNCs as positive, if, as a group, they produce a surplus of foreign exchange in their external transaction, and negative if their operations lead to a deficit. Operationally, the current effect is defined as the sum of (i) f.o.b. value of exports and (ii) other foreign currency receipts less (i) the c.i.f. value of imports of capital goods, raw materials and stores and (ii) transfer payments abroad i.e. dividends, technical fees, etc.

Such an approach is not always a valid one, especially if the MNC concerned is involved in the production of engineering goods for which domestic inputs are not available. In such cases these imports would be a necessity and it would be wrong to view these as causing a "balance of payments problem." This is especially so if the MNCs supply the domestic requirements of these goods as well. For a proper perspective on this issue, therefore, it is necessary that further studies be done employing the so-called "logic of the alternative situation."

Secondly, given the structure of Indian industry, it is necessary to study the balance-of-payments impact of MNCs vis-a-vis that of purely Indian companies in similar product lines. Unfortunately such studies are not available; but a cursory examination of the data does not suggest that MNC performance is that much worse than that of purely domestic firms.

Transfer pricing

Another issue related to the balance-of-payment impact is the question of "transfer pricing." Although it is recognised that most of the motivating factors which lead MNCs to indulge in transfer pricing exist in India, specific studies have been few.

The Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, for example, found that in 1970-71, Philips India, a Dutch subsidiary, had been exporting at a loss of 20 per cent in some cases and more than 50 per cent in other cases. There is an urgent need for more elaborate studies in this area as they have wide ranging policy implications.

Beyond these, the symposium threw up a number of interesting points as well as areas of further research. For example, it is often held that the MRTP Commission, on account of its dilatory and unhelpful functioning, often hinders further expansion and the setting up of new businesses. Yet, as a paper by Mr. Justice Rajindar Sachar pointed out, during the period June 1, 1970 to December 31, 1980, out of 665 applications under Sections 21, 22 and 23 of the MRTP Act, 601 were disposed of by the Government itself without making any reference to the Commission. Even in those cases where reference was made to the Commission, the approval rate was 74 per cent (of the number of applications.)

Another interesting point was the difference between MNCs of different nationalities. The preliminary evidence indicates that while the German MNCs have performed well on the export front, Japanese MNCs' performance has been clearly below par. There is, in short a need to study the operations of different MNCs along the lines of the Indo-Dutch project on MNCs.

LOK DAL-K PLANS MOVE TOWARD OPPOSITION UNITY

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 7 Oct 82 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Oct. 6.—Yet another step to foster Opposition unity was announced when the Lok Dal (K) national executive meeting here today decided to initiate steps at the earliest date by holding talks with the Janata Party, Congress (S), the Democratic Socialist Party and other national and regional parties. A five-man committee was set up for the purpose.

Briefing reporters, the party general secretary, Mr George Fernandes, said the deteriorating political, social and economic situation in the country and various other factors had made it imperative for the Lok Dal (K) to reiterate its views that the creation of a viable, effective alternative is the need of the hour.

The members of the committee are Mr Biju Patnaik (Convener), Mr Kumba Ram Arya, Mr Ram Vilas Paswan, Mr Sharad Yadav and Mr George Fernandes.

Mr Fernandes said the Janata Party programme (1979), its draft economic programme (1978) and the manifesto of the Lok Dal (1980) would form the backdrop to any other discussions for Opposition unity.

He, however, ruled out any talks with the Bharatiya Janata Party because of its involvement with the RSS.

The national executive was presided over by Mr Karpoori Thakur, a former Chief Minister of Bihar. Thirty out of 35 members were present which included presidents and general secretaries of Karnataka, Kerala, Tamil Nadu, West Bengal, Orissa, Maharashtr, Haryana, Punjab, Chandigarh and Madhya Pradesh.

The national executive also passed resolution on the Bihar Press Bill, Meerut riots and the Israeli aggression.

The national executive expressed alarm at the attack mounted on the freedom of the Press and on the persons of the Fourth Estate by the Government of Bihar. It said: "There is now enough evidence to conclude that the Bihar Government would not have dared to launch this witch-hunt without the full backing of the Central Government. This conspiracy to strike at the fundamental freedoms of the people must be defeated, and the national executive is pleased that a nationwide campaign on this issue has been launched."

The national executive was distressed at the communal riots that have rocked the city of Meerut during the past one month, claiming at least 60 lives. It said: "No matter what alibis they may have, no matter what scapegoats they may find the fact is that these terrible riots have once again demonstrated the incompetence and irrelevance of the Congress (I) Governments at the Centre and in the States in dealing with the national problems."

ROK AMBASSADOR DISCUSSES INDO-KOREAN TIES

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 4 Oct 82 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, October 3 (PTI).

THE ambassador of Republic of Korea, Mr. Chung-Tai Kim, said tonight that a new dimension had been added to the relations between India and Korea in recent times through increased bilateral trade and economic co-operation.

The trade volume between India and the Republic of Korea, he said, touched a new high of Rs. 215 crores in 1980-81 as compared to Rs. 25 crores in 1975-76.

There was greater exchange of businessmen between the two countries today raising hopes of expanding economic co-operation, Mr. Chung-Tai Kim said in a broadcast on the occasion of the national foundation day of his country.

ROLE IN BOMBAY HIGH

It was a matter of pride for his country, the ambassador said, that it had been given a chance to be involved in the construction of platforms in Bombay High, which were to facilitate and strengthen India's self-sufficiency in petroleum.

Korea was also happy to be associated with the colour television project which should bring the joy of viewing the Asiad to the millions of Indian viewers, he added.

Stating that the links between the two countries dated back to almost 2,000 years when the teachings of Lord Buddha reached their land, Mr. Chung-Tai Kim said India's valuable contribution to the founding of the Republic of Korea was firmly noted in the mind of the Koreans.

Pointing out that "from a scratch we built up our country and established it as an industrial nation", the ambassador said the per capita GNP rose from a meagre Rs. 826 in 1962 to Rs. 15,000 in 1981. The industry made rapid strides and today their industrial electronic products find markets throughout the world.

"The buoyancy of our economy further encourages us to set our national targets still higher. We strongly feel that in this task a peaceful reunification of Korea could play a crucial role and ensure prosperity for the entire Korean people," he stressed.

In this context, Mr. Chung-Tai Kim referred to a comprehensive unification formula proposed by President Chun Dwoo-Hwan on January 22 this year including the adoption of a constitution for a unified Korea and hoped that dialogue would be resumed in the Korean peninsula.

Mr. Chung-Tai Kim reaffirmed his country's earnest desire to consolidate its relations with India and also reiterated Republic of Korea's determination to achieve the peaceful reunification of Korea through dialogues and exchanges.

BRAHMINS DISCUSS UNITY AT NATIONAL LEVEL

Madras THE HINDU in English 4 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] Palghat, Oct. 3.

Leaders of various Brahmin associations in the southern States, who participated in the fourth annual convention of the Brahmana Sabha, Palghat, today expressed their resolve to unite at the State and Central levels so that they could emerge as a strong political force to "safeguard the interests of the community which has been subjected to unwanton repression taking advantage of its silent and peace-loving nature".

Mr. C. M. Sundaram, Kerala's Local Administration Minister, who inaugurated the conference in the absence of the Chief Minister, said it would neither be possible nor desirable for Brahmins to keep out of politics hereafter. He said the peace-loving Brahmin community had suffered neglect and abuses because of its disunity and apathy to politics.

Mr. Sundaram commended the Brahmana sabha's efforts to rehabilitate destitute women and poor girls by providing them with self-employment opportunities.

Muslim support: Mr. G. S. Haneefa Haji, deputising for the Kerala Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. C. H. Mohammed Koya, who could not attend due to indisposition, wondered why members of this "intelligent community" could not achieve what the Muslim minority had achieved by its unity. While advising Brahmins to be united, Mr. Haneefa Haji assured them of Muslims' support for all their welfare measures.

Mr. V. Raghavan, president, Akhila Kerala Brahmana Sabha, said Brahmin organisations in Kerala had gained political recognition by virtue of their strength and peaceful working. Efforts should be taken to retrieve land and properties of Brahmin institutions "which had been appropriated by others taking advantage of the timidity and trouble-allergy of Brahmins."

Mr. N. Kasiraman, president of the Tamil Nadu Brahmins' Association (TAMBRAS), said Brahmins though living in isolation could emerge as a strong political force if they united under a single banner. They had to suffer humiliation, insults and neglect only because they had remained passive all these years. The association had set up about 3,000 branches in Tamil

Nadu with considerable following which resulted in political parties approaching TAMBRAS for its support during the recent Periyakulam parliamentary by-election.

Condemned: Mr. V. Bhanumurthy, Convener of the All India Brahmins Association, New Delhi, condemned "Brahmin-baiting" in Tamil Nadu by the Dravidian parties and called upon the Chief Minister, Mr. M. G. Ramachandran, to put an end to anti-social forces which whipped up communal disharmony. The Chief Minister should not forget that he was common to all.

CORRESPONDENT GIVES DETAILS OF IMF AMENDMENT ACT

Madras THE HINDU in English 4 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 3.

An intriguing aspect of the International Monetary Fund and Bank Amendment Bill, 1982, is likely to arouse protests and heated discussion during the winter session of Parliament commencing tomorrow. The Bill deletes the specific reference to the relevant sections of the Indian Income-Tax Act of 1922, present in the existing act, legislated as far back as 1945, while empowering the Government to provide information sought by IMF.

Sub-section 3 under Section 4 of the present Act reads as follows:

"No information obtained under this section shall be furnished to the International Fund in such detail as to disclose the affairs of any person and the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (3) of Section 54 of the Indian Income-Tax Act 1922, shall apply in relation to information obtained under this Section as they apply to the particulars referred to in that Section."

Sounds odd: The wording of the amending Bill which sounds odd, simply says "no information obtained under this Section shall be furnished to the International Fund in such detail as to disclose the affairs of any person."

The "Statement of Objects and Reasons" appended to the Bill explains this by saying, "The present opportunity is being availed of to omit the reference in Section 4 of the Act to the Indian Income-Tax Act 1922, and to amend Section 7 of the Act to bring the rule-laying provision in conformity with the latest formula." It does not explain what the "latest formula" is.

Obligations: The preceding sub-section (1) of Section 1 inscribed under the 1945 Act, which details the powers of the Government to call for information says, "Where under Section 5 of Article VIII of the Fund Agreement, the International Fund requires the Central Government to furnish it with any information, the Central Government, or if generally or specially authorised by the Central Government in this behalf, the Reserve Bank, may, by an order in writing require any person to furnish to such officer or other person as may be specified in the order, such detailed information as the Central Government or the Reserve Bank, as the case may be, may determine to be essential for the purpose of complying with the request of the International Fund and any person so required shall be bound to furnish such information."

The succeeding sub-section in the existing Act referred to the above specifically mentioned the obligations on those giving such information under the provisions of the Indian Income-Tax which have been deleted in the amending Bill.

Need for amending Bill: An Amending Bill to the 1945 Act has become necessary in view of the amendments in the Articles of Agreement of the IMF, first in 1969, when the Special Drawing Rights scheme was introduced to supplement the reserves of member-countries. India participated in the scheme which came into operation from July 28, 1969, by accepting the modifications in the original Articles of the agreement.

Subsequently, on April 30, 1976, the IMF Board of Governors adopted, by a resolution, modifications, resulting in a second set of amendments to the IMF Articles. The main objectives of these amendments which came into force on April 1, 1978, are: achieving greater flexibility in the exchange rate agreements, reduction in the role of gold and enlargement of the Special Drawing Rights, simplification and modernisation of the IMF's financial operations and transactions, etc.

The amended Fund Agreement now has 31 Articles and 11 Schedules as against 32 Articles and nine Schedules in the old agreement. Nomenclatures of certain Articles have also been changed to provide for the amendments introduced in the IMF agreement and the number of clauses in certain Articles have either been increased or reduced.

Amendment to 1945 Act: The existing provisions in the IMF Act of 1945 which is an enabling Act of the Government to implement the provisions of the IMF Agreement needs modifications to provide for complying with the amended articles of the IMF agreement. The present Bill is to amend the 1945 Act to incorporate in it, references to the new or revised Articles and Schedules as also the changes in the nomenclatures in the amended IMF agreement.

DROP IN FOREIGN COLLABORATION ARRANGEMENTS REPORTED

Madras THE HINDU in English 4 Oct 82 p 13

[Text] NEW DELHI, Oct. 3.

Approvals for foreign collaboration with Indian enterprises are declining, according to a study made by the Association of Indian Engineering Industries (AIEI). Most of the recent agreements are in high technology areas.

The number of collaboration arrangements approved by the Government was 389 in 1981 as against 526 in 1980, a decline of 26 per cent.

Of the approvals given in 1981, as many as 67 per cent were for technical collaboration, 18 per cent for the supply of drawings and designs and 14.4 per cent with foreign financial participation in equity and only one by a non-resident Indian.

Of the approvals given by the Government 65.3 per cent were with parties from Western Europe, 22 per cent from the U.S. and seven per cent from Asia (mostly Japan).

Though the U.S. replaced the United Kingdom in the list of collaboration approvals since 1980, the U.K. continues to maintain its first position in terms of the total collaboration agreements since 1957.

British firms shared 23 per cent of the total collaborations accounting for 1552 collaborations. This was followed by the U.S. (19.5 per cent) numbering 1304, West Germany 1182 (18 per cent) and Japan 564 (8.4 per cent).

Of the total 6702 collaborations, foreign tie-ups in the engineering field alone accounted for 78 per cent.

Sectorwise the bulk of the collaboration were in the field of electrical equipment (20 per cent), industrial machinery (11 per cent), machine tools and industrial instruments (seven per cent each), and metallurgical industry (four per cent). These five sectors together accounted for 50 per cent of the collaboration agreements in the engineering industry.

NAGA REBELS REPORTED UPSET BY PRC ARMS REFUSAL

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 6 Oct 82 p 4

[Text] Imphal, Oct (PTI)

China's refusal of help to outlawed National Socialist Council of Nagaland (NSCN) coupled with surrender of 20 of its members including some prominent leaders, to authorities since 1 June has cast a 'gloom' on the pro-Chinese extremist set up led by Muivah-Issac Swu, army sources said here today.

NSCN leader Muivah felt that he had been let down by 'his Chinese friends' when he received a letter recently from NSCN chairman Issac Swu now in Kachin area of Burma stating that China had refused help including supply of arms to them because of their own internal problems, the sources said.

Muivah is also 'upset' over the shortage of arms in the camps and desertion of NSCN members including a self-styled Lt Col in the past few weeks, they added.

According to the sources a prominent member of NSCN who surrendered to the authorities recently, stated that 'there are a large number of disillusioned Naga hostiles who are planning to desert the underground organisation and lead a peaceful life'.

The outlaw also confessed that a large number of Naga undergrounds were killed by their colleagues when their plan to escape was detected and two extremists were also shot dead before him recently.

"Now, a wide gap exists between officers and members of the organisation as a result of internal clash and acute shortage of food in the camp," sources added.

AKALI DAL LEADER ISSUES STATEMENT ON SIKHS

Madras THE HINDU in English 12 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 11.

The Akali Dal President, Sant Harchand Singh Longowal, today denied that Sikhs had secessionist designs but reaffirmed his party's stand that the Centre's powers should be confined to four subjects and that the States should be given all residuary authority.

In a strongly-worded statement, released here on his behalf, Sant Longowal said the Sikh problem could be solved in a minute if New Delhi realised "what is India without Sikhs?" just as they realised "what are Sikhs without India?"

Basing his argument on the assumption that the religious freedom of the Sikhs could not be ensured without greater autonomy to the States, he said the "rulers of New Delhi are sadly mistaken if they think that the Sikhs can be denied religious liberty and equality by being dubbed as separatists and extremists".

Rejecting the plea of the Union Home Minister, Mr. P. C. Sethi, for calling off the agitation to pave the way for fresh dialogue, he said: "We have explained our case fully to the Prime Minister. There is no need for re-hearing. We feel that the judgment has been reserved. Let her pronounce the judgment. If we find that due justice has been done we would promptly respond to friendly calls but if nothing comes out to our satisfaction, we will have no alternative to continuing our grim battle for the realisation of our goal". Since, according to him, there was no indication of a positive response from New Delhi, his party abandoned the course of negotiations.

"Forgotten": He regretted that promises made to the Sikhs during the freedom struggle were forgotten and said: "We have been treacherously ignored by Congress bosses. It has become difficult for us to go on trusting these very leaders who had been exploiting us all these years".

Their concept of autonomy for the States, he said, was enshrined in the Anandpur Sahib resolution, adopted on October 16, 1973. As he explained, the resolution would have the Centre's authority restricted to defence, currency, communications and foreign relations and other powers devolved to the States in the interest of development.

Of the four parts of the resolution, the first related to religious independence, the second to political aspects (federal structure), the third to economic affairs and the fourth to the working classes and their cultural aspirations.

The resolution did not indicate secessionist trends, he said. He justified the claim that the Sikhs were a separate "nation" but said that they had the same "nationality" as other Indians.

INDIA FOR TALKS WITH NEPAL ON RIVER DAMS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 12 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, October 11.

The irrigation minister, Mr. Kedar Pandey, told the Lok Sabha today that India wanted a meeting at a high political level with Nepal for expediting the construction of dams on common rivers, namely the Kosi, the Kamala and the Bagmati.

The minister said the three projects were discussed at an official-level meeting held in New Delhi in February. It was then decided that further discussion on the projects would be held at the next meeting. But in spite of repeated reminders to the Nepalese government, no date for the second meeting had been fixed.

Mr. Pandey said since the projects were beneficial for both countries, a discussion at the political level would help their early implementation.

Replying to a question, Mr. Pandey said an updated feasibility report for the proposed multipurpose project on the Kosi at Barahkshetra was sent to the Nepalese government in August, 1981. During the discussion at the February meeting, the Nepalese delegation had indicated that the feasibility report was under study.

The proposal for building a multipurpose dam on the Bagmati was made by the Nepalese government, while the one on the Kamala was made by the Bihar government. These proposals were also discussed at the February meeting.

According to the feasibility report for the Kosi dam, its maximum height would be 269 metres and gross storage capacity of the reservoir would be 10.9 million acre feet. The command area would serve 5.46 lakh hectares in Nepal and 9.76 lakh hectares in India.

In the power sector, the installed capacity of the dam power house would be 3000 MW and of the canal power house 300 MW. The cost of the entire project would be Rs. 4,074 crores.

Mr. Bhogendra Jha (CPI) said the delay in the implementation of the Kosi project was not due to obstruction from the Nepalese side but due to the opinion held by the government that there was no market for the big chunk of power the project was expected to produce.

EXPERT STRESSES NEED FOR 'BOLD' FUNDING OF RESEARCH

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 1 Oct 82 p 13

[Text] BANGALORE, Sept. 30.—Professor C. N. R. Rao yesterday warned that the growth of science in the country would be irreparably affected if bold choices were not made now on administering and funding scientific research. This warning came from the professor at a function organized by the Deccan section of the Royal Society of Chemistry (London) at the Indian Institute of Science to felicitate him for receiving the prestigious medal of the British Chemical Society.

Professor Rao who is chairman of the Solid State and Structural Chemistry unit of the Indian Institute of Science, was in Edinburgh last week to receive the medal.

Stating that scientific research in India was at the crossroads, he said the number of bright young scientists in many fields of science had not increased, despite the heavy inputs into science and technology.

The situation, the professor pointed out, caused concern, particularly when one looked into the future when the country may no longer be able to continue to build large scientific institutions or support scientific research in the manner it had done in the past. Professor Rao, who was recently elected Fellow of the Royal Society of London, said there was tremendous disparity in the funding of scintific institutions.

The successive Five-Year-Plan outlays revealed that big scientific institutions continued to become bigger but the scientific effort in the education sector continued to get poor, funds although some of the best scientific research was being done in this sector.

While some of the scientists in the academic departments might get better research funding today than before, it was below par by any standard, he said. Funding of even better institutions, such as the Indian Institute of Science, was so poor that individuals, or the institution itself, could hardly forge plans for work based on institutional funding, he added.

Referring to the new areas of research which often gave rise to technological revolutions, Professor Rao said the funding agencies had to respond to the challenge of helping the growth of talent in areas such as genetic engineering. "We cannot possibly wait for help from outside to develop our research capabilities in emerging areas. Just as it is essential for us to make a judicious choice of what technologies to develop and what to buy from outside, in scientific research we have to make the right decision on which areas we can and should support, and to what extent. This is often difficult, and even enlightened funding agencies do not go through this exercise" he said.

The professor, who is a member of the Science Advisory Committee of the Union Cabinet, mentioned that it was extremely difficult for scientists in India to find proper support to participate even in good international meetings, without going through "indignities". Exposure to research work being carried out in the outside world was essential and funding for it had to be made part of the support for scientific research.

HINDUSTAN AERONAUTICS DEMONSTRATES TRAINER PLANE

Madras THE HINDU in English 12 Oct 82 p 7

[Text] Bangalore, Oct. 11.

Hindustan Aeronautics today conducted the inaugural flight of a prototype of its Ajeet trainer aircraft to demonstrate its capability to design and develop sophisticated technology aircraft. Wg. Cdr. M. W. Tilak, HAL's chief test pilot, demonstrated the capabilities of the aircraft.

The Karnataka Chief Minister, Mr. R. Gundu Rao, was the chief guest; the invitees included Dr. V. M. Ghatege, former chief designer and former director of HAL and Mr. Dharam Singh, Minister for Urban Development and Housing.

The Ajeet MK-1 is a two-seat, low profile transonic trainer aircraft designed for dual and solo instructional flying, operational flying in air-to-ground and air-to-air armament training and practice in instrument and night flying. The aircraft is powered by an Orpheus turbojet engine, developing 4500 lbs. static thrust. The engine has been manufactured by HAL.

Besides two 30 mm. Aden guns, various types of armament loads like bombs and rockets can be carried under the wing. The aircraft has a maximum speed of over 1,000 km. an hour and can climb an altitude of 30,000 feet in five minutes. It compares well with the British Aerospace's Hawk and other modern aircraft.

Mr. Gundu Rao described HAL as the pride of the country. He stressed the need for the country to keep abreast of developments in technology.

Wing Commander Tilak gave a commentary of the inaugural flight from the air. Everything was fine, he said on emerging out of the aircraft. The Chairman of HAL, Mr. B. K. Kapur, received the Chief Minister and other invitees.

HAL in a press release said the public sector company had completed the design and development of HPT-32 piston engined trainer, a prototype of which won the second place in the recent air race held in Delhi, and an MK II version of the Kiran aircraft (which has been developed with the same power plant that has been used on the Ajeet trainer).

HAL has so far designed and developed a number of aircraft like the HT-2 piston engined trainer, the Pushpak flying club trainer, the Krishak air observation aircraft, the Marut twin which was about to be flight-tested.

Further HAL had successfully integrated a next generation inertial navigation and sea weapon delivery system for the Jaguar Aircraft jet fighter bomber, the Marut twin jet trainer, the Basant agricultural aircraft, the Kiran MK-1 jet trainer and the Ajeet ground attack fighter.

HAL had also drawn up a perspective plan for the next 10 to 15 years for the design and development of a number of aircraft, engine avionics and associated accessories. The plan envisaged the design and development of a light combat aircraft, light transport aircraft, agile helicopter, engine for cruise missile, turboprop engine primary trainer and advanced jet operational trainer. If approved by the Government, the programme could provide indigenously designed and developed products on a continuous basis.

HAL undertook the Ajeet trainer aircraft project at the instance of the Air Force which has placed orders for 12 of them. The Navy is also likely to place orders for them. The second prototype would be ready early next year, a spokesman said.

PANELS FORMED TO PREPARE FOR NONALIGNED SUMMIT

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 9 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] THE Government has constituted three main committees to coordinate the preparatory work for the Seventh Nonaligned Summit being held in Delhi in March, report agencies.

Foreign Secretary M K Rasgotra will head the Political Committee and Secretary Romesh Bhandari will look after the work of the Economic Committee.

Mr H Y Sharda Prasad, Information Adviser to the Prime Minister, will coordinate publicity of the summit and will be assisted by Mr K S Bajpai, another Secretary in the External Affairs Ministry, and Mr Mani Shankar Aiyar, joint secretary in charge of the External Publicity Division.

Mr K Natwar Singh, also a Secretary, who has been appointed Secretary-General for the summit, will make all the logistical arrangements for the conference.

Dr J S Teja, additional secretary, who heads the UN Division, will be the nodal point for the summit.

The Government is soon setting up a number of working groups to look after the various activities connected with the summit.

The External Affairs Ministry will also depute several senior officers to visit some nonaligned countries to elicit their views on the subjects to be discussed at the summit.

While the Ministry has started work in right earnest, other ministries will get into action after the Asian Games are over

Preparations have been initiated on an urgent basis and detailed estimates covering various items of work are being drawn up. Normally three years are required to prepare for a summit of this size which will be attended by heads of Government and delegations from nearly 100 countries

CPI EXECUTIVE MEETING REVIEWS FOOD SITUATION

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 9 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] THE CPI has demanded immediate state monopoly purchase of foodgrains to stave off manmade famine in coming months as private hoarding will inevitably make the situation grim at a time of acute shortages caused by floods and drought in different parts of the country.

The central executive committee of the CPI reviewed the food situation at a three-day meeting in New Delhi which concluded on Friday and warned that because of extensive drought and floods, "the country is going to face a most difficult food situation the like of which it did not face in recent times".

The executive put forth a nine-point charter of demands which includes increase in procurement prices for paddy and guarantee of remunerative prices for cotton, jute, sugarcane, oilseeds and potatoes.

An executive resolution on the subject said the CPI would approach other parties and mass organisations for cooperation in launching a campaign to force the government to accept these demands. Briefing newsmen, party general secretary C Rajeswara Rao said that all parties supporting monopoly state purchase of foodgrains could join the campaign.

Asked whether the BJP would be included in the campaign, he said: "You know it has opposed state monopoly purchase scheme ..." To a question whether the Congress-I would be allowed to join the programme, he replied, "The Congress-I also...," "we have no objection to its participation for a good cause but we know that it cannot agree to monopoly purchase."

He explained that first the six Left and democratic parties would be approached together with various mass organisations for joining the campaign. He however made it clear that the CPI would cooperate only with those which support the monopoly purchase scheme.

Referring to the food situation, Mr Rao said that according to his party's estimates, the kharif crop would be 20 million tonnes less than last year, while the rabi prospects were also uncertain.

Mr Rao charged that the government was underplaying the danger and not telling the truth. The Government's claim that the food situation was under control with 15 million tonnes in store and import of 2.5 million tonnes was untenable.

The traders, visualising the coming crunch, were already cornering foodgrains. The procurement price of Rs 122 for rice announced by the Government was not enough and provided only very little margin to the producers. The CPI, therefore, asked for Rs 140 as procurement price and fixation of such price for other cereals accordingly.

The executive also discussed at length the communal situation in the context of the Meerut riots and noted that the BJP-RSS on the one hand and the Jamat-e-Islami on the other were responsible for causing the riots. A resolution on the subject said that whenever communal riots break out in a place, sections of the local Congress-I get communally divided and join hands with either the Hindu communalists or the Muslim communalists. This happened in Meerut also with two Congress-I MLAs taking different sides and adopting a communal position." In such situation, "the Congress-I as an organisation gets paralysed and incapable of fighting the communal forces", it said.

The party has demanded that the PAC of UP and BMP of Bihar should not be used in communal riots and these forces must be reorganised to include Muslims, scheduled castes and RSS drills in public places and communal propaganda, ban on RSS drills in public places and posting of composite police force and district administration in communally volatile areas.

The executive took note of the fact that the Meerut communal riot took place at a time when united mass actions of the toiling people were taking place all over the country. It held that the vested interests were trying to disrupt these mass movements by organising communal riots.

The executive also reviewed the mass actions against the Bihar Press Bill and decided to continue the agitation in cooperation with other parties and organisations. It had earlier reviewed the peace march and hailed its great success.

ADDITIONS TO IAF FLEET INCREASE CAPABILITY

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 8 Oct 82 p 16

[Text] THE capabilities of the Indian Air Force have increased substantially in the 1980s with the introduction of three sophisticated aircraft— MIG-25, MIG-23 and the Jaguar. These have not only enhanced the strike power of the Air Force but have also brought about an improvement in aviation and armament technology.

The most prestigious addition to the fleet is no doubt the elusive MIG-25 reconnaissance aircraft, known as Foxbat in North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries. Reputed to be the highest flying and the fastest flying aircraft in the world, it can attain a speed of Mach 3.2, more than three times the speed of sound. The current record of height attained was set by a Soviet pilot who, in August 1977, soared to 37,650 metres in an MIG-25.

MIG-25 R, the basic reconnaissance version of the aircraft which India has acquired will no doubt increase the observation power of the Air Force. Four such aircraft had been deployed by the Soviet Union in Egypt in 1971. Between 1971 and 1972 these aircraft carried out at least four survey missions to the Israeli coastline and the Israeli-occupied Sinai peninsula. The Israeli AirForce despatched Phantom interceptors, but these failed to make contact with the MIGs. The Western world had the first opportunity to examine the aircraft when a Soviet pilot defected and flew to Japan in an MIG-25 in September 1976

DEEP PENETRATION

Two other important additions have been the Jaguar and MIG-23, both of which are suited for deep penetration, interdiction and tactical air support operations. These are expected to supplement the MIG-21, still the backbone of the Indian Air Force, and basically an interceptor.

The typical weapon load of a Jaguar includes in addition to guns, rockets and bombs, Martel anti-radar missiles, Magic Matra missiles and anti-shipping weapons such as Harpoon and Exocet missiles. The total weapon-carrying capacity of the aircraft is more than 4,750 kg. Its internal fuel-carrying capacity of 4,200 litres gives it sufficient capability to remain airborne and maintain an attack radius of 760 nautical miles with external fuel tanks.

MIG-23 BN, codenamed Flogger-F in NATO countries, is the export version of MIG-27, though it contains some features of MIG-23 MF, the primary tactical interceptor of the Soviet Air Force. Suited for interdiction and ground attack, it is well-known for its "swing wing" property and carries an impressive weapon-load. The movable wing enables the aircraft to take off from and land on short stretches. Its internal fuel capacity is substantially more than that of MIG-21 and it carries on board the Atoll air-to-air missiles, though MIG-23 MF is equipped with Kerry radio-guided air-to-surface missiles.

No less spectacular is the sophisticated missile system that these aircraft have ushered in. They have brought with them the air-to-surface missiles whereas MIG-21 has on board air-to-air missiles only. The Martel AS 37 anti-radar missile on board the Jaguar is passive radar homing. There is a receiver antenna on board the missile which locks on to electromagnetic radiation and generates guidance signals to the auto-pilots to direct the missiles on to the target. The Jaguar can also be fitted with the Matra Magic R 550 missile designed for close combat. It can operate in a range of between half a mile and six miles. The guidance is provided by an infra-red homing device. The Atoll air-to-air missiles on board the MIG-21 also depend on an infra-red homing device.

Indigenous production and repair facilities of the aircraft in service are important for an effective air force. Hindusthan Aeronautics is producing MIG-21 and the Atoll missile for a number of years. The Jaguar is being assembled in India. Similar assembly of MIG-23 is expected to start in 1983.

Even these aircraft would, however, look outdated when Mirage 2000, which is being developed as an interceptor and air-superiority fighter in the French Air Force, will reach India. The aircraft, it is promised, will be equally suitable for close support, low-altitude attack and reconnaissance.

The delta-wing of Mirage 2000, as district from the usual swept wing, will offer the aircraft a tight turning capability and a high service ceiling, but also involve a higher landing speed. The aircraft's weapon-carrying capacity is an impressive 6,000 kg, which may include Matra Super 530, Matra Magic 550 or AS 30 Laser air-to-surface missiles. Its speed is more than Mach 2.2 and it has an internal fuel capacity of 3,800 litres.

Matra Super 530 is an interception missile, with either a semi-active radar homing or an infra-red guidance system. The infra-red version can lock on to the enemy aircraft from any direction, relying upon heat trail from either the jet engine or the sports subject to aerodynamic heating during flight. The semi-active radar homing device is for use with a target-illuminating radar. AS 30, which homes on to a laser marked target, is designed for pinpoint attacks.

The capability of the Mirage 2000, is comparable perhaps only to the F-16 Fighting Falcon, which Pakistan may soon acquire from the U.S. Air Force. The strongest point of F-16 is its weapon-carrying capacity the maximum being 9,276 kg. It has on board the T.V.-guided Maverick missile in addition to infra-red and radar-guided missiles. Maverick has a miniature TV-homing system on board. The pilot sees the picture transmitted from the missile seeker, slews the seeker to the target, locks the T.V. tracker on the target and releases the missile. The missile homes on automatically.

HOME MINISTER QUESTIONED ON MEERUT EVENTS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 6 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] NEW DELHI, October 5: The finance ministry would be urged to again examine the issue of flow of foreign funds for political purposes, the home minister, Mr. P. C. Sethi, told the Rajya Sabha today in reply to a calling-attention motion on the Meerut riots.

Referring some members' complaint about foreign funds, Mr. Sethi said the finance ministry was trying to control their flow but when such money came in the garb of charity, the task was rendered difficult.

He assured the house that the U.P. government would institute an inquiry into the communal riots in Meerut and the conduct of the Provincial Armed Constabulary (PAC), about which several members complained during the debate.

He said it was not possible to deploy the central forces extensively and the Centre had already deployed 19 companies of CRP and five of BSF in more sensitive parts of the riot-affected areas.

He said he would visit Meerut again and a delegation of the members of the Lok Sabha belonging to different parties was also expected to tour the affected areas. When the opposition members said the members of th eRajya Sabha should also be included in this team, he said a separate peace mission of the elders could visit Meerut later.

The home minister denied the charge that the ruling party was in league with communal parties. His party, he said, was committed to secularism and had always fought the forces of communalism in the country.

Mr. Sethi told the members that all steps were being taken in Meerut to curb communal activities. Searches for illicit arms were continuing and the district administration had been advised to set up peace committees in different localities.

He admitted that rumour-mongering created problems and some local newspapers were carrying inflammatory reports. The Centre had asked the state to take action against such newspapers.

Initiating the debate, Mr. G. C. Bhattacharya (DSP) said the "air of fundamentalism" sweeping the city and the people, irrespective of party affiliations, were divided on communal lines. This was dangerous for the country. He complained that potential miscreants were still at large.

Mr. Ladli Mohan Nigam (LD-S) said the weapons used in the riots were brought from outside. He alleged that the situation had gone out of hand because of government indifference.

Mr. Satpal Malik (LD-C) alleged that the PAC had behaved in a partisan manner and the newspapers had a big hand in the riots.

Mr. P. Ramamurti (CPM) regretted that even after 35 years of independence, the government had not been able to inculcate secularism in the minds of the people.

Mr. A. G. Kulkarni (Cong-S) held the Uttar Pradesh Congress (I) government responsible for its failure to control the situation.

He also wanted to know why a Congress (I) MLA had invited the Imam of Jama Masjid to visit Meerut and instigate the people.

Mr. Indradeep Sinha (CPI) said the riots were organised by select bands and abetted by the police forces, particularly the PAC which is infected with communalism. He demanded its replacement by CRP and BSF, as it had a black record in similar incidents in Agra, Pant Nagar and Moradabad.

Syed Ahmed Hashmi (Janwadi) also criticised the behaviour of the PAC and wondered why it was deployed when a decision had been taken after Moradabad against its use. He warned that a serious situation would arise in Uttar Pradesh and Delhi if remedial measures were not taken immediately.

Mr. J. P. Mathur (BJP) wanted an inquiry into the role of Shahi Imam Abdullah Bukhari who had allegedly instigated the Muslims to break the agreement with the Hindus over the place of worship.

Mr. P. N. Sukul (Congress-I) denied the opposition charge that the PAC was responsible for creating the communal tension. This central force was deployed only after the riots had flared up.

FALL IN FOREIGN EXCHANGE RESERVES REPORTED CHECKED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 6 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] NEW DELHI, Oct. 5.—The rate of the fall in foreign exchange reserves has shown an appreciable decline in the current financial year. Until the middle of September, they had dropped by only Rs 789.58 crores compared to Rs 1,093.29 crores in the same peirod last year.

The decline has thus come down to an average of just around Rs 120 crores a month compared to nearly Rs 180 crores last year. The reasons are not yet clear since trade and other balance of payments figures are not available on this period.

But foreign exchange earnings on account of "invisioles" non-export receipts, including remittanees from Indians living and working abroad—had not shown the expected fall in the first quarter of the year. It is possible that these are rising

According to Reserve Bank estimates in April-June, 1982, these earnings amounted to Rs 1,114.52 crores compared with Rs 1,067.36 crores, a small increase that could have been maintained and helped shore up foreign exchange reserves.

Figures for trade are not available for the current year, but it is expected that payments on account of crude and petroleum products will not have risen excessively because of stable world prices. However, during the year, nearly $500 million will be paid for wheat imports adding to the import bill and will inevitably affect the final foreign exchange reserves picture for the year.

Exports are thought to be rising slowly because of the world recession and the marked fall in commodity prices. Aid receipts are around the level of last year, partly because of slow disbursements from the International Development Association.

The foreign exchange reserves have dropped to this level without taking into account the drawings from the International Monetary Fund. If the two drawings of 600 million Special Drawing Rights in April and July are taken into account, the reserves show a rise of Rs 144.2 crores over the same period of last year and, on September 17, stood at Rs 3,498.39 crores, or roughly three months worth of imports—a still critical level.

RETURN FROM ROK--New Delhi, Oct. 7. Small and medium entrepreneurs in South Korea are eager to cooperate with Indian counterparts to manufacture and sell consumer goods, according to Mr. Chakradhari Agrawal, Secretary-General of the National Alliance of Young Entrepreneurs (NAYE). Mr. Agrawal was a member of the nine-member team of medium and small-scale industrialists which has just returned after an 11-day tour of South Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong. In reply to a question, he said the most important feature of the economies of these three countries was the dominant role played by small and medium-sized enterprises in their respective economies. Small-scale industry in India and Korea were similar and comparable, he added. Mr. Agrawal said India's participation in fairs abroad, as in Korea, should be more meaningful. The Koreans expressed a desire to have trade links with developing countries and a team of Korean businessmen would be visiting India next year. NAYE had decided to set up a joint small business council with Korea, he added.--UNI. [Text] [Madras THE HINDU in English 8 Oct 82 p 16]

CONTRACT WITH IRAQ--New Delhi, Oct. 11.--The Indian Railway Construction Company, a public sector undertaking, has been awarded a contract of 7.5 million Iraqi dinars (Rs 22.5 crores) for the installation and commissioning of automatic railway signalling, tele-communication, outdoor lighting and power supply for two sections of the Mussayeb-Kerbala-Samawa railway project by the new Iraqi Railway Implementation Authority. The work envisages supply and installation of automatic colour light signalling systems and route relay interlocking, laying of 39 kms of main tele-communication underground cables, provision of a 200-line electronic auto exchange, a crystal control central time system and a public address system. The work also involves supply, installation and commissioning of electric sub-station, electric overhead transmission lines, diesel generating sets up to 800 KV a capacity and outdoor lighting of Samawa yard and service building complex including no-break stand-by power supply arrangement. The IRCON is already executing a contract of 91 million Iraqi dinars (Rs 270 crores) for construction of the two sections of Samawa railway project, which includes construction of a big Samawa yard, a crossing station and three major workshops required for maintenance of locomotive and coaches under the new Railway Implementation Authority of Iraq. The work is to be completed by May, 1984 along with the commissioning of the two main sections of the Samawa railway project. [Text] [Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 12 Oct 82 p 13]

TEAM TO PRC--New Delhi, Oct. 8. A nine-member delegation of the Indian Council of Social Science Research (ICSSR) led by its Chairman, Mr. G. INDO-YUGOSLAV TRADE--Belgrade, October 7 (Tanjung-Pool): The Indo-Yugoslav trade is expected to touch $70 million this year, according to the Yugoslav chamber of economy section. However, this figure is far below the target set for last year, which was three times more than the present estimate, Yugoslav economists said. Over the first eight months this year, Yugoslav exports to India have been more than halved totalling $22 million, compared to the same period last year. Yugoslav imports from India have also dropped $27 million, which is 36 per cent less than last year. In the 1960's the basis of economic cooperation between the two countries was investment projects, and in the 70's shipbuilding. Efforts are again being made to increase the volume of investment projects since shipbuilding holds very little future in the current world situation, the economists concluded. PRIVATE SECTOR'S COMPLAINTS AGAINST BUREAUCRACY EXAMINED

Karachi DAWN in English 31 Oct 82 p III

[Article by Muzaffar Hasan]

[Text]

SOME preliminary ideas about the Sixth Five-year Plan, which the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission has given out, lay stress on the growing need for greater private sector participation in industry. The intention is to step up investment in industry to 40% of the GNP, with a considerable share for the private sector.

To facilitate this process it has been indicated that the need for obtaining government sanctions of various types, which at present cause considerable delays, would be done away with except in repect of a small list of industries in which investment may not be allowed. It is also intended that administrative controls would be dismantled and only policy controls would be retained, to provide policy signals to the economy, like the function performed by agricultural prices in farm production.

The private sector in its turn had already been emphasising the need for deregulation and relaxation of various controls. In addition, there are other requirements also for stepping up private sector investment which need to be given serious consideration. These are high rate of taxation, paucity of finance and infrastructure and declining labour productivity. Spokesmen of the private sector have pointed out that unless these issues are attended to, industrial development would be fragile, and in the long run our industrial potential and production and export competitiveness will suffer.

Since the international economic climate has continued to deteriorate during the last two to three years, and the 80's do not offer encouraging prospects relating to aid and trade, it is all the more necessary to concentrate on policies which would increase productivity and impart greater price competitiveness to our produce. All this leads us back to the need for an indepth appraisal of the felt needs of the private sector.

Official view

The Government spokesmen have repeatedly highlighted the progress that has been made, especially during the lat five years. The public has been informed from time to time about the incentives that have been offered (for development of under-developed areas), the industrial sanction that have been accorded in the last five years (Rs.37 billion till the June 1982). The export performance (average annual increase of 25% barring 81-82), the increase in tax collection (34% annual increase during last 5 years), the contribution of public sector corporations to the tax pool and the increase in their industrial production and the advances made in agriculture production especially in wheat, sugarcane, rice and cotton.

The difficulties that have hampered greater advances have, on the other hand, been invariably characterised as exogenous and not implicit in current government policies. The adverse factors, it has been said, have been oil price increase, recession and growing protectionism in developed countries and decline in net aid flows. The public has also been advised to save more for greater investment, as the rate of savings is considered to be low.

There is a great deal of truth in these pronouncements and yet the fact remains that private sector investment in industry has tended to fall behind targets and has, in fact, declined (from 28% to 25%) as a proportion of overall private sector investment during the last five years. This inevitably leads to a growing feeling that considerable changes in the economic policy are needed because its buresucratic bias and approach appears to have imparted structural weakeness to the economy.

Factors Creating Strain

In this context, it may be necessary, to point to some if not all the factors that are creating strains and distortions and which may stymie future efforts at balanced growth and development.

It is essential, in the first instance, to curb the present high rate of inflation on a priority basis. While it is not acknowledged by the policy makers, it mut be mentioned that our rate of inflation is the highest amongst the 36 low developing countries. The reasons for this may be ascribed to cost-push forces arising out of high taxation and heavy doses of deficit financing (mainly to finance state enterprises and public sector corporations), combined with low productivity and general inefficiency of government corporations, apart from the inflationary impact of imports, especially oil. Home remittances are to blame also.

Instead of paying serious attention to this destabilizing factor, the public is continually informed that our rate of inflation is comparable to that of neighbouring countries and that one has to learn to live with it. Even if the rate of inflation were comparable, whatever that might signify, it has to be shown that our policies are comparably burdensome on private sector, and not more, before any meaningful conclusion can emerge.

Capital erosion

The basic problem of our industrial health is related to capital erosion. A government spokesman mentioned recently that price level had increaed fourfold during the last decade. That gives an annual rate of inflation of 30 per cent. In other words, the rupee has lost 75 per cent of its value during the last 10 years. Since we do not allow depreciation on the basis of replacement cost, government has been adding to its tax pool at the expense of industrial capital. Even reserves have been subjected to tax.

The middle class has been ground down by the high rate of inflation. For imparting political stability and for moving towards the desirable objective of building a mature and democrative social order it is essential to strengthen and enlarge the middle class. If the so-called economic growth is at the expense of causing grievous injury to the middle class then one wonders if it is at all worthwhile.

It is time that the pernicious effect of the current rate of inflation is analysed in depth and corrective action taken. Ostensibly economic development is for increasing economic welfare of the people. We find that a large segment of the people has had to pay a price which by any standards is unconscionable.

The central issue that emerges is whether industrial economic surplus should have been utilised for replacement, expansion and modernisation, or it should have been castigated as unwarranted and socially destablising. Through undeserved name calling the bureaucracy has taken over control of industry resulting in much inefficiency. What is worse, this state of affairs has resulted in inflationary fiscal and monetary policies which has done much harm to the middle class. If the aim during the last decade has been to protect industrial labour and enhance its share in industrial economic surplus the result has not been as intended. The labour and middles class have both suffered. The latter much more.

Rate of savings

Another important issue relates to the rate of savings. Normally, one expects voluntary savings to be utilised for investment. Excessive taxation and deficit financing can only result in reduced savings since investment is chiefly the outcome of corporate savings. Moreover during the last decade the public corporate sector has expanded unabashedly and has failed to generate savings. As such the overall rate of savings has been low. One possible solution would, therefore, be to drastically curtail the public sector.

Savings are also adversely affected by a high rate of inflation as inflationary expectations deter private savings since the rapid fall in the value of money causes the latter to erode away quickly. In the context of the policy of not allowing private sector industry a proper share of economic surplus, in the form of meaningful depreciation and accumulation of reserves, the rate of savings cannot but be low.

The central proposition that emerges is that the bureaucracy should opt out from the field of industrialisation, barring public utilities and large projects like the steel mill. That would result in lowering the need of the government for resources which leads to high taxation and high deficit-financing. It is essential that the private sector is allowed to come into its own without having to share the burden of maintaing inefficient public sector corporations.

POOR RESPONSE TO EXPORT PROCESSING ZONE AND ITS PROBLEMS DISCUSSED

Karachi DAWN in English 31 Oct 82 pp I, IV

[Article by Rafique Jabir]

[Text]

THERE is little chance that the Export Processing Zone (EPZ) being set up in Karachi will be commissioned fully before 1986. The infrastructure needed will be completed by 1983 and it would take three more years after the building up of the infrastructure for the Zone to go into operation, observed Mr. M. Ziauddin, Chairman, Export Processing Zone Authority.

As regards the slow growth of infrastructure, Mr Ziauddin said that such facilities are to be developed in stages. This will be the case especially for power and water supply. The EPZ will need 30 megawatts of electricity after it starts functioning in full.

While 25 projects have been sanctioned so far, only two industrial units have been commissioned and seven more are in the process of being pressed into service. As soon as these units make the necessary arrangements for finances, they too are expected to go into production.

Mr Ziauddin said that mainly non-resident Pakistanis, several with foreign collaboration, are coming forward to invest in the EPZ. The response from foreign investors as such is very poor, mainly because of lack of the necessary effort. It appears that the relevant authorities have been content with getting sporadic advertisements published in some foreign newspapers, while countries like Sri Lanka — whose experiment in organising EPZ has been a tremendous success — have opened their offices in foreign countries such as the USA to attract foreign capital and know-how. We have left the matter completely at the mercy of Pakistan's trade offices abroad. Only once a delegation went to sell the idea to foreign investors.

So far only garment factories have been set up. Justifying this beginning for the EPZ, Mr Ziauddin said that initially investment in labour-intensive industries, which involve simple technology and low risk, is not unusual. Other countries such as South Korea, Taiwan, the Philippines, Singapore and Sri Lanka had also to start off with the garment industry, he said.

Sophisticated technology and capital-intensive industries are mainly set up by multinationals which prefer to wait and watch and take into consideration the geopolitical situation, the political climate of the country and the investment atmosphere, particularly government policy vis-a-vis the private sector. At a time when the world is in the grip of a severe recession, it is hard to attract multinationals.

He, however, hoped that provided necessary effort is made, foreign capital can come in a big way because the cost of production in developed countries has gone very high due to the phenomenal increase in wages and inflationary pressure. He quoted the example of South Korea where Japan made heavy investment since labour in that country was cheap. But now labour has become costly in South Korea as well, so there can be a shift towards Pakistan where wages are still low.

But once the EPZ is commissioned and it starts functioning in full swing, labour cost here is also bound to spiral up, giving rise to virulent inflationary pressure, Mr Ziauddin said. With the commissioning of 25 units, about 2,500 workers will be employed. The number will be incresed to between 20,000 and 25,000 when the EPZ has all the projected industries fully working.

Mr Ziauddin believed that the garment industry and other simple technology and labour-intensive projects being set up in the EPZ would not offer any competition to the local industry. These industries will be concentrating on the production and export of goods that are outside quota and tariff restrictions. They will not be allowed in any case a share in Pakistan quota for textile exports and will explore export avenues for fashion fabrics and other items outside the framework of the quotas and to countries where no restrictions are imposed.

He said, the products of the EPZ would not face stiff competition from similar zones in other countries of the region. Pakistan would have an edge over them so far as prices are concerned because of low labour-cost.

The setting up of the Export Processing Zone was approved by the Federal Cabinet on March 4, 1979 and the EPZ Authority was constituted on February 6, 1980, to plan, develop and manage the EPZ in Pakistan. The development of the Karachi Zone was marked with the approval of Phase I at a cost of Rs. 317.14 million with foreign exchange component of Rs. 63.056 million.

The EPZ Authority has acquired land measuring 300 acres in the Landhi Industrial Area following the decision of the Economic Coordination Committee (ECC).

The first phase of the project is confined to the development of 200 acres while the remaining 100 acres are earmarked for phase II.

All the 400 plots of 1000 square metres each, for industries as well as areas reserved for commercial enterprises/warehouses, have been fully developed and are ready for the construction of industrial/commercial enterprises/warehouses. Immediate connections of water and electricity can be given for construction of factories.

Sixty per cent of the physical work was completed by June, 1982 and another 30 per cent, making a total of 90 per cent, is projected for completion by June, 1983. The remaining work after June, 1983 will be that of electrical grid station with 132 KV transmission and telecommunication network. The entire physical development of 200 acres of land is expected to be completed by June, 1983.

The total expenditure incurred since the start of the work till June, 1982 is estimated at Rs. 141 million. A sum of Rs. 100 million has been provided in the budget for 1982-83.

The spill-over of expenditure during 1983-84 would be around Rs. 70 million mainly on the grid station, 132KV lines and the telephone network so that the total expenditure on development of 200 acres of land and on acquisition, fencing, levelling and grading of additional 100 acres would be within 10 per cent of escalation in the total cost of the project approved at Rs. 317.14 million.

The process of sanctioning of industries began in April, 1981 when the first six industrial projects were sanctioned. The seventh project, for setting up of an aluminium extrusion plant, was sanctioned in August 1981. Later, 10 projects were sanctioned by December, 1981, and eight others by June, 1982.

The industries which the projects cover are manufacture of readymade garments, ceramic tiles, electric and electronic appliances, structural foam, aluminium extrusion, specialised wood carvings, fibre glass boats, cosmetics, computer forms, printing and packaging, ball bearing, artificial turf, industrial alcohol, DAP fertiliser, soaps and candles, refurbishment of engines, axes, etc.

The total investment in the 25 sanctioned projects would be of the order of US $135.894 million and when these units are in full production, Pakistan is expected to earn annually foreign exchange to the tune of US $115.844 million.

The sponsors of the projects are Pakistanis working abroad, as well as foreigners, from the USA, the UK, Hong Kong, South Korea, West Germany, Singapore, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Japan, the UAE, Belgium and Lesotho. Pakistanis working abroad have a share of 48 per cent, and foreigners 40 per cent in the total while 12 per cent are joint ventures between overseas Pakistanis and foreigners. All the investors are non-resident Pakistanis.

The State Bank of Pakistan has accorded approval, in principle, to the operation of 12 banks — 8 foreign and 4 Pakistani — in the EPZ. These banks would operate as offshare branches and would be exempted from the operation of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, State Bank of Pakistan Act, 1956, and Banking Companies Ordinance, 1962.

MISUSE OF REFUGEE RELIEF DENIED

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 30 Oct 82 p 8

[Text]

ISLAMABAD Oct 24. A spokesman of the Federal Government has categorically contradicted a report appearing in a section of the press on October 22 which quoting a politician alleged that 50 per cent of the relief goods received for hte Afghan refugees were being misusd by a certain political party.

The spokesman emphatically denied the involvement of any political party with the distribution of relief goods in any forms at any level.

Explaining the detailed system for receipt and distribution of food commodities and other relief goods donated by the U.N agencies he said that all such items were received by the Chief Commissioner Afghan Refugees at Karachi and from where they were despatched to the Provincial Commissioner for Afghan Refugees located at Quetta and Peshawar. The two commissioners distribute all these goods directly to the heads of each refugee family under the strict supervision of district administrators for refugees and in the presence of Israeli Committees consisting of refugee elders.

These arrangements for the distribution of relief goods the spokesman said have worked satisfactorily and every care is taken to see that the relief goods are properly distributed. The system has been appreciated by the representatives of international organizations after having checked the documents in possession of the refugees and the registers maintained by the camp administrator and also after verification from the refugees themselves.—APP.

USE OF MOSQUES AS EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS LAUDED

Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 28 Oct 82 p 28

[Text] The Government has launched a crash programme for opening 8,000 mosque schools to meet the growing needs of the basic and primary education in the country. The scheme which is to cost Rs 4,00 million is to get top priority both at the Federal as well as Provincial levels. In fact, efforts are underway through which a seven-year-old child would be given 'Nazira' lessons in Quran under the pilot project which has been started for Dars-i-Quran and Arabic education in schools during the Sixth Five-Year Plan. According to the national needs, 5,000 new primary schools are to be opened every year whereas we have been able to open only 2,000 in a year, leaving a clear deficit of 3,000 schools for which hwe have neither the financial resources nor the manpower to cope with the situation. And the problem becomes all the more grim when we consider that the literary ratio during the 36 years of our independence has risen from 17 percent to 25 percent only. But these bare statistics reflect only the materialistic aspect of our education which can hardly be the sole criteria in a state based on an ideological preception. Ours is a religious State and we are to grow and thrive on Islamic precepts.

Seen in this context, the significance of the mosque schools, forming the first tier of educational ladder in the shape of primary schools, can hardly be minimised keeping in view the huge dimensions of mass literacy campaign and the dearth of resources at our command. It is certainly a fruitful idea to utilise the space and facilities of a mosque for holding primary classes at a time when prayers are not being held. In fact it is in consonance with the new architectural concepts considered suitable for the third world in particular. Here, the constructed space is to be used to the maximum. Besides, primary education does not demand specialised teaching methodologies. Even an Imam of a mosque can handle a class of primary standard and can motivate the youngsters to seek higher knowledge.

Mosque as a religious platform is likely to create students with obvious religious outlook which will help us carry out reformation in the society. The first step in education acquired within the religious precincts of the mosque could well be the beginning of a new spiritual regeneration for which we have very recently launched a campaign of Islahe-Muashera. The metamorphosis of our existing society is possible only if we start off on the right foor from the very first step.

PAKISTAN VISUALIZED AS 'ORCHARD FOR MIDDLE EAST'

Karachi DAWN in English 22 Oct 82 p 14

[Text]

Pakistan should aim at being the "orchard" of the Middle East, rather than its "granary", says a World Bank economist, who has made a special study of the country's export potential. "It should seek to produce and market more of high value crops, like vegetables, fruits and flowers than wheat and rice."

Shahid Javed Burki, however, made it clear that he is not, by any menas, advocating the supplanting of the grain production. Pakistan needs to feed herself, but just the switching of the surplus capacity from cereals to value-added crops.

He gave his rationale for the novel idea in an interview here on Tuesday with our Special Correspondent, Ghani Erabi. Burki, who has just been promoted Director of the World Bank's Department of International Relations, said, Pakistan has begun to produce enough foodgrain for her domestic consumption: She is virtually self-sufficient. He was confident that the country now has infrastructure in place that can ensure and annual increase of three to four per cent in grain output to take care of the rise in population and build up bufer stocks.

Potential

But Pakistan agriculture has more potential than that — it has the capacity to function as "engine of growth" for the country's economy as a whole — it can achieve a growth rate of five to six per cent to illustrate the potential. Burki said our waste water alone equals the entire nile river discharge. Also that we are using our irrigation system to only one-third of its potential.

Arguing why Pakistan should devote its surplus capacity to the production of oilseeds, vegetables and fruits, rather than wheat and rice, the World Bank economist said, the golbal grain trade is highly competitive. The advantage lies with countries that grow their grain in areas fed by free rain-water, rather than expensive artificial irrigation. It further lies with countries that have the capital and technology to mechanise farming, harvesting, and shipping. It is altogether a captial-intensive, highly mechanised bulk-handling operation that enables countries, like United States, Canada, and Australia to sell grain in the world makret at prices below what it would cost Pakistan to produce.

Rice

About rice, he said the market is very thin. Pakistan with just 300,000 tons, is the fourth largest exporter.

If we produce more, we may bring down world prices. Wheat undoubtedly has a large global market,' but Pakistan lacks a competitive edge.

He pointed out that the wheat surplus that the Indian Punjab produces is not exported to sell in the world market. But is consumed in other provinces within the country itself.

The example to emulate was offered by the "Napa Valley" of the, American state of Califorinia. Just as Pakistan has the world's largest artificial irrigiation system, Napa valley has the most elaborate in the United States. But the facility is utilised to grow vegetables, rather than grain. USA finds that more rewarding so will Pakistan.

Labour-intensive

The reward flows from the fact that the growing of vegetables fruits and flowers is more labour-intensive (somet thing well suited to the requirements of population.

The requirements of populous countrises and the growing is followed by elaborate processing, including cleaning. Packaging and marketing, which provides additional employment to indigenous labour and the value-added exports bring the country more foreign exchange.

Shahid Javed Burki said that huge earnings are made by Greece, Isreal and Spain by exporting flowers, fruits and vegetable to Europe. Pakistan, he said, can do even better because of its cheaper labour. He strongly urged her to mount a major effort over the next five years to devote its surplus agricultural capacity to the production of value-added item.

Because of its immense need and proximity, the Middle East offers an excellent market. He concluded: Pakistan is well suited to become the orchard of the Middle East.—PPI.

FOUNDATION FOR ARTISTS PLANNED

Karachi DAWN in English 22 Oct 82 p 7

[Text] Lahore, Oct 21--Mr Niaz Mohammad Arbab, Federal Minister for Sports, Culture and Tourism on Wednesday disclosed that the Government was examining the feasibility of setting up a foundation for the artists and that the matter would be presented before the next meeting of the Federal Cabinet.

Delivering his inaugural address at an exhibition of paintings and calligraphies by Misbahuddin Gazi at the Punjab Council of the Arts here on Wednesday afternoon, the Minister said the foundation would provide assistance to the artists to alleviate their problems.

The Sports Minister reiterated the Government policy to promote fine arts, especially paintings and added that a magnificent national convention of artists will be held next year like the one held in Islamabad this year.

Later, talking to reporters, Niaz Mohammad Arbab said the Government would reconstitute the Censor Board for Islamabad and the new board comprising 25 to 30 members would be announced within two to four days. Later on, he added, the boards for Lahore and Karachi of similar strength would be revived.

The Culture Minister said all walks of life would be given due representation in the new censor boards.

Replying to a question, the Minister said the Government might recall any picture, even after its being censored if the people raised objections about it and might decertify it if necessary. The purpose of this move, he said, was to discourage pictures loaded with vulgar scenes and instigating crime.

Answering another question, the Minister said the Government was considering to enforce uniform rates for film tickets throughout the country and that this matter would also be discussed by the Federal Cabinet in its next meeting.

Niaz Mohammad Arbab said the Government was in contact with the governments of India and Bangladesh to get historic records and documents about the movement of Pakistan.--PPI

CANADA OFFERS TRAINING FACILITIES TO STEEL MILL ENGINEERS

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 24 Oct 82 p 8

[Text]

KARACHI, Oct.23: The high-level Canadian mission, which recently visited Pakistan, has offered training facilities for the engineers of Pakistan Steel in Canada.

The mission which also visited Pakistan Steel during its stay in the city, had evinced keen interest in the downstream projects of Pakistan Steel, and had acquired detailed information with regard to underconstruction units specially hot-strip mill, cold rolling mill etc.

The delegation also inquired about the experiences and capability of Pakistani engineers in connection with the setting up of downstream projects, and had expressed their appreciation for the role played by the engineers of Pakistan Steel.

The Chairman Pakistan Steel informed the delegation that establishment of the mill was part of the country"s economic strategy, and it was aimed at boosting the engineering industry.

He had informed that due to lack of local availability of steel, big engineering industries were giving a production of just 30 to 40 per cent of their total capacity. But their production capacity will now be fully utilised after completion of Pakistan Steel. The steel making plant will soon be completed and billet mills will also start production shortly, he added.

The steel Mill Chairman added, that hot-strip mill and cold rulling mill of Pakistan Steel will be completed by next year, and by 1984-85 all units of Pakistan Steel will be fully operative.

He said that by that time all the units producing Suzukis, cars, trucks and jeeps etc, would start using 80 per cent of locally manufactured parts. Besides the railway engine manufacturing plant and several plants of tractor manufacturing, would also start functioning in the near future.

He told the delegation memebrs that Pakistan Steel had received encouraging response to its offer, made to the country's and foreign investors for investment in its various units. . . . . .

He also told the Canadians that Pakistan Steel's blast furnace, which was being handled by Pakistani engineers had given a production over its designed capacity and had achieved stability.—APP

KARACHI BAR ASSOCIATION FORMS BODY FOR TALKS

Karachi DAWN in English 27 Oct 82 p 10

[Text]

The Karachi Bar Association has formed a committee of advocates to hold talks with political leaders for "revival of 1973 Constitution, supremacy of law and holding of general elections at the earliest."

The Committee was formed at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Karachi Bar Association, presided over by Mr. Khalid Hameed, Acting President of the KBA.

Arrest criticised

Mr. Minhaj Barna and Mr. Ayaz Amir, Chairman and Secretary-General of the APNEC, Mr. Nisar Osmani, President of PFUJ, and Mr. Mahmood Ali Asad, Chairman, Karachi APNEC (Barna Group), in a joint statement, criticised the arrest of senior advocates and demanded their release.

Mr. Mohammad Sharif, President of the Pakistan National Federation of Trade Unions, called for restraint and avoidance of confrontation with the authorities.

In a statement he said, the workers exercised full restraint though they were denied 45 per cent cost of living allowance by the private sector. But, he said, agitation by advocates would encourage workers and "other interested groups" to come on the roads. He demanded release of detained lawyers, a Press release said.

Qari Sher Afzal, a leader of the local MRD, Mr. Abid Zubairi, Information Secretary of the defunct National Democratic Party, Syed Ishrat Ali Nagorwala, of the defunct PML (Khairuddin Group), Mr. Usman Ghani, Secretary-General of the Muslim Commercial Bank Employees Federation, Mr. Mohammad Khan, General Secretary of the MCB Employees Federation (Karachi Branch), Syed Amir Hussain Shah, and Mr. Bahar Ali Baluch, chiefs of Qaumi Mahaz-i-Azadi, Sind and Baluchistan, respectively, have also criticised the arrest of Mr. Hafeez Lakho and Mr. Abdul Malik and demanded their early release.

Raja Haq Nawaz, Member of the Pakistan Bar Council, and Mr. Nizam Ahmed, Member of the Sind Bar Council and former President of the Karachi Bar Association, have also criticised Mr. Lakho's arrest. In a joint statement they also demanded immediate withdrawal of Legal Practitioners' Amendment Ordinance which they said, was promulgated without the recommendations of the Bar Council, says a Press release.

According to a PPI report from Lahore, an emergency meeting of the Lahore High Court Bar Association held today criticised the arrest of Mr. Abdul Hafeez Lakho, President, KBA and Mr. Malik, the General Secretary of the Association.

SUNFLOWER CULTIVATION STEPS OUTLINED

Karachi DAWN in English 27 Oct 82 p 4

[Text] SIALKOT, Oct 26: Dr Mohammad Sharif, Director (Seed), Ghee Corporation of Pakistan, said here on Monday that the Sialkot District region is most suitable for growing sunflower (Surajmukhi) during spring and autumn.

Dr M. Sharif, said that ghee mills were consuming 6 lakh tons of edible oil at present for the production of ghee. Besides this the consumption of cottonseed oil was 130,000 tons in the ghee mills, he added.

The government was also importing Soyabean and palm oil to the tune of Rs 300 crore, he said. According to a rough estimate, he added, the demand of edible oil is increasing by 50,000 tons every year and it would reach 8 lakh tons after 5 years.

Addressing cultivators on Pasrur Road 16 kilometres from here, he said that mostly crops are sown in the rainy season in Sialkot District because there was scarcity of water here. Cultivators of Sialkot District depend on rains so this region is most suitable for growing of sunflower (Surajmukhi), during spring and autumn he said. The Corporation was providing imported seed for the cultivation of sunflower and suggested that in order to save foreign exchange this crop should be given preference.

Moreover, cultivators could earn more profit by getting technical assistance and cooperation from the Agriculture Department, he said.

Ch. Akhtar Ali Chairman, District Council and Agricultural Advisory Committee, urged the farmers to cultivate sunflowers on more area so that they should help the Ghee Corporation in order to make the country self-sufficient in edible oil.

Ch Abdul Sattar, Member, District Advisory Committee; Ch Mohd Mustafa; Mr Asif Ali Chatta, Mr Feroze Din Butt, Ch Nasir Ahmed and Kh Nasir Majid, leading cultivators were also present.

Ch Ghulam Mustafa, a young landlord of Chhacharwali village was awarded first prize of Rs 500 for cultivating Surajmukhi on an area of 200 acres.

JAPAN WILLING TO FINANCE PROJECTS: DR HAQ

Karachi DAWN in English 27 Oct 82 p 1

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Oct 26: Japan has indicated its willingness to finance a number of new Pakistani projects, Dr Mahbubul Haq, Deputy Chairman, Planning Commission, said here today.

Talking to APP on return from his week-long visit to Japan, he said he had meetings with the Japanese Foreign Minister, Mr Yashio Sakurauchi, and senior officials of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry.

Dr Haq said these talks had indicated an encouraging response to Pakistani needs for additional economic help and financing of several new projects. Pakistan would receive a total of 150 million dollar economic assistance in fiscal year 1982-83 as already announced, as a result of which Japan was now the biggest aid donor to Islamabad. The amount was expected to increase during fiscal year 1983-84, the talks in Tokyo indicated, he said.

He expected the negotiations for project assistance for the next year to be undertaken "fairly soon."

Dr Haq said Mr Sakurauchi had recalled his meeting with Finance Minister Ghulam Ishaq Khan in last August in Islamabad, and expressed the hope that his country would be able to favourably look on projects on the basis of the priorities laid down by Pakistan. These priorities, as explained by Mr Ishaq last August, were in the field of power, transport and agriculture.

Some of the projects discussed between Dr Haq and the Japanese include:

— Financing of two steam turbines of 250 megawatt capacity each, for Jamshoro.

— Designing and construction of the airport terminal at Karachi to handle the growing passenger and cargo traffic.

— Establishment of small experimental solar energy units for remote villages, especially those in Sind and Baluchistan.

— Construction of the Sibi-Rakhani Road in Baluchistan.

— Supply of road construction machinery for rural roads.

Dr Haq said Tokyo might also agree to provide new loans to enable Pakistan buy Japanese-made barge-mounted power generating stations of 200 megawatt each. Such diesel-fuelled stations could go into production quickly, to solve energy shortage problem of Karachi. The delivery period for the stations was 18 months. Concessional loans were available at a three to four per cent annual interest, with repayment in 30 years, and a grace period of 10 years, Dr Haq added.

In reply to a question, he said he had also discussed the question of long-term Japanese aid commitment for Pakistan's sixth Five-Year Plan, instead of the current year-to-year allocations. Such a longer-term framework for the Japanese, as well as other aid to Pakistan, would enable Islamabad to finance the Plan in a more orderly fashion.

He said that in his meetings with the executives of two big Japanese corporations, Mitsui and Mitsubishi, he had invited a larger equity investment and supply of technology so that Pakistan could expand its industrial production in several important fields. The response of the Japanese businessmen and investors was "very encouraging", he added.

Dr Haq said the Japanese Government officials had assured him that they would take concrete steps to buy more from Pakistan. At present, Pakistan faced an annual trade deficit ranking between 400 and 500 million dollars. Asked about any specific items, which the Japanese might be interested in buying from Pakistan, Dr Haq said, these were fish, and fish preparations, and food, among other things. Food could be a good item for export to Japan, as Pakistan's production surpluses would increase in the years to come.

While in Japan, Dr Haq also chaired the fourth session of the North-South round-table conference.—APP

SHIA PROCESSION TEARGASSED IN ISLAMABAD

Karachi DAWN in English 27 Oct 82 p 1

[Text]

ISLAMABAD, Oct 26: The District Magistrate, Islamabad, issued the following Press Note here today:

"Today on 26th Oct. 1982, at about 3.30 p.m., a group of Shia mourners (500 to 550), mostly hailing from Rawalpindi and the surrounding areas assembled at the site of an under-construction Shia mosque in sector G-9/2 and despite assurance and commitments given to the administrator ICT, on behalf of the Shia high command, to the contrary, 150 to 200 persons took out an unlicensed procession in violation of MLR 50. Some persons from the procession started pelting stones and bricks on the members of police force, without any provocation, whatsoever, resulting in injuries to a few members of the police force.

"Teargas was used to prevent further mischief under the orders of the Distirct Magistrate, Islamabad. After dispersal a group of persons (100 to 150) re-assembled at another place and formed a procession to march back to the mosque site, after traversing some parts of the surrounding road. Some speeches were made at the mosque before the final dispersal, at 4.45 p.m.

"To eliminate tension and likely reaction from the local residents, appropriate measures were adopted. The peace and order in the area remained under control and no further untoward incident was observed."—APP.

PACARA CLAIMS ALL PARTIES WILL MERGE IN MUSLIM LEAGUE

Karachi DAWN in English 20 Oct 82 p 4

[Text] SIALKOT, Oct 19: Pakistan Muslim League (Defunct) Chief, Pir of Pagara, emphatically asserted here that all the genuine political parties worth the name would ultimately merge in Pakistan Muslim League as it was the real representative body of the people of Pakistan.

Addressing his party workers, he said that it was the Muslim League, which under the inspiring leadership of Quaid-i-Azam M.A. Jinnah snatched Pakistan from the cruel and gruesome clutches of Hindus and the British rulers and it was the Muslim League which now would save the country from the present state of affairs and bring it to the safe and stable shores of democracy.

The present circumstances showed that Gen Zia-ul-Haq was not going to hand over power to the elected representatives of the masses but the masses shall have to create such an atmosphere which would persuade him to relinquish power in favour of the democratic representatives of the people.

He said that his party would attend the round table conference if convened by Maulana Shah Ahmed Noorani for the reason that it was unmannerly to decline an invitation extended sincerely by a party leader stressing the need for the restoration of democratic process in the country. He said that it was since 1958 onward that this process had been denied to the people of Pakistan.

Replying to a question he said that price hike was not a regional problem but it was an international complication which was challenging the economy of the entire world.

In order to harness this problem we should boost production and increase export for earning more and more foreign exchange.

JATOI REITERATES DEMAND FOR ELECTIONS

Karachi DAWN in English 20 Oct 82 p 4

[Text]

MULTAN, Oct 19: A leader of the defunct People's Party and former Chief Minister of Sind, Mr Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi, said that the democratic process is the only guarantee of country's integrity and solidarity.

Addressing a Press Conference here he said that the delay in holding of general elections will help increase the unfavourable and complicated situation in the country.

He said that President General Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq should arrange immediate holding of general elections in the country and get rid of this burden of responsibility on his shoulders.

Replying to a question he said that if needed he is prepared to quit politics for ever provided the holding of general elections is announced. He said that if the present Govt will not hold general elections under the 1973 constitution the integrity of Pakistan will be in danger.

He said that we have repeatedly appealed to President Zia-ul-Haq and once again appeal to him to hand over power to the people's elected representatives keeping in view the critical situation in the country in larger interest of Pakistan.

Replying to a question he said that he has no connection with the present Government. He said that he is an ordinary member of the party and cannot take any step without its permission. He said that the people are fed up of the politics of drawing room of the MRD. His party will participate in the round table conference for holding of general elections under the 1973 constitution.

UNITED KINGDOM LARGEST INVESTOR IN PAKISTAN

Karachi DAWN in English 20 Oct 82 p 10

[Text]

Mr. Peter John Streams, the British Consul General in Karachi, said yesterday that Britain was still the largest single investor in Pakistan.

Speaking at a tea-meeting of the Rotary Club (Karachi East) at Beach Luxury Hotel, he said: "Britain takes a close interest in the development of Pakistan." He said that in recent years "the value of our support for that development has been around £20 million or Rs 400 million." In 1979 Britain waived all repayment and interest of official aid to Pakistan up to then — perhaps about Rs 1,500 million.

Mr Streams said that since then this official support had been on an outright grant basis.

Port Qasim, WAPDA (for salinity control) mineral development, sugar mill, land-levelling in Sind, fertilisers, essential replacements for KESC, irrigation and electrification in Baluchistan are among the projects which are being financed through counterpart funds, he said.

Mr Streams said that in 1980 and 1981 Pakistan's exports to Britain were about £60 million, while its imports from Britain were worth £140 million. "This year's figures on both counts are running well ahead of these: Pakistan has already exported more to Britain in the first eight months of this year than in the whole of 1981.

"One feature of the relationship with our two countries is the number of people who visit in either direction," he said.

There are perhaps 300 people of Pakistani origin now living in Britian out of a total of two million.

NATIONAL INCOME: OFFICIAL FIGURES DEBATED

Karachi DAWN in English 21 Oct 82 p 7

[Article by Sultan Ahmed]

[Text] DEVELOPING countries which concentrated on economic growth oblivious of distributive justice have come to grief. If that happened in Pakistan after the much touted Decade of Development of the 1960s when we lost East Pakistan, Iran was overwhelmed by a revolution after the economic leap it took in the 1970s.

Developing countries hence cannot opt for growth with all the sacrifices it entails for the poor masses by way of heavy taxation at the one end and high prices at the other, heedless of how the fruits of development are distributed. Such major convulsions can be calamitous for young states trying to find their feet politically as well as economically.

Dr. Mahbubul Haq, Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, hence says that as in other countries the pendulum in Pakistan has swung violently from growth to distribution and back again at different stages of its development. And he rightly asserts that Pakistan cannot afford the luxury of concentrating on growth in one decade in the hope of distributing its fruits in the next decade.

But Dr. Haq is not overemphasizing social justice at the cost of growth. He says the sixth Five-Year Plan must combine "a strong production base with a strong social conscience." He is not talking directly of distributive justice or social egalitarianism but of social conscience. The agents of production, captains of industry, big businessmen and zamindars have to feel within themselves the need to make the fruits of development available to those who participate in it and the people as a whole, and not be "hijacked by a privileged few," as he puts it. And he wants the benefits of development available not only to the urban millions but also the rural masses who form 70 per cent of Pakistan.

Modest increase

Such conscience is not common in a society where capital receives undue importance and excessive rewards, and where some ultra-rich entrepreneurs oppose even the principle of sharing the industrial profits fairly with the small investors, and conduct a veritable verbal crusade against it.

Dr. Haq does not want to impose or prescribe a pattern of distributive justice of his own. Instead, he seeks a national debate, a debate in which not only the experts and technocrats and bureaucrats will participate but also the masses as a whole. And while he and his experts try to set the targets for the sixth plan — 1983-88 — he suggests that the first round of the debate should concern itself with an Incomes Policy. This undoubtedly is essential to promote growth without setback and convulsions, without violent upheavals and bloody revolutions.

But while Dr. Haq's phraseology may be unnerving to the leaders of industry and trade, the immediate improvement in incomes that he seeks is not ambitious but modest. Per capita income in Pakistan in 1981-82 was Rs.3,706, or Rs.18,530 for a family of five. He assumes that by the end of this financial year it would rise to Rs.4,000 per head or Rs.20,000 per family per year. And he wants the sixth Five-Year Plan to increase the income of each family by Rs.800/- per year or by Rs.4,000 within the plan period. That means an increase of 20 per cent in the family income in the five-year period, or a rise in per capita income from Rs.4,000 per year, when the plan begins, to Rs.4,800 as it ends. Nobody can contend that this is by any means a very large increase.

He has set a target of 6.5 per cent growth in Gross Domestic Product for the Sixth Plan which is marginally better than the growth rate for the last five years. But if an increase in per capita income of four per cent per year is to be achieved during the plan period the population growth rate has to go down from 2.9 per cent to 2.5 per year. Will that happen when the population planning drive is a very low key one for fear of rousing the mullahs? Checking the population growth is an area which should receive far more practical attention than given hitherto. An excess of gradualism in this regard can be counter-productive or self-defeating.

Real & cash income

When Dr. Haq talks of an increase in per capita income of Rs.800 during the plan period or of Rs.4,000 per family, does he mean it at constant prices or current prices? It cannot be at current prices as per capita income at current prices has shot up by Rs.1.784 during the last five years — from Rs.1,922 in 1976-77 to Rs.3,706 in 1981-82 — while at the constant prices of 1959-60 the increase during the Five-Year period was only Rs.116 — from Rs.586 in 1976-77 to Rs.702 last year. The difference between the real income and the mere cash income in the period was Rs.5. This figure gives away the extent of inflation in our midst — grossly understated official figures.

When Dr. Haq talks of an Incomes Policy the base has to be current prices as per capita income at constant prices in Pakistan has doubled this year after 32 years — from 351 in 1949-50 to Rs.702 in 1981-82 while at current prices it has increased ten times within 22 years. So the real improvement in per capita income in Pakistan has been a slow process — by 3.12 per cent per year. What the plan seeks is to raise this figure to four per cent per year, or 20 per cent for the whole plan period.

The need for an increase in real income instead of the mere cash income has driven him to plead for the indexation of the incomes of the fixed income groups, "particularly the urban middle class which is badly squeezed by inflation." Along with that he has urged social safety nets for the poorest and the indigent. And they are to be accompanied by regular monitoring of income distribution in the country, between various income groups, between rural and urban areas so as to make timely corrections through fiscal policy and other means. These are far-reaching proposals compared to the neglect the fixed income group now suffers and the heavy tax burden on it.

The growth rate of 6.5 per cent that he seeks in the plan period may not seem far higher than what had been obtained during the last five years; but what has been achieved, particularly in the agricultural sector, has been the outcome of sustained excellent weather all through and the rising home remittances which directly and indirectly, have exceeded 3,000 million dollars. Such favourable conditions have to continue if the new plan targets are to be achieved. Whether they will, is hard to predict.

An incomes policy that ensures fair distribution of the fruits of development and protects the fixed income groups and the poor, would demand major changes in the fiscal and monetary policies. Such a policy should ensure real higher income and reduced expenditure which would leave behind larger savings. Dr. Haq protests that 88 per cent of the national income is spent on consumption unlike 67 per cent in other countries. When the income is low and prices are high, and the living style, as projected by a feudal culture, is high, what else can be the outcome? Added to that is the large population as well as a high population growth that increases the claims on the small cake enormously.

A sound incomes policy has to be based on reasonable profit instead of the high profits charged in Pakistan by the producers, businessmen and retailers, and in the agricultural sector by the middlemen. And reasonable prices have to go hand in hand with low taxes. Dr. Haq says that taxation in Pakistan is not heavy but there is uneven taxation which would have to be rationalised. How he proposes to do that in a country where taxes have only increased and multiplied remains to be seen?

The outlay on the sixth plan would be larger by two-and-half times over the current plan, he says. And the bulk of the resources are to come from within the country. That implies heavier taxation unless the private sector readily agrees to play a far larger role, which is not very likely.

Wrong approach

Real income can increase if the government reduces the rates for its services, like telephones and provides utility services like gas and electricity at fair rates. The approach that makes the government to charge Rs.600 for an urgent passport or make anyone leaving Pakistan by air pay Rs.100 has to give way to a more sensible one.

Income does not mean cash alone. The kind of educational and health facilities provided by the government or through communal efforts, and the cost of transportation are equally important. A good deal of the income in the cities and towns goes out as rent. And rent has been soaring. It has to when cement and wood prices are high, and about 60 per cent of the money spent on house-building goes to the government as taxes. The government has to take positive measures to reduce the cost of house building.

A well fed, educated and healthy citizen is a more productive worker than a sick and illiterate one. And it is not the concept of a welfare state or socialism alone that demand fair treatment to the workers but also the Islamic concept of Insaf and Adal. But a major change in this regard can come only if the financial policy-makers and owning classes change their outlook. If they do not change now, they will be forced to do that soon.

SIND ALLOWS PRIVATE COLLEGES--The Sind Education Department has decided not to object to the opening of colleges in the private sector, it was learnt. According to sources, "verbal permission" to this effect has been given to about a dozen educational societies. The permission is being granted provided the educational societies extend assurances to the effect that the teachers will be given the same salaries and terms of condition of service as those in the Government colleges, sources said. The societies which sought permission for opening colleges include Osmania Education Society for a college in Orangi; Toor Education Society for a college in Shah Faisal Colony; New Metropolitan Education Society for a girls college in North Nazimabad and Karachi Education Society for a girls commerce college in PECHS. According to an estimate, about 9,500 students of the city who have passed their matriculation examination this year will not be able to get admissions in the first year classes because of the shortage of colleges in the city. PAGARA AND QAYYUM LEAGUES--The question of meeting defunct Muslim League (Qayyum Group) with the defunct Muslim League (Pagara Group) does not arise. This was stated by Senior Vice-President defunct Muslim League (Qayyum Group), Khan Amanullah Khan and Vice-President, Miskeen Khan, on their arrival at Karachi on Friday from Peshawar after participation in the death anniversary of Khan Abdul Qayyum Khan. They said that the workers who had joined Pagaro Group have been debarred from the League and they have no link with them now. They further said that Qayyum Group of the defunct Muslim League will face the persons who are working against Pakistan. They said that defunct Muslim League (Qayyum Group) is a legacy of Khan Abdul Qayyum Khan, who was a patriot and they will follow him up. Referring the position of League in NWFP they said that the workers of the League are united in the province and working for the solidarity of Pakistan.--PPI [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 30 Oct 82 p 9]

KARACHI'S PER CAPITA WATER CONSUMPTION--The per capita water availability in Karachi is only 36 gallons as against the moderate scale of 50 gallons daily in developing countries. According to KMC's chief engineer the per capita water availability in Karachi after partition was 26 gallons. However, according to Director General KDA the per capita water availability of 36 gallons in Karachi also includes the supply for industrial use and hence the per capita supply of drinking water was only 22 gallons. According to D-G KDA per capita supply of drinking water in other developing countries was not less than 40 gallons daily and to reach this standard a number of new schemes will have to be launched. He opined that to meet the requirements of increasing population of the city an additional 10 million gallons water would be required every year.--APP [Text] [Karachi MORNING NEWS in English 30 Oct 82 p 3]

PNG EXAMINES SOVIET OFFER OF CLOSER TIES

Melbourne THE AGE in English 30 Sep 82 p 8

[Text]

PORT MORESBY, 29 Sept. — The Government of Papua New Guinea was considering a Soviet request for closer diplomatic ties, the Foreign Affairs and Trade Minister, Mr Rabbie Namaliu, told Parliament last night.

"We are considering a request from the Government of the Soviet Union to allow it to make relations with us more effective," he said.

"I am conscious of the advantages which might follow from increasing direct contact with one of the most powerful Governments in the world and of issues, including the invasion of Afghanistan, which divide us.

"I have therefore instructed my department to prepare a set of options for me to put before the Government."

Papua New Guinea established full diplomatic relations with China more than two years ago.

Diplomatic links with the USSR are maintained through the Soviet Embassy in Canberra.

Apart from the Afghanistan issue, PNG has traditionally been wary of the Soviet Union — a view which perhaps stems from the Australian administration before independence in 1976.

Mr Namaliu's statement clarified the new Government's attitude to the 1981 White Paper delivered by the previous Government's Foreign Affairs and Trade Minister, Mr Noel Levi.

Mr Namaliu said he supported the broad direction of the old Government's foreign policy.

OMBUDSMAN ASSAILS CORRUPTION

Perth THE WEST AUSTRALIAN in English 30 Sep 82 p 45

[Text]

PORT MORESBY, Wed: Papua New Guinea's main watchdog body, the Ombudsman Commission, has asked the Government to either amend laws which allow corrupt leadership, or close the commission.

In an embittered and sometimes poetic annual report to Parliament, the three ombudsman commissioners say: "We do not wish to witness your sins while standing by helpless, able to do nothing but cry in the wilderness.

"Nor will we stay in office merely to preside over the daily erosion of the noble ideals upon which this nation was founded while painfully watching the death of their vision for a just society.

"We can only say to the leaders that if executive jets and fancy executive diaries and improvements to ministerial houses are more important than the courts, the prosecutor, the public solicitor and the Ombudsman Commission—and if corruption in government is the desired 'way of life' so that the educated elite can become richer while the ordinary people become poorer—then abolish this commission."

The commission's report was prepared prior to an announcement two days ago by the Prime Minister, Mr Somare, that the ombudsman was to get "more teeth" to deal with Leadership Code breaches.

PNG URGED TO SEEK TALKS ON IRIAN JAYA

Sydney THE SYDNEY MORNING HERALD in English 30 Sep 82 p 11

[Text]

PORT MORESBY, Wednesday. — Vanuatu's Prime Minister, Father Walter Lini, has urged the Papua New Guinea Government to seek serious talks with Indonesia for a long-term solution of the "West Papua-West Irian" problem — the people of Irian Jaya incorporated into Indonesia in 1969.

Fr Lkni said yesterday that he believed Indonesia and Papua New Guinea's common-boredrr problem with separatist guerillas, known as Operas: Merdeka Papua, would worsen unless both countries sought a peaceful solution.

Father Lini reaffirmed VanuatuS support for "West Irain," New Caledonian and Micronesian self-determination, but he also confimed repots that Vanuatu would not accept any political rf-refugees from these or other regions of the world.

Father Lini flew home this evening after attending an Anglican Church convention at Popondetta, PNG.

At a Port Moresby press conference during his brief stoopover, the Catholic priest and Prime Minister said: "It is important for the decolonisation process to take place in peace."

"In most instances, the colonisers are reluctant to give independence and Vanuatu, for its part, would like to contribute in assisting colonisers in the process of decolonisation," he said.

In the casex of Irian Jaya, he said, it was "important to recognise that these people have been refused the right to self-determination."

"While there are signs that they are dissatisfied with their status, we in the independent Pacific States have to listen more and help organisations like the United Nations and the South Pacific Forum understand their problem."

Father Lini admitted that PNG was in a difficult distuation, since the United Nations and some neighbouring States recognised the "act of free choice" that preceded Irian Jaya's official incorporation into Indonesia in 1969.

"PNG would be really isolated if it begins to say that it disagrees with the United Nations-sponsored status given to West Irian," he said.

"We would very much hope that PNG and Indonesia would sit down together and discuss this matter more seriously so that the question can be resolved," Father Lini said.

"It is important that this is done before things start happening . . . before an issue forces them to act."

Asked what he saw as a long-term settlement, Father Lini said:

"I can say nothing specific. Perhaps the West Irianese hope that they become part of Papua New Guinea. One could also assume they might want to be independent and not part of either Indonesia or PNG.

SUSPICIONS OF INDONESIA EXAMINED

Sydney THE SYDNEY MORNING HERALD in English 1 Oct 82 p 6

[Article by Peter Hastings]

[Text]

LAST week OPM (Free Papua Movement) rebel leader and one-time Indonesian Army officer, self-styled General Seth Rumkorem, and nine of his Irianese followers, made a 1,300 km trip along Papua New Guinea's north coast from the Indonesian border to Rabaul.

Rumkorem was heading for Vanuatu to claim political asylum and was arrested when he came ashore at Rabaul to buy water, fuel and supplies. A PNG magistrate released him on the curious grounds that he was "invited" ashore by PNG police. The Government regards him as an illegal migrant — he has no passport, no visa, no document of identity — and is appealing the magistrate's decision.

It is also looking for a third country of asylum. Sweden which granted asylum to another OPM leader, Jakob Prai, is reportedly not keen to take Rumkorem nor his colleagues.

Nor is Vanuatu, whose Prime Minister, Father Walter Lini, has already granted one OPM leader political asylum and furnished him an office in Port Vila.

But while cautious on the issue of granting Rumkorem and his followers asylum — 10 look too much like a government in exile — he has paradoxically urged PNG to bring pressure on Indonesia to grant the Irianese an act of self-determination.

The very notion evidences Father Lini's political naivete but it also symbolises the growing mistrust of Indonesia throughout the Melanesian world.

While most of it is misplaced, and based on considerable ignorance of Indonesian interests and motives, it is none the less real. It has not been assuaged in recent years by reports of unauthorised Indonesian military patrols crossing into PNG, either in hot pursuit of OPM rebels, or by accident. Nor has it been reduced by Indonesia's incorporation of East Timor, simplistically viewed by most Melanesians from Port Moresby to Suva as a straight, imperialist grab with no extenuating circumstances.

Vanuatu is the only Melanesian State to vote against Indonesia on the Timor issue. The others like PNG vote for Indonesia or, like the Solomons, abstain. Timor is in fact central to Melanesian fears, more emotive than rational, of Indonesian expansionism.

But if these fears are absurdly misplaced, there is substance of sorts to the growing perceptions of the South Pacific mini-States that Asia begins to encroach on them in the form of Indonesian people and power spilling inexorably eastward through the Malay archipelago.

Historically, those who ruled Indonesia were more concerned to guard the great Javanese heartland than with extending the far reaches of empire, especially the islands stretching east from Timor to the Bird's Head of New Guinea.

With modern communications — Jayapura is a day's jet flight from Jakarta, about the same distance as Sydney to Perth — the demands of security and development and the inevitable eastwards movement of the Malay peoples, all this is changing.

Papua New Guineans have yet to come to grips with the frequently unpleasant realities of Indonesian sovereignty in Irian Jaya, the Republic's seventeenth province. They have yet to perceive how deeply the province impinges on Indonesian nationalist values after a 14 year struggle, more political than anything else, to regain the last piece of territory to which the Republic as successor State to the entire Netherlands East Indies laid claim.

Most Papua New Guineans have been equally unwilling to come to grips with the problems that faced Indonesia after Portugal's complete abdication of its responsibility for its former colony in August 1975. Or to understand the intensity of Indonesian fears, genuine if unreal in many respects, that a Fretilin-governed East Timor could only serve as a rallying point for eastern Indonesia's flickering secessionist movements or, worse, as a sanctuary for former PKI members, from which to conduct subversion against the Republic.

Conditioned by a generation of Australian-inspired anti-Indonesian propaganda, PNG's elites — politicians, bureaucrats, students, police and defence force personnel — have increasingly come to believe that Timor was simply a precursor for future Indonesian annexation of PNG. Invasion is a word that has been thrown around by some in PNG's defence forces, for example, with reckless disregard for commonsense or reason.

Indonesia's invasion of PNG is only plausible under vastly different regional conditions from today or those likely to obtain in the future. Indonesia has enough problems without adding PNG to them. Why would Indonesia attack PNG which is not a colonial remnant like East Timor but a sovereign nation, a member State of the UN, the Commonwealth and South Pacific Forum?

In fact Indonesia has a vested interest in a strong, united Papua New Guinea. It does not want weak States on its borders. But it also wants PNG to understand it has nation-building problems in Timor and Irian Jaya, just as PNG has them in Bougainville and a half dozen other provinces.

However, it will prove suspicious and hostile over any issue which affects its sovereignty in Irian Jaya.

Evidence of widespread PNG sympathy for the Melanesians in Irian Jaya and attempts to rabble-rouse on the issue of Melanesian brotherhood by politicians like the former Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Iambakey Okuk, quickly arouse those suspicions.

There is little doubt that in the past two years the number of Indonesian border incursions have increased. The frequent official Indonesian excuse of lost compass bearings — even though the country is wild — lack conviction.

As much as anything they have been in response to the failure of PNG patrols to prevent OPM border crossings or, where they have occurred, to locate the guerillas, very few in numbers, and return them. The worst incident occurred this year when, it is clear, that OPM elements held Indonesian citizens hostage on the PNG side of the border for some months without PNG doing anything to clear up the situation.

Indonesia in fact regards PNG's apparent incapacity, or unwillingness, to mount proper border patrols as a breach of Article 8 of the Border Agreement which enjoins each country to refrain from hostile actions against the other by allowing political activity in the border region.

There is substance to the accusation but it takes little account of the expense for a small country in mounting border patrols — PNG has in fact just conducted one — or of the problems Port Moresby's Government faces in handling a highly volatile electorate on a highly sensitive issue. It has to move with caution where the feelings of Papuan New Guineans for fellow Melanesians in Irian Jaya are concerned.

But the real rub for PNG in its future relations with Indonesia — and for other Melanesian States — will come with the increasing "Javanisation" of Irian Jaya.

There is no doubt that the Indonesian Government is well down the track with plans for Javanising its border areas in Kalimantan (Borneo) and Irian Jaya through resettling poor, landless Javanese peasants. There are two aims — to relieve population pressure in Java and to create a cordon sanitaire against dissidents in both places.

Precise figures are hard to get for Irian Jaya. According to Jakarta sources, there may be about 300,000 non-Irianese settlers in Irian Jaya. The majority are Buginese and other ethnic entrepreneurial types who have settled in and around the main centres.

About 8,000 Javanese families, perhaps 35,000 to 40,000 people, have taken land to farm. Indonesia's Government hopes to settle about one million Javanese in Irian Jaya by the end of the decade. Many thousands will be settled along the PNG border in an effort to create a network of roads, farms and settlers which will contain OPM dissidents and non-traditional border-crossers.

From the Indonesian point of view the policy makes sense. Clearly Jakarta hopes that as the years go by the Melanesians of PNG, and other mini-States, will look west and see in Irian Jaya not Melanesians like themselves but the usual Indonesian ethnic mixture common to other parts of the archipelago.

It is a sound policy. But it must involve the rapid destruction of Irian Jaya's Melanesian culture. The end of the journey will come when Irian Jaya's 1.2 million Melanesians regard themselves as Indonesians, speak Indonesian as a first language, share Indonesian cultural values and uphold Indonesian political institutions.

But the middle of the journey over the next decade will prove extremely difficult, placing enormous demands not only on the capacity of the Irianese to assimilate rapidly into a ruthlessly competitive, more skilled Asian culture but on the capacity also of successive PNG Governments to control the responses of its Melanesian citizens.

PNG CRIME WAVE REPORTED--Port Moresby (AAP)--The Royal Papua New Guinea Constabulary has warned the Government that "lawlessness and corruption will continue to increase" unless police funding is boosted. In the constabulary's annual report for 1981 tabled in Parliament, Police Commissioner Henry Tokam said the decline in interest in law and order at government level "is exemplified in the amount of funds made available for development." During the year the Police Mobile Force--which comprised 483 men in 16 riot squads--dealt with 160 major incidents which included 96 tribal fights. "The mobile force attended all incidents which involved some 107,746 people, and 1045 arrests were made," he said. "As a result of tribal fighting there were 55 deaths and 319 injuries reported, while 786 houses, 28,877 coffee trees and 292 food gardens were destroyed--as well as 74 cows and three pigs." The annual report noted that no police recruits were inducted after July 1981 "due to severe financial restrictions." In the National Capital District (Port Moresby and environs) there was an escalation in urban crime. [Text] [Brisbane THE COURIER-MAIL in English 6 Oct 82 p 9]

OFFICIAL LIES, ARBITRARY POLICE ACTS DEPLORED

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 22 Oct 82 pp 4, 14

[Article by David Ompoc]

[Text] Columnist Note: (This column took a short vacation for reasons of pressing legal duties. Preparing answers and memorandum on important court cases is a taxing job that somehow had prevented this columnist from performing his usual obligations to his avid fans.)

Silent Rage

Untruthful statements from public officials have become a fad these days. They are no longer ashamed or afraid to tell lies about abundance and luxury allegedly prevailing in the country as if the people listening to them are all dumb fools. Take for instance the statement attributed to President Marcos which claimed that our bootblacks can go to any bank and get a loan with out collateral. We all know that this is not true but the President has made this assertion with loud bravado attendant to all congenital lies.

Deliberate and malicious falsehood do not serve any useful purpose except to incur the silent rage of the populace. Pious protestations that there is no massive graft and corruption, no violation of human rights, no mass poverty among our people, etcetera cannot make us less knowledgeable of what is actually happening in our midst. The great American patriot, Abraham Lincoln once declared: "You can fool some of the people all the time but you cannot fool all the people all the time." I believe the politicians of our time will have to take moral lessons from this message in order to save the country from perdition.

What is tragic and disturbing is that no less than the Chief of State is the one setting a precedent of purveying canard in his desire to give a beautiful scenery of the nation. There is no doubt that subordinate government functionaries will follow suit. The supreme leader has said this and that so all his lapdogs and robots down below cannot say otherwise.

PC-INP authorities have defended its policy of putting up mobile checkpoints under the guise of ferreting criminals. Lawabiding citizens to not interpose objection to this laudable objective. We want the criminals to stay where they ought to be. But does the end justify the means? Is there no way of fighting criminality without violating human rights and the Constitution?

The PC-INP want our vehicles to be searched without judicial warrant by invoking Gen. Order No. 66. All along we are made to swallow the idea that Martial Rule has been lifted so that all general orders of the Commander-in-Chief had been rescinded and rendered ineffective. It appears that the military have not been able to shake off its Martial Law mentality. They still want to cling to the absolute powers of a despot who makes searches and seizures according to his whims and caprices. If the citizens permit this type of searches without a howl of protest, the next logical thing to happen is that our homes will be invaded and searched by so-called minions of the law under all kinds of pretenses. This column must have to tell the truth for the benefit of Brig. General Olano and Metrodiscom Boss, Col. Zosimo Angan that this policy of mobile checkpoints is definitely fomenting silent rage among all lovers of civil liberties.

MAYORS MAY BE ALLOWED TO CARRY GUNS

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 21 Oct 82 pp 1, 14

[Text] A dozen town Mayors from Cebu Province are reportedly asking the Cebu Provincial Command authority to carry firearms. This was revealed in a news report monitored over DYBU which quoted Cebu Provincial Commander Lt. Col Leandro Mendoza as saying that he had already forwarded their requests to the Ministry of National Defense for appropriate action.

Col. Mendoza also revealed some of the towns whose mayors have made the requests to carry and/or possess firearms. He said they are Asturias, Tuburan, Balamban, Pilar, Pinamungahan, Danao and five others.

Lt. Gen. Fidel Ramos, PC Chief was earlier quoted by Cebu newsmen during his brief stopover here over the weekend, that town mayors and government officials may be granted permits for the carrying of firearms on a case to case basis. According to the PC brass, the categories for town mayors or government officials who would be granted authority to carry firearms include: those in areas with NPA or Muslim terrorist threats or those from a widespread criminal syndicate are present; or whenever the town is inaccessible; when there is no stable military or police unit, provided that the official himself is reliable.

Ramos also said that a favorable recommendation to this effect from the provincial commanders is necessary before they would be acted upon by his office.

MARCOS CHALLENGED ON ELECTION PREREQUISITES

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 21 Oct 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] MISAMIS OR--Gov. Homobono Adaza, president of the opposition Mindanao Alliance, has reacted to the statement of Pres. Marcos about the lack of an opponent if the presidential election were held in 1984.

Adaza said that an opponent to Pres. Marcos is nothing to be worried about because the people of this country will be able to put up one for as long as Marcos can assure our people that the elections will be fair, honest, clean and orderly.

The Mindanao opposition leader has set nine (9) conditions to be met by Pres. Marcos if he wants an opponent. They are:

*Declare a general amnesty for all political prisoners;

*Legalize the Communist Party, the Moro National Liberation Front, the Socdem parties and declare general amnesty for all their members;

*Free all political prisoners and detainees;

*Reconstitute the membership of the Commission on Elections by appointing members from the existing opposition parties; the legalized CPP, MNLF and Socdems; and impartial individuals with proven integrity;

*Provide unrestricted use of the mass media and the political platforms for the opposition, assuring the opposition of equal opportunity;

*Allow the opposition to campaign freely without being harassed, threatened, molested and intimidated;

*Throw away the old registry list of voters and start with registration of qualified voters only;

*Insure free, honest and orderly voting, canvassing and proclamation;

*Step down and abide by the verdict of the people should he lose the elections.

Unless these conditions are satisfied, Marcos will certainly run alone and repeat the joke that was the 1981 presidential elections," Adaza concluded.

CARDINAL SIN SUGGESTED FOR ELECTION COMMITTEE

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 19 Oct 82 pp 1, 2

[Article by Al Alinsug]

[Text] Assemblyman Reuben R Ca noy, a leading member of the Opposition in Mindanao, has called on President Marcos to make the coming electoral process honest, clean and orderly.

Speaking through a spokesman, Canoy has outlined a six-point demand to achieve clean elections. They are:

*Put Cardinal Sin in the Co melec.

*Purge the voter's list of all flying voters and instant registrants.

*Disallow instant registration;

*Make the composition of electoral boards of one school teacher as chairman, one each from the majority party and the minority party;

*Encourage the formation of citizens' quick count;

*Provide equal time and space in media coverage;

At the same time, Canoy has called on all those who do not see eye-to-eye with the regime of President Marcos to unite for the greater interest of the country.

The spokesman also revealed Canoy's plans for the presidency of the Republic saying that the Mindanao stalwart will fight the President in a fair election.

"That is if no one in the UNIDO or other opposition groups will make himself available to be candidate,' the spokesman said.

Asked on the assumption that if Laurel, or some other opposition presidential timber will fight Marcos, the spokesman said Canoy will be content to support him. Canoy will support whoever will be the opposition standard bearer, as all the rest of the opposition should do, he said.

There is no more time for wrangling. All opposition groups and individuals should stand against a common adversary in the coming presidential battle, the spokesman stressed.

COLUMNIST SEES MARCOS MAKING NO CONCESSIONS

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 18 Oct 82 p 4

[Article by Al Alinsug]

[Text] It is unusually good of President Marcos to accede to shorten his term from six to four years in order to synchronize the elections and, as reported, in accordance with the wishes of the Opposition. To add to this unusual goodness, he has advised the Opposition to get together and present a solid front. The impression the President creates is that he belittles the Opposition, and that even if he presents himself to an electoral fight, he will still emerge victorious. Handily, for sure, otherwise he would not have dared the Opposition that he is willing to stake his post.

But judging from past experience, the Opposition is not likely to take this at face value. The President is too astute a politician to be taken seriously by such accommodation. There are many possibilities to explain the motive of the President to accommodate the Opposition.

Not to be discounted is the idea of floating the proposition in order to gauge public reaction to the unusual offer, or shall we call it accommodation? The President gains by this magnanimity. Not only will the people welcome such gesture, but the populace will acclaim him for his self-sacrifice and generosity. People would say it's time President Marcos give the Opposition the chance to prove its real worth. Others would say after all we have a President who is magnanimous and a President who has a big heart, in contrast to the ruthlessness that he has been pictured to be.

Secondly, the announcement can create even more dissension in the Opposition ranks. What should not be discounted is the presence of ambition glowing in the hearts of many of them, despite their capabilities. Who can be Marcos' likely opponent even this early? Some observers say there is no one at the moment who can be a strong con tender to Marcos: he has maimed all of them. Aquino is facing charges, Salonga, Kalaw and others are still under house arrest, Diokno is passe, Laurel lacks the punch with his business interests that forces him to look back. There is Canoy, but he is too small for the President. There is Pelaez, but he belongs to the President's men. Who can fight the President in the Opposition?

If no one can fight President Marcos in a presidential election, it is because Marcos himself has seen to it that no one ever can. He has cut all of them to size. If there is any one, it is Marcos to fight himself. He will have to see to it that his health can endure and outlast his ambition to stay in power. Another that Marcos has to contend with is his age. Actually, the fight for power is only between Marcos and Marcos, or Marcos versus Marcos.

But there is one factor that Marcos can never take for granted: it's the people. If the sovereign people will see to it there is only one way to save the nation from dismemberment as a result of strife and national disaster, then they will vote whoever is Marcos' opponent. If the people will assert their sovereign will, no power on earth can turn back that tide.

SECOND NATIONAL PARTY PLANNED

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 18 Oct 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] ZAMBOANGA CITY, Oct. 17--(PNA)--Misamis Oriental Governor Homobono Adaza is spearheading a move to form a second national opposition party based in Mindanao.

Adaza chairman of the opposition Mindanao Alliance (MA), said he is rallying opposition leaders in Mindanao following a second national opposition party.

In an informal meeting with newsmen at a luncheon Friday at city mayor Cesar Climaco's residence, he said the Concerned Citizen Aggrupation (CCA) and the Mindanao Alliance would be the nucleus of the second national opposition party.

Adaza said there are excellent chances for an opposition party to eventually dislodge the present administration from power through the electoral process.

The Misamis Oriental governor said opposition stalwarts in Mindanao will meet in Zamboanga city sometime in December to finalize plans for future participation in political exercises.

GRAFT, CORRUPTION IN DAUAO DEPLORED

Cebu City VISAYAN HERALD in English 16-17 Oct 82 p 5

[Article by Homobono A. Adaza]

[Text] In Davao, it is a matter of common knowledge that one of the oligarchs of the administration operates a banana plantation that utilizes government equipment and prison labor. While the administration boasts of a land reform program for the poor, it multiplies geometrically the hectares that it gives to its friends. Thousands of hectares for banana and coconut plantations in Davao and Palawan and other areas in the country, for the favored few of the administration.

Dewey Dee, Conrado Pascual, Jr. and others of their kind have run away with the money of the people almost indiscriminately. If a clerk absconds with more than two hundred pesos, he ends up in the Sandigan Bayan and a few years in jail. Those who traffic with the people's money in terms of millions are either vacationing in the watering places of the world or living luxuriously in the plushy subdivisions of Metro Manila.

Graft and corruption in government has reached epidemic proportions. Even some of the holier than thou executives of the opposition in Mindanao have been tainted with the national malaise of graft and corruption to the point of being charged with receiving a Betamax set to using government money in the repair of residential bedrooms in the Tanodbayan.

The rise and fall of governments in many parts of the world have been successfully credited to graft and corruption. In Latin America, Battista of Cuba and Somoza of Nicaragua fell because of graft and corruption. In Asia, Chiang Kai Sek of China, Sygman Rhee of Korea Lon Nol and Sihanouk of Cambodia, Diem and Van Thieu of South Vietnam, Sukarno of Indonesia fell for the same reason. It is a classic of contemporary political development that a corrupt gov't. unless it reverses itself on time, will inevitably be crushed by the people.

Fereydoun Hoveyda in his book, "The Fall of the Shah", describes the extent of corruption that led to the Fall of the Shah of Iran in these terms--

"Corruption ran wild at the heart of the royal family. The Shah's brothers and sisters earned exorbitant commissions on contracts by acting as go-betweens, usually through companies in which they were the majority shareholders.

for the moment it suffices to say that the example of the royal family was a source of contamination which infected every level of society. Collosal fortunes were made in the time it takes to sign a contract. The scandals multiplied remorselessly."

Does this not sound familiar, even if one were to view the present Philippine situation in a very cursory manner? Change "shah" to "president" and you have substituted the Philippines for Iran.

AQUINO, CEBU REBELS LINKED--A link between former Senator Benigno Aquino, Jr and slain Cebu rebel leader Regino Laurente was revealed yesterday during the hearing of rebellion charges against some 42 suspected rebels who were rounded up in the hinterland barangays of Asturias, Balamban and Tuburan towns a few months ago. A government witness, one of the Quimbo brothers, said that Regino Laurente personally told him that "Aquino would supply them with firearms when he arrives." Asked if the rebel chief was referring to former Senator Benigno Aquino, Jr. the witness replied he does not know. He also reportedly said in open court that he did not know the date of Aquino's arrival. Earlier, Quimbo told the court that he was a member of the band of Laurente but bolted the same after his friend was allegedly killed by the group without justifiable reasons. He also told the court that the group had successfully recruited at least five barangay captains and some 20 tanods from the mountain barangays of Asturias and Danao City. In yesterday's hearing before CFI Vice Executive Judge Alfredo Marigomen, the witness also reportedly said that a certain Timoteo, who is well-off in the area allegedly supplied the group with 12 sets of fatigue uniforms. SAMAR, LEYTE DISSIDENTS SUBDUED--TACLOBAN CITY, Oct. 21--(PNA)--Officials of Leyte and Samar have reported to President Marcos here that dissidents in their areas have been put under control with the rapid development of the region. With the opening of roads and highways, electrification of barangays and the spread of the livelihood program, the New People's Army's activities have dwindled to few isolated incidents, Leyte and Samar officials said. Deputy Prime Minister Jose Rono informed the President during the meeting at the people's center in Tacloban, that the people of the region have realized that the government is sincere in pursuing the development of the region. The government, Rono said, has poured in almost one billion pesos for the development of Samar alone. The province was once the hotbed of subversion. The President reiterated to the governors and mayors of the region that the government would continue to emphasize socio-economic development in coping with subversion. ATHIT, OTHER STRONGMEN'S PATHS TO CINC COMPARED

["In the Nation" column by "Ordinary Reporter": "General Athit Kamlangek, Fixed Star or Satellite Star?"]

[Text] Dr Chai-anan Samuthawanit, a political scientist interested in the role of the military in politics, exploded a bomb by saying that the political status of General Athit Kamlangek, who will become army commander-in-chief, is not strong enough, and there may be a secret coup.

The bomb resulted in General Athit Kamlangek's angry response that, how could a scholar know more about military than the military?

Major General Phat Urailoet, who will assume General Athit Kamlangek's position of commander of the first army region, guaranteed that General Athit Kamlangek's status in the military is firmer than rock!

Is General Athit's position really firm? This is the question that many people and General Athit himself would like to answer.

Athit's path compared with Sarit

In addition to the ties between Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat and General Athit Kamlangek when Athit was a "captain" in the military, Captain Athit Kamlangek played an important role by joining with Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat.

At the time, students and citizens were not content with Field Marshal P. Phibunsongkhram, who carried out unfair elections in an underhanded way, and started a protest movement.

Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat, as army commander-in-chief, was in the position of protecting the capital.

Captain Athit Kamlangek was assigned to quell the students and citizens. at the time Captain Athit firmly adhered to the principle that "the military is not to harm the people" of Field Marshal Sarit.

He was praised in the newspapaers for being "a heroic Indra."

This relationship put Sarit in the position to be a strong army commander-in-chief, enabling him to solve problems. Later General Athit was compared to him and called "little Sarit."

The Path to Power of Field Marshal Sarit

Joining the coup of 8 November, 1947 made Colonel Sarit Thanarat a prominent member of the young generation in the military because he and his friend Lt Colonel Thanom Kittikhachon from Ch.P.R. Officers Academy actually had all the power in their hands.

All the other officers were outside the government!

After the coup of 1947, Colonel Sarit became chief of division one and was promoted to Major General. Lt Colonel Thanom became commander of Infantry Regiment 11 to Protect the King and was promoted to Colonel.

Later there was a revolt of chiefs of staff and a palace revolt. Major General Sarit and Colonel Thanom were an important force in putting them down. Major General Sarit became Lt General and commander of army region one. Colonel Thanom became Major General Thanom and chief of division one.

Colonel Praphat Charusathian became commander of Infantry Regiment 1 to Protect the King, the original position of Lt Colonel Sarit before the coup.

In 1952, Lt General Sarit became General Sarit and had the post of deputy commander-in-chief of the army. Major General Thanom became Lt General Thanom and commander of army region one; and Major General Praphat Charusathian assumed the post of chief of division one.

In 1954 General Sarit became commander-in-chief of the army. Then, in 1957, General Thanom became deputy commander-in-chief of the army. Lt General Praphet Charusathian then became commander of army region one.

Major General Krit Siwara became chief of Division 1 to Protect the King!

14 October, 1973 destroys this path

The custom in the army that laid the path for Field Marshal Sarit continued with Major General Krit and then Major General Kriangkrai Atthanan, and Major General Prasoet Thamsiri and Major General Yot Thephatsadin of Ayutthaya, for example.

But the events of 14 October, 1973 destroyed this sequence on one level.

At the least, the fact that General Krit Siwara as commander-in-chief of the army was the one to ask Field Marshals Thanom and Praphat to leave the country was in a way staging a silent coup. That brought about discontent among the bloodlines of the two field marshals.

Power within the armed forces was re-arranged.

The last examples of laying a path to power like that of Field Marshal Sarit are the paths of General Amnat Damrikan and General Thep Kranloet.

After General Amnat passed away and General Thep was moved into the deputy's office of the Ministry of Defense within the army, there was a new kind of procession to power in the designation of a man by the name of Prem Tinsulanon from the military in the countryside.

Compare Athit and Sarit--wrong!

Some people have tried to compare the path of accession to power from army commander-in-chief of Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat with General Athit Kamlangek.

The conclusion of Dr Chain-anan Samuthuanit is that if we compare the paths to power, the basis of General Athit's military power is certainly much weaker than that of Field Marshal Sarit.

He is an officer from the countryside who came to be in army region one on his own.

Although he was previously chief of Division 1 to Protect the King, for one year, that was a very short period.

In any case, the role and power of General Athit probably cannot be discussed thoroughly apart from the position of General Prem Thinsulanon. The rise of General Athit couldn't be in the manner of that of Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat if he is to take the announced position alongside General Prem.

This is a point of difference between Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat and General Athit Kamlangek!

Field Marshal Sarit's power has the characteristics of a "fixed star" by itself, but General Athit's is like a "satellite star" that must depend on the light of a "fixed star."

The "fixed star" of General Athit is none other than General Prem.

The road to power of General Athit

General Athit Kamlangek was born in 1925. He was in the fifth class of army officer training. He finished his studies at Ch.P.R. Officers Academy in 1948. An important point in the career of General Athit was his position as commander of Joint Regiment 23 between 1973 and 1977.

In 1978 he became chief of Division 3 and in 1979 chief of Division 1 to Protect the King. In that position between August and September, 1980, he played a great role in the move to extend General Prem's term as army commander-in-chief.

He was transferred that September to become deputy commander of army region two. In April, 1981, the "Young Turks" staged the revolt of 1-3 April. Major Gen. Athit had an important role in putting down the revolt and keeping General Prem in power. Major General Athit became Lt General Athit and immediately was given the position of commander of army division 1.

Major General Suchin Anyakun, commander of division 1, was transferred by Major General Phichit Kunlawanit to another post.

All the Yount Turk officers, who were the students of Ch.P.R. class 7, that held battalion-level posts were removed and replaced mainly with students of class 5.

In 1982 General Athit was named army commander-in-chief!

General Athit's power base

General Athit's accession to military power did not arise out of the aspirations of the students of army training class 5, Ch.P.R., classes 1 and 5.

It is very clear that the positions of army region commander and deputy commander are held solely by students of army training class 5. Even if a member of that class leaves his post, the deputy commander waiting is always a member of class 5.

Certainly this united class, if it were the type of Lt General Yutthasak Khlongtruatrok or General Chamanan Nilawiset, would likely be hung up entirely in army command units or in deputy minister' offices.

In addition to students of military training class 5, a force that is like a base for the new army commander-in-chief is that of Ch.P.R. students of class 1 and class 5, who were given positions and promotions to become the strongest ranks.

Keep an eye on the commander of Infantry Regiment 23

Colonel Athit Kamlangek became commander of Joint Regiment 23 (which later became Infantry Regiment 23) in 1971, following Colonel Pawatwong Hutaswei, who was in charge of the regiment for two years.

Today Major General Pawatwong has been transferred, and in 1982 he was appointed provincial army commander of Lopburi in place of Major General Khanung Simarut, whose "follower" was involved in a criminal scandal.

The commander of Joint Regiment 23 following Colonel Athit Kamlangek was Colonel Phisit Mebut, from 1977-1978. Then, when the command unit of division 6 was chosen in 1979, he was made deputy commander of division 6, and then in 1980 he became commander of division 6. In 1982 he became deputy commander of army region two.

Colonel San Siphon was the commander of Infantry Regiment 23 from 1979-1981. Following the coup of 1-3 April, 1981, he was made commander of Infantry Regiment 1 to Protect the King, the post previously occupied by Field Marshals Sarit and Praphat.

General Athit's base: a mixed base

No matter what moves by the opposition are rumored in the wind to make it more difficult for General Athit to assume the post of army commander-in-chief, in the end no one will be able to block his path.

News sources in the army and high-level political circles maintain that after the appointment of General Athit as assistant army commander-in-chief, the transfer of the person who could have blocked his path meant that General Athit was sure to become commander-in-chief.

The appointment this year does not change anything. If it weren't that people in military circles consider the "status quo" good, no one would want General Athit, and a person who wanted to would move up into a higher position.

Therefore the rise of General Athit is General Prem's wish because General Athit rose from army region two like General Prem, and only General Athit has announced his firm intention to support General Prem's position as prime minister.

The power that supports General Athit, besides the power of General Athit himself, is the power supporting General Prem Tinsulanon.

General Athit alone can seize power

Those who are dissatisfied with or don't like General Athit in the armed forces, like General Prayut Charumni, have announced that 85 percent of those in the armed forces are satisfied with the appointment of General Athit as army commander-in-chief, and that the other 15 percent are worth considering as well.

Of all officers at present it is almost inconceivable that anyone other than General Athit or General Prem could stage a coup to seize power.

Even if these two officers were to try to turn the tables of democracy and stage a coup, it would be very difficult to do by themselves. They would need the approval of other officers with power and those who can't be cut off in any event, that is the support of the other two forces, the navy and the airforce.

Whoever thinks of gaining political opportunity by a Malapate coup again may meet the fate of the revolt of 26 March or 1-3 April.

The future path of General Athit

There have been five people to become prime minsiter after holding the position of army commander-in-chief.

One was Colonel Phrayaphaphon Phonpayusena [?]; the second, Field Marshal P. Phibunsongkhram; third, Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat; fourth, Field Marshal Thanom Kittikhachon; and fifth, General Prem Tinsulanon.

The first seized power; the second first came to power by constitutional means; the third seized power; the fourth succeeded to the power of the third.

The fifth, General Prem, is generally understood to have become prime minister by constitutional means, but it can't be denied that there was a movement inside and outside the armed forces to overthrow General Kraingsak Chamanan, and it is believed that General Prem, in the position of army commander-in-chief, was asked to become prime minister.

General Athit's road to power will not be his to choose. It will depend on the national political situation in the future as well!

BPP CHIEF MANO SAMITAPHINTHU PROFILED

Bangkok MATICHON SUT SAPPADA in Thai 10-16 Oct 82 p 7

["MATICHON Profile": "Police Major General Mano Samitaphinthu, Chief of the Border Patrol Police"]

[Text] Now 56 years old, he has just been chosen, this past 1 October, 1982, to assume the position of Chief of the Border Patrol Police, having served as deputy chief since January, 1976.

He is an alumnus of the Assumption school, from which he graduated in 1940, completing year 6. From there he went on to a preparatory school for army officers, where he studied in class 4 for two years. Then he entered Ch.B.R. Officers Academy, where his class was ranked Class 8. It consisted of police officer students, and the teachers were all police. He completed his studies in 1945 and began his career as a police sub-lieutenant on 1 September, 1945 as deputy police inspector at the Bupharam Station in the capital.

He was not in the capital a year when he was ordered to move outside the capital and become section head at the police station in the Ubonratchathani district capital in April, 1946. From there he moved to Amnatcharoen district, and then to Warin chamrap district until 1951, when he was given a position in the capital as deputy police inspector at the Lumphini station.

But later he had to leave the capital again on 1 April, 1952, and became head of the special company of unit heads of the fourth zone of Udonthani. He attained the rank of Police Captain that September.

During the time he was head of the police station at Warinchamrap, Police Sub-lieutenant Mano showed his skill in investigation and arrest to important police officers in the department with his investigation and pursuit of a big criminal railroad thief. Even the belongings of Field Marshal Phim Chunhawan, the most important person at the time, had disappeared from a railroad car on the way from the northeast to Bangkok. He used his traveling time, spending nights climbing on and off of railroad cars, traveling on foot, sleeping in train stations, homes of villagers and near the train tracks, and saying he was a hunter to a group that included a police officer and another officer. When he reached Bangkok he still hadn't caught up with the criminal. But on his way back to Nakhonratchasima he found traces and followed them until he finally caught the criminal.

The "knight's ring" was the reward given for police ability at the time, and Mano Samitaphinthu still wears his today with pride.

In 1958, when a Police Major, he went out on an inspection of districts in the left of the province. His helicopter was in an accident and descended on a treetop, just missing falling into an abyss, and he was able to escape with his life. After being Police Major for 2 years, be became Police Lt Colonel, and then Police Colonel three years later, and in another four years he became Special Police Colonel.

His official career has mostly centered outside the capital, in Ubonratchathani, Udonthani, Nakhonratchasima, both in the police force and border police.

When he was selected to be deputy head of zone four of the police of Udonthani, he took care of supervising the police officers academy as well, and when he became deputy head of zone seven, Nakhonpachom, he was also supervisor of the police officers academy.

He became deputy head of the suppression squad on 31 January, 1974 and then became assistant commander of the Border Patrol Police on 1 June, 1975, and deputy commander on 19 January, 1976.

In a few days he will be promoted to Police Lt General.

EDITORIAL NOTES GREAT REGIONAL DISPARITIES IN PER CAPITA INCOME

Bangkok BAN MUANG in Thai 27 Sep 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Per Capita Income"]

[Text] We have mentioned our pride in the government's receiving praise from economics journals around the world, saying that the Thai government is capable in money management and is fifth in the world in economic efficiency. We also express our belief that it is increasingly apparent that the economic status of the Thai people has not improved, and this is a contradiction. We believe that it must be pointed out that we are not without evidence in saying this.

The level of the existence of the people in Thailand cannot be measured in any certain way. We must believe the evidence that yearly per capita income as an indicator appears to be proof of great disparities in Thailand's incomes. The highest appear to exceed economic necessity; the lowest are not enough for continued existence in this world. For example, the national income of a worker in Bangkok has now reached 15,357 baht, while the income of a person in the northeast is only 2,215 baht.

We cannot overestimate the disparities in national income of these workers. They are a matter of fact, and show that Thailand is inefficient in distribution of income, an important aspect of its economy, and that economic policies are carried out to benefit the few in the cities and the capital.

There is one other important point that is extremely harmful to the people's economic situation. That is the increase in expenses of the people without comparable economic compensation by the society. Every year the Thai people must spend their incomes on various things called "good works." These works do not bring any economic benefits back to the people, although many groups try to find a way to "scrape" them up for people by claiming charity. This is one very regrettable way in which incomes are lowered.

EDITORIAL CONDEMNS BREACH OF ASEAN SOLIDARITY ON TRADE MATTERS

Bangkok DAILY NEWS in Thai 1 Oct 82 p 3

[Editorial: "Dont' be Faithful to the Point of Ruin"]

[Text] No matter what age or era, international friendships are extremely important to all nations.

This type of relationship appears in different forms or systems. There are relationships among nations as in the contract to set up the United Nations, and the various agreements arising from the activities of those contracts. In addition, agreements between groups of nations or between two nations or aims of such relationships may take other forms, such as trade, economics, or military.

The important aim is to join together to carry out the objectives of these relationships.

No matter how beautifully written the agreement or contract is, if the nations that are parties to the agreement are not sincere and determined in carrying out the contract or joining together, the agreement is useless or may result in blame of the side that betrayed the sincereity of the agreement.

In affairs of nations, it is important that one must look after his own advantages. Therefore we always find that differences arise between nations who are parties to an agreement.

Some nations are selling Thai products to Vietnam, which we have been trying to prevent, for fear that it will add to their military strength, and we are troubled that our products sell with difficulty in our present economic state of decline, while others are selling Thai products in abundance.

The deputy minister of foreign affairs himself said that some neighboring nations are not uniting in carrying out ASEAN's industrial plan in which it was agreed that Thailand would carry out the manufacture of mineral salts and soda ash. Our ore is secretly taken and sold, and member nations of ASEAN are believed to be engaging in the business of smelting ore, although their nations have no mines or ore products.

Even Thais who travel or conduct business in those nations are treated with contempt.

We won't reveal what nations they are, but the people of integrity are likely to know. But such governments are glad to deceive, knowingly and determined, without thinking of the survival of some of our nations.

COLUMNIST: THAI INTERESTS LIE WITH ARAB STATES

Bangkok DAILY NEWS in Thai 7 Oct 82 p 3

["In the World" column by Trairat]

[Text] On the stage of world politics today, one must keep up with the game. One must dare to express opinions, rather than keep them to oneself. If one doesn't say what is on his mind, who is to blame when problems arise? Leaders of nations can be right or wrong. National policies can result from the decision of a few. They can be faulty. In such cases, when there is an opportunity to express oneself on the world stage, one should clearly point out where the faults are. Sometimes the giant nations are good. One must speak accurately, not worrying that they will be angry. Sometimes we will make them think and make changes for the better. We must not think that the foreigners have magic powers. Sometimes we see that they are doing something foolish and, in fact, they are glad to be criticized and to be able to see the truth.

We Thais have long been deficient in this. In dealing with the great nations in Europe or America sometimes we don't understand them well enough, only flattering them or following closely behind them, not realizing that the foreign leaders saw us as children with no interest in facing the strong nations or acting on our own, unable to solve problems. Should we not act like Malaysia of Singapore, former colonies of England, who when it came time to speak of national advantage both attacked England to an extent, with the result that England had to listen. In the world, whether a nation is big or small is unimportant. Conduct oneself correctly, have good principles, and then the giant nations will have to respect you. The hundreds of small nations should get together to benefit ourselves for bargaining power to gain benefits, so they see that we don't always depend on them, that they actually must turn around and depend on us. Certain policies should not be weak. We must try to stand on our own two feet!

Thailand's announcement in the U.N. was just. Whoever does wrong, especially among the allies, should right that wrong. Thailand estimates that the actions of the Jews in the invasion were behind the killings of 1,500 in Beirut. The announcement of support for the P.L.O., which is in a similar situation with Sihanouk's group at this time, calling for the withdrawal of all troops from Lebanon, led Thailand to ask that all nations leave Kampuchea so that the Khmers can make national political decisions on their own. Thailand has long been tied closely to the U.S., following her in all matters.

It has been said many times that Thailand's advantage lies with the Arabs, but the reason for the ties and limitations were because of Uncle Sam's closeness to the Jews, so that sometimes we seemed to close our ears and eyes. The movement in some areas may come too late ... Everyone understands that in foreign affairs policies are delicate and complex matters, but not all cases are entirely so. In some ordinary cases anyone can say how one should act, as in the incident in which the Jews were an accessory in the killings of thousands of Palestinians. In such a case one can guess immediately that no one would prefer the trouble of putting their money on the Arabs. The Jews and the U.S. demanded support, not allowing an attack. Once again the truth is that the U.S. itself jumped out and pushed the Jews.

Thailand also has the problem of having a great dependence on the Arab nations. Great benefits await us on the shores. The developed nations shouldn't toss away all of our hopes. How much hope have we lost? Should we attend to them or not?

Besides, we ought to be like Japan, selling one thing and talking about other things later. We must oppose tricks we don't like, and seek a few largely better allies.

Stop attaching ourselves to this or that nation. Thailand must be Thailand.

EMERGENCY MEASURES PLANNED TO BOLSTER ECONOMY

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 30 Sep 82 p 19

[Article by Atiqul Alam in Dacca]

[Text] THE Bangladesh government, facing a foreign exchange shortage and a balance of payments crisis, is working on a series of emergency measures to bolster the economy.

Foreign exchange reserves now stand at just US$75 million, the lowest level in the country's 11-year history and hardly enough to pay for one month's imports.

Worse is the balance of payments picture. The deficit stood at US$1.226 billion at the end of the fiscal year in June and economists here believe it will deteriorate by at least another US$100 million in the present fiscal year.

Government officials say the situation will take an encouraging turn in the next couple of months as a result of "new initiatives we are hoping to launch soon."

They declined to give details beyond stating that a substantial credit from abroad, backed by steps to boost farm and industrial output at home, would help stimulate exports and ease pressure on the balance of payments.

A tough budget announced in July removed subsidies on several basic items. Government figures show that rice is now 36 per cent dearer than three months ago and the price of kerosene oil has gone up by 43 per cent.

Blame for the country's present economic predicament is partly attributed here to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) which last month terminated its 864 million special drawing right (SDR) -- about US$1 billion — extended fund facility to Bangladesh because the country was unable to fulfil the pre-conditions for obtaining the credit.

Requirements

The IMF had asked for a devaluation of the Bangladesh currency, a drastic cut in government spending, the ending of subsidies on foodgrains and fertilisers and a total overhaul of the country's credit system.

"We have already gone a long way towards meeting their requirements, but still they are not happy," Finance Minister A.M.A. Muhith told journalists in London on his way back to Bangladesh from an IMF conference in Toronto recently.

He described as a somewhat "anodyne" step a subsequent IMF announcement of a one-off credit of US$78.3 million to help the country buy foodgrains.

He denied that the reservations of the IMF would have repercussions on other financial agencies and among Bangladesh's traditional donors.

"As far as I am concerned, the aid flow will continue as usual," he said.

Independent economists see Bangladesh's economy to be in a desperate situation. "The economy is now worse than the so-called basket case concept," Abu Mahmud, a Harvard-educated economist who is now a senior professor at Dacca University told Reuters.

"No Houdini can save the situation unless those in power try to understand what the economy is all about," he said.

Chief martial law administrator Lieutenant General Hossain Mohammad Ershad has accused some of Bangladesh's politicians of trying to undermine the government's economic strategy.

Conspiracy

"Their conspiracy is bound to fail because we, the armed forces, are with the people and we are determined to see a breakthrough in our economy by working hard in the fields and factories," the general told a Dacca meeting recently.

Officials in the Bangladesh Finance Ministry play down the seriousness of the country's economic situation.

They refer to the recent announcement of the International Development Association, the soft-loan affiliate of the World Bank, that Bangladesh would get a total of US$385 million during the current financial year.

They are expecting another US$170 million from the United States while Japan exchanged notes with Bangladesh earlier this month offering a new credit of US$114 million.

At a meeting of the Bangladesh Aid Group last April in Paris, the country got a commitment of US$1.7 billion of assistance for this year, just half what Bangladesh had asked for.

Officials are worried whether some of the countries which have pledged assistance will come through with the cash.— Reuter

BANK OF AMERICA REPORT PREDICTS ECONOMIC DECLINE

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 27 Sep 82 p 22

[Text]

JAKARTA, Sept. 26

INDONESIA will decline economically next year but will remain politically stable, the Bank of America predicted yesterday.

The bank said in a study of trends until the end of next year that growth would slow to between four and 4.5 per cent this year, compared with 7.6 per cent last year, because of falling exports, lower government spending and reduced private consumption.

It predicted that improved external sector, mining and agricultural performance could push growth to 5.6 per cent next year, but this recovery and faster rupiah depreciation would also boost inflation from an estimated nine per cent this year to 10 per cent next year.

The rupiah, the bank said, would be allowed to depreciate gradually against the dollar from about 670 now to 700 by the end of the year and 770 by the end of 1983. Sudden devaluation was unlikely because of the adverse effect on the political climate.

A trade surplus of only US$1.1 billion this year and US$1.9 billion next year was likely, the report said, a dramatic drop from US$9.1 billion in 1980.

The value of oil exports, which account for 70 per cent of total exports, would continue to decline this year because of Indonesia's observance of Opec production cuts and stagnant prices.

Other exports, which slumped 28.2 per cent in value in 1981, would continue to fall this year but recovery was likely next year, the bank said.

It said cuts in government spending may delay some development projects. — Reuter

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF CHINESE CABINET MINISTER

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 24 Sep 82 p 2

[Text]

JAKARTA, Sept. 23

THE chairman of the Indonesian Indigenous Businessmen Association, Mr Probo Sutedjo, has called for the appointment of a Chinese minister in the new Cabinet to enhance the government's assimilation programme, it was reported today.

Mr Probo, President Suharto's half brother, was quoted by the economic daily journal Ekuinas telling a Hippi meeting in Surabaya, East Java, last night that the Chinese minister should make sure that the imports of certain goods which had been approved by the State Logistics Board (Bulog) should be handled by indigenous businessmen.

This was the first time that a leading businessman had suggested the inclusion of a minister of Chinese origin in the Cabinet.

President Suharto, who is expected to be reelected for a fourth five-year term in March for the 1983-88 period, will reshuffle the present Cabinet and speculation is rife that more young figures will be included.

The late President Sukarno had named leading Chinese figure Oei Tjoe Tat as a State minister in his Cabinet to help speed up the slow process of assimilation.

Mr Probo, who owns several big enterprises and the monopoly for the million of dollars worth clove imports, said the government could not be blamed for the unsmooth assimilation between Indonesians and Chinese.

The blame was on the part of certain Chinese themselves who were unable to adapt to the changing situation at present, he said.

Mr Probo said certain groups of the Chinese community in Indonesia were too selfish causing the indigenous to envy.

"Many Chinese businessmen only think of making profits without bearing in mind whether or not they harm others or the state," he said.

According to the paper, Mr Probo called for serious efforts on both Indonesian and Chinese groups to step up the assimilation programme for the interest of a sound economy in Indonesia.

On the current economic situation, he said the prices of certain commodities were higher than those of imported goods because of fuel price increases early this year.

"Should this go on, the foreign exchange reserve will eventually run out just for imports," he added. — AFP

JAKARTA OPPOSED TO MULTILATERAL MILITARY EXERCISES

Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 16 Sep 82 p 1

[Text]

JAKARTA, Thurs. — Vice-President Adam Malik yesterday said that there was no need for Asean to get involved in any multi-lateral military exercises as suggested by Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew.

In reply to a news reporter's question on Mr Lee's suggestion here last week, Mr Malik said the already existing bilateral military cooperation between Indonesia-Singapore, Indonesia-Malaysia, Indonesia-Philippines and Indonesia-Thailand would be sufficient for Asean's defence purposes.

Mr Malik made the statement after a meeting with President Suharto.

The most important point is an understanding among the five Asean members, Mr Malik said.

He added that multilateral military exercises could easily invite suspicion from the other side (apparently referring to the communists) on what would be the next step in the exercise.

"It is similar to Asean opening a new front," he added.

He said Mr Lee's proposal could be of good intention, but it creates problems. "What is the use of creating problems, especially if it is only a show-off?" he asked.

Resilience

It would be much better for each of the five Asean members to step up national resilience in order to strengthen regional defence, he said. "If it can be done, there is no need for any multilateral exercises."

Mr Lee said at a Press conference before winding up a three-day visit here last Thursday that joint military exercises by all Asean countries would be an ideal way to expand cooperation in this field.

Indonesian parliamentarians had bluntly rejected Mr Lee's idea on grounds that it could lead to a regional military pact which is against Asean's cooperation on economy, cultural and politics.

The idea was also opposed by Thailand through a statement made by Foreign Minister Siddhi Savetsila earlier this week. — AP

CORRUPTION A GREATER PROBLEM THAN IN OTHER ASEAN COUNTRIES

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 16 Sep 82 p 2

[Text]

INDONESIA has the worst corruption problem among the five Asean countries, a don said here today.

Head of the Malay Studies Department of Singapore National University Professor Syed Hussein Al Atas said corruption was also widespread in Thailand and the Philippines.

He said in an interview that corruption also existed in Malaysia while Singapore was the least affected by the problem.

Prof Syed Hussein, who has spent about 30 years studying the problem, was recently awarded a fellowship by the Woodrow Wilson International Centre to compile a book on corrupt practices in Asia.

According to the professor, the Indonesian government had requested him for his opinions on corruption in Indonesia, and he had discussed the matter with senior officials of several Indonesian ministeries that dealt with the question of finance. He found that there was a group of Indonesian leaders who were really determined to wipe out corruption in the country.

He said one of the causes for the prevalence of corruption in Indonesia was that their civil servants were among the lowest paid in the Asean region.

Another reason was that when a person entered the employment market, he was automatically faced with various type of corrupt practices.

According to Prof Syed Hussein, he would not make any comparison on corruption between the Asean countries in his book.

He would, however, stressed that corruption was not a way of life in Asia as was widely believed.

Rather, corruption was in conflict with their religion and philosophy of life, he added.

Prof Syed Hussein has written 10 books on various aspects of society, includinga book on "The Sociology of Corruption" which was translated into Indonesian last year.

Meanwhile, a Jakarta court yesterday started the trial of five executives of a Japanese-Indonesian joint venture, PT Kalimantan Steel, charged with tax evasion to the tune of more than 887 million rupiahs (about US$1.4 million).

SINGAPORE, Sept. 15

Facing trial are the company's Indonesian president, T. Wibowo, former vice president Mr Murai and three former accounting directors — Mr Fukuda, Mr Fukioka and Mr Taneka — who will be tried "in absentia" as they have returned to Japan.

They are charged with having withheld corporate taxes and levies from the state from June 1974 to December 1980 through the fraudulent use of double bookkeeping, using the correct system to get bank credit and a false artificially slashed income sheet to pay taxes and dues.

The Indonesian Department of Trade is checking a complaint lodged by the Jordanian government phosphate company, Jordan Phosphate Mines Co. Ltd (JPM), that Israeli rock phosphate has entered Indonesia labelled as coming from JPM.

The national daily newspaper, Kompas, said the complaint was lodged at the Indonesian Embassy in Damascus and specified that a shipment of 5,000 tons of of Israeli rock phosphate had been shipped to Indonesia — Bernama, AFP, Reuter.

TOWN THREATENED BY VOLCANIC DEBRIS

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 27 Sep 82 p 21

[Article by Peter Griffiths in Tasikmalaya]

[Text]

THOUSANDS of soldiers and volunteers are racing against time to save this West Java town from an avalanche of volcanic mud.

Tasikmalaya, a picturesque hill town of half a million people, lies just 10 miles (17 km) downstream from Java's Galunggung volcano which rumbled to life last April, spurting rocks and emitting huge clouds of black ash.

Its 35 major eruptions since then have turned the densely-populated fertile region around its slopes into a deserted wasteland. Padi fields, fishponds and villages have become a nightmare landscape of black ash "snowdrifts", buried houses and stark, defoliated trees.

Some 30,000 villagers have already abandoned their homes, most of them going to refugee camps run by the government and International Red Cross. About 30 people have died from inhaling the choking dust.

Vulcanologists from four countries monitoring Galunggung say monsoon rains, expected at the end of next month, will turn at least 30 million cubic metres of unconsolidated ash into raging torrents of black mud called Lahar.

The Lahar will plunge down valleys radiating from the 7,113-foot (2,168-metre) volcano, sweeping everything in its path, and could well flood Tasikmalaya.

But despite the experts' warnings, the people in some areas are still hopeful that disasters can be averted or minimised. Thousands have been mobilised to pile sandbags on river banks, deepen the river beds and reinforce dykes.

About 300 delegates, experts in fields ranging from earthquake detection to mass evacuation, are meeting in the nearby city of Bandung this week to discuss contingency plans for the impending disaster, following an appeal from President Suharto.

A United Nations Disaster Relief Organisation (Undro) situation report prepared for the meeting stated: "Latest estimates indicate at least 30 million cubic metres of volcanic materials accumulated on the flanks of the volcano are threatening Tasikmalaya city and surrounding areas.

"A total of 250,000 people are expected to be in physical danger if not evacuated."

Geneva-based Undro director Giles Whitcomb told Reuters: "The peculiarity of this situation for us is that the emergency has yet to come — it is an effort to prepare beforehand for what is certainly going to happen."

American vulcanologist Jack Lockwood, 42, from the Hawaii Volcano Observatory, said: "A disaster is certain — only the size of it remains to be seen."

The porous Lahar, he said, would become unstable when its water content reached a certain critical point, when it would suddenly let go and rush down the valleys at speed of up to 30 miles (50 km) an hour.

One of the main tasks of this week's conference will be to devise a contingency plan to evacuate Tasikmalaya in the one hour it will take the Lahar to reach the town after the first warnings arrive from observation posts upstream.

Bulldozers are carving a path in an effort to divert the Lahar down to a less populated valley, away from Tasikmalaya. But the Undro report stated "the construction of check dams and dykes to restrict mud flows is continuing but there is a general lack of confidence in capacities even if the present works are completed on time."

Social Affairs Minister Brigadier-General Saparjo told delegates: "In Tasikmalaya there are no safe place or high ground. We have to determine how the people have to run. It must be in the right direction. They cannot go by car or the roads will be clogged with traffic jams."

The volcano was until a few months ago a main tourist attraction. A sanatorium on its flank, now smashed and buried, was described by a local guidebook thus: "It is said the waters are good for the health, for healing skin disease and rheumatism. Bathrooms, swimming pool and other facilities are available." — Reuter

BIOGRAPHY OF KAYSONE PHOMVIHAN

East Berlin JUNGE WELT in German 20 Sep 82, pp 1, 2

[Biographic sketch of Kaysone Phomvihan, General Secretary, Lao People's Revolutionary Party Central Committee; Chairman, LPDR Council of Ministers]

[Text] Kaysone Phomvihan was born on 13 December 1920 in Ban Na Seng, Muong Khanthaboury, in Savannakhet Province, the son of a civil servant.

During his studies at the School of Law of Hanoi University he was introduced to the student movement and after 1942 actively participated in the struggle against French colonialism and Japanese militarism.

In August 1945 he was a participant in smashing the Japanese occupation in the provincial capital of Savannakhet and in 1946 became responsible for training Laotian citizens in Vietnam in the struggle against the French oppressor.

In 1947 he was in charge of the resistance movement in the northeastern regions of Laos, where in 1949 he organized the Latsavong forces, the nucleus of what latter became the Laotian People's Liberation Army.

In 1950 Kaysone Phomvihan was appointed defense minister in the newly established Laotian resistance government and in 1955 he became the commander-in-chief of the Laotian People's Liberation Army.

In 1955 he was elected general secretary of the party central committee during the founding party congress of the Lao People's Revolutionary Party.

In 1958 he directed the revolution from headquarters in Vientiane.

In the middle of 1959 when the American imperialists and their helpers violated the Vientiane Agreement of 1957, he returned to the center of the liberated regions, Sam Neua. As deputy chairman of the central committee of the Lao Patriotic Front he took charge of all activities incident to the national battle for liberation.

At the second party congress of the Lao People's Revolutionary Party in February 1972 Kaysone Phomvihan was reelected General Secretary of the party's central committee.

On 2 December 1975 the monarchy was overthrown and the LPDR was founded. On the same day, Kaysone Phomvihan was appointed Chairman of the LPDR Council of Ministers.

The third party congress of the Lao People's Revolutionary Party in April 1982 reconfirmed Kaysone Phomvihan in his function of general secretary of the party's central committee.

NOT ENOUGH LAND FOR SINGLE-FAMILY HOUSES

Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 21 Sep 82 p 1

[Text]

PENANG, Mon. Malaysians should change their lifestyle in line with the times and learn to live in flats, Datuk Seri Dr Mahathir Mohamad said today.

The Prime Minister said: "So long as we do not change our lifestyle, will we continue to face a housing problem."

He said housing was a major problem in the country and land was getting more scarce, especially in towns.

"The people should realise and accept this reality. There must be better and more economic use of land," he said.

Datuk Seri Dr Mahathir was speaking at the opening of the Taman Melati and Desa Melati housing schemes at Sungai Nibong here.

Also present were Datin Seri Dr Siti Hasmah, Minister in the Prime Minister's Department Datuk Abdullah Ahmad Badawi, Deputy Minister Dr Goh Cheng Teik and acting Penang Chief Minister Datuk Abdul Rahman Abbas.

The Prime Minister stressed that in areas where land was scarce, the people should be willing to live in flats.

"We must not waste land. One-storey and two-storey houses in town areas are a waste of land. At the very least we must build four-storey houses," he said.

He said many people, and in particular the Malays, wanted to stay in houses with compounds where they could rear poultry, grow fruit trees and other greens.

If this was adhered to, there would never be enough houses to meet the needs of the people.

Datuk Seri Dr Mahathir said one could "blame the Federal Government for the housing problem, and the State Government and the local authorities for placing all manner of regulations and delaying approval of plans."

"However, it must also be realised that in certain cases, even when all governmental and administrative requirements and problems have been solved, houses especially low-cost, cannot be built."

Datuk Seri Dr Mahathir said some people were too demanding and wanted detached, semi-detached or terrace housing.

This, he said, was not possible in land-scarce areas and in the towns.

He also said in order for a better and freer mix among the various races, more Bumiputras should be encouraged to stay in towns.

As Bumiputras could not afford to buy choice land at market prices, some State Governments were alienating land and selling at cheaper prices to them.

He said Negri Sembilan, where plots near the Seremban golf course had been sold to Bumiputras and some non-Bumiputras especially government servants, was a case in point.

He had investigated the matter and found there had been no misuse of power.

Taman Melati is a single-storey terrace housing scheme while Desa Melati is a kampung-type housing scheme.

DEFENSE MINISTRY'S COMPUTER SYSTEM TO BE UPGRADED

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 24 Sep 82 p 3

[Text]

THE computer system in the Ministry of Defence will be upgraded within the next few months to beef up its logistic capabilities, Datuk Seri Dr Mahathir Mohamad said yesterday.

The Prime Minister said there was a need to upgrade the mini-computer B 800 presently used by the armed forces as the capacity was inadequate to meet the various requirements of the forces including the storage of records and other logistic needs.

"We need bigger computers to keep the records and all the things that make the military move and which enable us to function," said Dr Mahathir who is also the Defence Minister.

He was speaking to reporters after a four-and-a-half hour visit to the central ordnance depot at the Batu cantonment in Kuala Lumpur where he was briefed by its director of the logistics computer system, Lt Kol Mohamed Khir Abdul Razak.

The Prime Minister said the relevant committees in the armed forces were now studying the requirements for the computers in the various divisions and also the number to be purchased and the time necessary for the installation.

Dr Mahathir could not disclose the exact date for the installation of the computers as several processes would have to be carried out including the calling of tenders.

"We hope to upgrade the present mini computers within the next few months but the installation of the main computer will definitely take time," he added.

It is understood that at the closed-door briefing Lt Kol Mohamed Khir told the Prime Minister that the master plan network for the installation of the computers would be carried out in two phases.

The first phase would be from 1982 to 1986 while phase two would be from 1986 to 1992.

Army officials said phase one would entail the installation of three computers — one each for the army, air force and navy.

The upgrading of the central ordnance depot (COD) computer would be implemented by next January and the proposal paper on it was being studied by the Joint Planning and Defence Operation (JPDO).

The officials disclosed that the logistics computer system group — Kumpulan Sistem Komputer Logistic (KSKL) — was applying both Western techniques and the Japanese teamwork style to finish all the jobs set by the target dates.

KSKL was set up about six months ago to coordinate trial services in the computer systems for the three branches of the armed forces, including the storing and buying of computers for logistic support.

A senior official said the whole network of computers in the logistic system was structured into a four-tier hierarchy — policy, control, wholesale and retail.

The network employed is called a stockage support system which advocates a push-supply instead of the present push-demand replenishment system.

Earlier the Prime Minister who was accompanied by the chief of army, Jen Tan Sri Zain Hashim was received by the commanding officer of the depot, Lt Kol Haji Omar Yusoff. — Bernama

SELF SUFFICIENCY ANSWER TO EXPORT PRICE SLUMP

Canberra THE AUSTRALIAN in English 24 Sep 82 p 17

[Text]

THE main reason Papua New Guinea has been hit so hard by the international recession is its almost total dependence on export income.

After copper, its major exports are coffee, copra and cocoa. In the good times they earn more than enough foreign cash to keep the national economy afloat. But in the last couple of years the prices of all four products have sunk dangerously low.

PNG's dilemma is that despite its greatly reduced national income, it must continue to import the huge range of consumer goods and foodstuffs that are not produced at home.

It is generally accepted that the long-term strategy to ensure the country's economic survival must be to increase its self-sufficiency, thus cushioning it against the effects of wildly fluctuating prices in the international market place.

According to the executive director of the National Investment and Development Authority, Mr Wep Kanawi, the short-term strategy must be to reduce its dependence on the export of copper and other metals by increasing the importance of the agricultural sector.

As PNG has learned the hard way, once metal prices slump they can take several years to recover.

The volatile nature of the world market for agricultural goods means that their prices tend to recover more quickly.

But at the moment this is little consolation, because the plantations on which the coffee, copra and cocoa are grown are badly run down and in many cases no longer capable of efficient production.

Before independence, most of the plantations were owned and operated by expatriates, who sold them to the national Government under the Land Acquisition Scheme. The Government then leased the plantations to Papua New Guineans, preferably to the traditional land owners in each area.

Lacking the experience and financial backing of the expatriate planters, they have found that maintaining production rates is an uphill struggle.

Some of the copra producers have been forced to abandon production altogether. In the March quarter this year, in which the export value of copra reached its lowest value since 1978, the export volume fell by 33 per cent.

One of the big problems is that many of the copra trees are now too old to produce the optimum yield. The quantity and quality of the coconuts harvested is dwindling each year.

"The coconut trees have reached senility," Mr Kanawi said.

"The plantations need to be replanted with the newer hybrid trees. They have a better yield per acre."

Cocoa, coffee and rubber plantations also need replanting. Mr Kanawi believes it should start as soon as possible, so that when the price of agricultural exports recover, the new trees will have reached the production stage.

"This is an opportune time for the run-down plantations to be rekindled," he said.

"I think in the next five or six years it would be well worthwhile for the government to concentrate on developing the agricultural sector while the prices are down.

"It takes between five and six years for plantations to be renovated, and to become totally productive again."

But who will do it? The national and provincial governments are strapped for cash.

Mr Kanawi says the only solution is to lease plantations to large, foreign-owned companies which specialise in plantation management and would be prepared to invest their finance and expertise in return for the use of the land.

"I would like to see private companies that not only know the growing side but the production and marketing," he said.

The hitch is that traditional land-owners have proven reluctant to relinquish their properties for this sort of development.

The attitude of the land-owners is threatening a major new agricultural project at Cape Rodney, in the Central Province.

The Commonwealth Development Corporation is keen to acquire 5000ha for cocoa and rubber production.

"We have signed an agreement but the land is the problem, because all the land required for the project is traditionally owned," he said.

The plan is for the Development Corporation to acquire the land on a 99-year lease, paying the owners an annual rent and providing them with jobs on the estate.

In order to try to persuade the leaders of the clans in the area that they were being offered a good deal, NIDA flew them to Popondetta to see a large oil palm project being run along similar lines to the proposed Cape Rodney project.

The leaders were unconvinced but Mr Kanawi is hoping the project will not be abandoned.

If it is abandoned it will be the second large project to go this year.

The first was a multi-million dollar tuna factory which was to be built at Kavieng in the New Ireland Province.

The investors pulled out because of the depressed tuna market and the high cost of capital funds. As a result of the project falling through, some of the companies operating fishing fleets off the PNG coast closed down.

The loss of jobs added to the already high unemployment statistics. Unemployment is difficult to measure in Papua New Guinea, because so many people live in villages where they are subsistance farmers.

"The majority of the population is not so much unemployed as underemployed," Mr Kanawi said.

"But unemployment is the worst it's been because so many have been laid off jobs."

PNG's biggest agricultural export income earner is coffee, and Mr Kanawi has been looking at the possibility of setting up a soluble coffee elaboration plant.

It seems absurd that almost all the coffee drunk in PNG, one of the world's major coffee producers, is roasted, processed, blended and packaged in other countries before being exported back to its country of origin.

The elaboration plant would go part way towards redressing the situation. It would also be a step towards PNG increasing its income from coffee production by exporting it processed and blended rather than raw.

But much to Mr Kanawi's frustration and regret, the scheme does not have the support of the growers.

"They seem to want to protect the agreement that exists between them and the Australian roasters, and also their marketing outlets," he said.

This year has been a particularly lean one for the coffee growers.

The low export prices alone might have been manageable, but combined with a smaller than usual crop — the result of too much wet weather in the Highlands — the outlook is pretty grim.

The largest coffee factory in PNG, in fact the largest factory of any kind, is run by the wholly nationally-owned Wahgi Mek Plantations Pty Ltd at Banz, in the Western Highlands Province. The factory is capable of processing 35 tonnes of coffee a day.

Towards the end of this year's production season, it was processing only four to five tonnes a day. This was despite the fact that it was being supplied by 14 plantations as well as by individual growers selling their crop at the factory door.

The chairman of the PNG Coffee Industry Board, Mr John Munnull, said production was down 20 to 30 per cent on last year.

He said the effects of this were felt not only by the major coffee producers, but by the thousands of small-scale growers and the hundreds of thousands of others who relied directly or indirectly on the coffee industry for their source of income.

EXODUS OF SKILLED WORKERS ENDANGERS LOCAL INDUSTRIES

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 20 Sep 82 p 19

[Article by Manolo B. Jara in Manila]

[Excerpts] LIKE most of their Third World counterparts, the call of the Mid-East petrodollar has become simply irresistible to many Filipinos — and the government.

The exodus is actively being encouraged by the government which considers manpower export as a way out of the worsening unemployment problem. Official figures indicate that in 1981, unemployment was only 5.2 per cent of the total labour force of 15 million.

Brain drain

But competent observers dispute these figures, claiming that they hide an even greater problem called underemployment. The situation is compounded by the global recession whose dire effects are increasingly being felt in the Philippines.

Thus, the government emphasis on manpower export, especially to the oil-rich Middle East.

Moreover, remittances from expatriate Filipinos now account for a huge chunk of the country's foreign exchange earnings.

Statistics from the Ministry of Labour and Employment (MOLE) support this point. In the past six years, Labour Minister Blas Ople proudly announced, Filipino workers abroad remitted US$3,147.9 million which make them one of the country's top dollar earners.

The seemingly unabated "brawn" and "brain drain," however, is beginning to tell on the performance of vital and essential industries in the country. Such has been the outward flow of skilled Filipino workers, technicians, engineers and the like that many industries are now crying "Ouch" from the severe pinch.

To alleviate their plight, the government has issued a controversial directive to control the exodus of skilled workers overseas. From now on, said the Philippine Overseas Employment Administration (POEA), all recruitment agencies must first obtain clearance from local employers before processing the papers of company workers applying for jobs abroad.

Organised labour immediately pounced on the directive, saying that it was unconstitutional. Vic Padilla, president of the Overseas Workers Association of the Philippinese (OWAP), explained that the directive "restricts freedom of movement."

Under the country's Labour Code, he added, workers are only required to notify their employers 30 days before they resign. "The measure amounts to involuntary servitude for (Filipino) workers looking for the proverbial greener pasture," he moaned.

But POEA administrator Patricia Sto. Tomas stood pat on the order and disputed Mr Padilla's observations. She said the order applies only to workers who have existing contracts with companies.

Ms Sto. Tomas added that the order aims to "protect local industries from serious depletion of their critically-needed employees." The lack of trained and qualified personnel due to the exodus is, indeed, alarming.

In the oil refinery industry alone, officials have loudly complained that the flow of employees has been exceeding the tolerable level of 5 per cent since 1980. Figures submitted by the refineries showed that in 1980, 12 per cent of their skilled workers left the country.

"Blownouts" (temporary power failures) have been traced by officials of the National Power Corporation and the Manila Elecric Company to the mass resignation of skilled technicians who left for more lucrative jobs in the Middle East.

In fact, said Minister Ople, the Manila Electric Company was "nearly crippled four years ago" when its top engineers left for Middle East jobs. And the situation is still considered critical in the two power firms, according to authoritative sources.

There are now 671,000 Filipino contract workers in 112 countries — mostly in the Middle East — compared with only 1,859 in 1970. Their favourite destination appears to be Saudi Arabia with 42,239; Egypt, 6,702; Lebanon, 2,545; Kuwait, 1,894; and the United Arab Emirates, 1,635.

Like most Third World countries, the Philippines is confronted with the dilemma of the uncontrolled flight of skilled workers abroad in the face of warnings about its long-term effects on a nation's development. For one thing, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (Unctad) has warned that the "brawn" and "brain drain" poses a serious threat to the industrialisation programmes of developing countries.

But most developing nations, preoccupied as they already are with short-term economic imperatives, are unlikely to heed the Unctad warning. The export of skilled manpower is a major source of foreign exchange, aside from helping ease the growing unemployment problem. And in these hard times, no developing country seems ready to kill the goose as long as it continues to lay the golden egg. — Depthnews Asia.

CONTROL OF INTERNAL SECURITY SHIFTED TO DEFENSE MINISTRY

Kuala Lumpur NEW STRAITS TIMES in English 17 Sep 82 p 13

[Text]

SINGAPORE, Thurs. — Singapore's powerful intelligence and security networks, now shared by the Home and Defence Ministries, will come under one head in the next few months, official sources said today.

They said that the present chief of the Internal Security Department (ISD), Lim Chye Heng, would give up his post to the director of the Defence Ministry's Security and Intelligence Division, Mr Eddie Teo, later this year.

Mr Lim, 51, who rose from the ranks to become the head of ISD, a division of the Home Ministry with wide powers of arrest and detention, would retire early.

They could give no reason for his decision to quit the ISD, which is empowered under the Internal Security Act (ISA), to detain without trial suspected communists and subversives.

Western diplomatic observers said that the move appeared to be part of a reorganisation to improve the efficiency of the island State's defence and security apparatus.

International human rights organisations like the London-based Amnesty International have criticised the Singapore Government for what they describe as stifling political dissent through ISA detentions.

But the Government maintains that all the political detainees,some held without trial for more than 15 years, are either communists or subversive elements.

The ISD's latest success was in January when it arrested 10 members of a Muslim extremist group which it said was planning to overthrow the Singapore Government by force.

CONSTRUCTION OF HYDROCRACKER PROJECT POSTPONED

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 21 Sep 82 p 2

[Text]

A PLANNED second hydrocracker project for Singapore's refining industry has been delayed, the Straits Times reported, quoting energy industry sources.

The multi-million dollar project involving Singapore Refining Company (RC) in which British Petroleum, Caltex and Singapore Petroleum Company are partners, had been under consideration since early last year.

The earlier indications were that the consortium partners would take a decision by the middle of this year and that construction on the offshore Merlimau Island would begin by early next year.

Both projects — one owned by Shell at the nearby Bukom Island — which are estimated to cost more than S$500 million will produce kerosene, petrol, diesel and aviation turbine.

The drastic changes noted in cost economics in the past 12 months and Indonesia and Malaysia plan to set up their own refineries are believed to be behind the latest re-evaluation by the consortium partners.

The Straits Times said that Shell was now planning to "advance" the starting date for its Bukom Island project in view of Indonesian plans for similar projects.

The chairman of SRC's executive committee, Mr G. Sismondo, said that re-evaluation was not a "second thought" on the proposed plan.

"The project is not cancelled but is delayed," the Straits Times quoted him as saying.

There have been additional discussions because the partners need to agree on the basis of the project as their perceptions of the economic picture and product requirements differ, he told the paper.

"We have lost some time. We would otherwise have been letting out construction contracts about now. But it is not a major delay and certainly the project is not shelved," the spokesman emphasised.

Mr Sismondo said subsequent studies had shown that the initial proposals on the project were not "quite appropriate".

"We think it's going to be less than the original envisaged capacity of 25,000 to 35,000 barrels daily, but this will depend on factors like market and cost of the project. We are looking at the numbers carefully," it quoted him as saying.

Meanwhile, a Dutch oil storage terminal operator, Paktank Europe B.V., is considering establishing a multi-million dollar terminal facility on one of Singapore's small offshore islands, the Singapore Straits Times reported yesterday.

The proposed project was in a preliminary stage but if finalised would be as massive an investment as the Van Ommeren-Singapore government terminal venture being built on the offshore island of Pulau Sebarok, said industry sources, quoted by the newspaper. AFP

LAND RECLAMATION PROJECTS BEING PLANNED

Kuala Lumpur BUSINESS TIMES in English 24 Sep 82 p 19

[Article by Peter Spence in Singapore]

[Text]

LAND-HUNGRY Singapore may spend more than S$3 billion over the next five to seven years on major deep sea land reclamation and infrastructure development. Land will be reclaimed off the southwest tip of Singapore island and around 10 islets off the southern seaboard.

The reclamation, which will entail the recovery of extra coastland and the joining up of three groups of islets, will be done by the Jurong Town Corporation (JTC). The work is in anticipation of Singapore's rapid growth as a distribution and processing centre for the region as well as for expanding petrochemical industries. It is also to meet increasing demand for waterfront sites for port development and the needs of the shipbuilding and repairing and oil rig building sectors.

The projects, first outlined in the JTC's annual report for 1980-81 published last October, were updated last week by the JTC, which said plans were afoot to join another two offshore islets. A spokesman said reclamation and amalgamation of the islets of Semakau and Sakeng, which together now measure nearly 300 hectares, would create a 600-hectare island at a cost of about S$600 million.

The joining of these two islets, which would not be undertaken for about five years yet, is part of the JTC's plans to transform Singapore's southern offshore islets, many of which are mere coral reefs, into an international oil and petrochemical centre for processing, storage and distribution.

Changing coastline

Two other islets, Sakara and Bakau, which today have a total surface of about 15.5 hectares, are to be joined up to provide some 135 hectares when the project is completed in three years at a cost of S$270 million. These two islets lie immediately south of Ayer Merabau Island, where the S$2,000 million Japan-Singapore Sumitomo petrochemical complex is being built.

In its annual report last year, the JTC announced studies on joining up two other islets much closer to the mainland. But the JTC last week disclosed plans to join up five, not two, islets — Merlimau, Seraya, Mesemut Laut, Mesemut Darat and Meskol.

These islets lie only a few hundred yards offshore, also near the site of the giant petrochem complex, and joined up, at a cost of S$185 million, would provide some 155 hectares of land. Work is also underway to transform the small, 2.5-hectare Busing Island into a 55-hectare island at a cost of S$47 million.

A far larger reclamation job under study by JTC is the recovery of 600 hectares off the southwestern tip of Singapore. Preliminary studies by a Dutch consultant, Haskoning Hydromanics, last year showed the scheme's feasibility but further studies and the actual work will take several years. However, this additional land could be ready for development as valuable waterfront sites before the end of this decade.

Expansion of Sebarok Island is complete. It is the site of a proposed giant oil storage terminal being set up by the government and the Dutch group, Van Ommeren, and involving some S$200 million.

Other southern islets which have already been developed as major oil centres are Bukom by Shell, Ayer Chazan by Esso and Seraya by the Public Utilities Board. The JTC's dream is to make these islets for Asia what Rotterdam, the focal point of distribution, is to Europe.

For the industrial land created, away from Singapore's mainland to avoid pollution and not eat into much needed residential and office space, could also be used to help in the government's plans to make Singapore a distribution and processing centre for raw materials like rubber and cocoa, aluminium and other regional products.

The reclamation is part of the ever changing face of Singapore's coastline. Major land reclamation provided the site for the new Changi Airport on Singapore's eastern tip and the reclaimed southern coast's skyscrapers of the business and banking district today look out over more reclaimed land on which development will soon begin. — AFP

ASSISTANT CINC PATHOM PROFILED, DISPUTES 'SOLDIER POLITICIAN' LABEL

Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 13 Sep 82 p 4

[Interview with Lieutenant General Pathom Soemsin, the assistant RTA CINC; date and place not specified]

> [Text] Lieutenant General Pathom Soemsin, the assistant commander in chief of the army, was born on 11 October 1924 in Nakhon Pathom Province. He studied at the Kannasut school in Suphanburi Province through lower secondary school. He then completed his high school education at Suan Kulap School. He entered the Army Preparatory School, Class 3, He continued his education at the Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy, graduating in 1945 at the end of the war. He entered government service as a sub-lieutenant in command of a platoon, 41st Battalion, Songkhla Province. He was the commander of a platoon in charge of protecting a checkpoint and keeping it from being seized by Japanese troops. After the end of the war, the 41st Battalion was disbanded and he was transferred to the Kho Hong Camp in Hat Yai District. He was made the commander of a company with the 2nd Infantry Battalion, 5th Infantry Regiment. He served in Hat Yai for 7 years before being promoted to captain. In 1972, he served as the deputy chief of staff of the Second Army Area. In 1975, he served as the chief of staff of the Second Army Area. After that, he served as the deputy commanding general of the Second Army Area and then as the assistant chief of staff for logistics. He was then made deputy army chief of staff.

[Question] Concerning your new position, what will you be responsible for?

[Answer] I am the second assistant army commander in chief. I am replacing General Phaichit Somsuwan. I will be responsible for logistics. Thianchai will be first assistant RTA CINC for personnel in place of General Athit.

[Question] Will there be any problems? Are you unhappy about being appointed to this position?

[Answer] No. Concerning this work, I have much experience in logistics operations. I have been engaged in logistics work since I was with the Second Army Area.

[Question] In general, what is your view of this year's reshuffle? There has been criticism that many members of Army Preparatory School Classes 3 and 5 were promoted.

[Answer] I do not agree. I think that the appointments this year were proper and that it was their turn to be promoted. I think that this was the case because of seniority. Many from my class, for example, were promoted because almost all those in the class before mine retired. The only person left from Army Preparatory School Class 2 is General Chaloei, who is now with Supreme Command Headquarters. Those in Class 3, to which I belong, have 2 more years left. After we retire, it will be the turn of classes 4 and 5. The members of these classes are approximately the same age. After classes 3 and 4, it will be the turn of classes 5 and 6.Class 5 is the class of Athit and Thianchai.

[Question] Looking at things, at present many members of Class 5 have become commanders. Will there be any problems?

[Answer] No. It all depends on us. Class is not important. It depends on the person's work capabilities. The idea that we are from a senior class but that we do not have important jobs or have not had experiences is not the right way to think. If such were the case, the younger men would not have a chance to move up. If we simply wait for one class to retire first, the country will be in trouble. People are not all equally intelligent. Sometimes, those who are younger are more brilliant.

[Question] General Athit has been greatly criticized for rising so rapidly.

[Answer] Has he ever caused losses? He is a capable person. He has done many things and has always succeeded. He has always completed his tasks. I do not think there wil be any problem over class or anything else. It was the same in a previous period.

[Question] Before the royal command was issued, the atmosphere was tense because there were two contenders for the position of RTA CINC. What was the feeling?

[Answer] That is not correct. We already knew. There was no conflict. You people are the ones who wrote all the criticisms about conflicts and competition. But none of this happened. He sat and laughed. Everyone knew already. But here, we must give much praise to General Athit. If he had not been present during the events of 1 April, I do not know what would have happened. People who do a good job must be praised. General Athit is a good man. He has done many good things. He speaks well; he is a very good speaker. I think he speaks like Mr Samak. That is, people of all classes understand what he says. People who are not good speakers may be understood by knowledgeable people but they will not be understood by uneducated people. As for people not liking him, I do not think he smiles very much and so it seems that people don't like him. But I think that this is just a characteristic of professional soldiers.

[Question] But there is the feeling that General Athit's rapid rise has created a tense atmosphere in the army. Isn't this true?

[Answer] No, it isn't. Are you saying that General Athit rose unusually fast? GeneralThianchai comes form the same class but he was promoted to major general before me in 1973. I was still a colonel then. The rise of Class 5 has been rapid.General Athit rose rapidly after the events of 1 April.

[Question] There are people who feel that many soldiers do not like General Athit and that his rise to the top position will only increase the conflicts in the army.

[Answer] I think just the opposite is true. The units feel like those in Korat. Go ask who doesn't like General Athit. Concerning the units in the seocnd and first army areas, I have not seen anyone who does not like him. But he is a person who does not smile very often. That's the way he is. But he is really a good and kindhearted person. As for administration, it seems that he is close to his subordinates. As for saying that soldiers do not really like General Athit, I do not think this is true.

[Question] At Lopburi, the commander of the Army Military District and the commander of the Lopburi Artillery Center were transferred. This resulted because of the attempt on the life of the prime minister, didn't it?

[Answer] I don't know anything about this. The commander of the army district may have been involved. It may have been a case involving influential soldiers who had been oppressing the villagers. The villagers then complained and so action was taken. This is probably what happened. But concerning the commander of the artillery center, he was transferred because next year he will retire; the army often transfers soldiers who will soon retire and moves them to headquarters. There were many soldiers who were transferred to headquarters this year to wait to retire next year.

[Question] Recently, there has been constant competition between the professional soldiers and the political soldiers.

[Answer] We cannot say who is a professional soldier and who is a political soldier.Every soldier considers himself to be a professional soldier since we have all studied at military academies. We must consider the military our profession. As for politics, politics has involved itself with us. It is necessary for soldiers.... As for soldiers liking to stage coups, I think that soldiers have a duty to maintain the security of the country, especially from invasion by outside enemies.

[Question] It seems possible that there will be more coups since when something violent like a bombing takes place, people in general think that the army will seize power, although the parliamentary political sytem is now working well.

[Answer] The present prime minister wants a democratic system just as we do. He is trying.... Concerning these events, I think that some people feel that a situation was created on purpose in order to dissolve parliament. I do not think this is true. I think it was probably troublemakers or people who have been arrested. Or perhaps it was the same people who set off the explosion at Don Muang. Maybe it was the bandit terrorists or the communist terrorists, who are now active in both the cities and the jungles. This may have been their plan. I do not think soldiers needed to create a situation. There is no need to be suspicious of each other.

[Question] From the standpoint of the military, it may seem that, because such events have occurred, the prime minister is too weak and that the government cannot control things or take effective action. Can you confirm whether there will or will not be [a coup]?

[Answer] It is not necessary to stage a coup and bring in a new person. The present government of General Prem is a good government. He is a good man. He is not weak. As for the situation, it is under control. There will not be a coup if the conditions are not present. This is my view. I do not think anyone will attempt to stage a coup. We know that democracy still requires the monarchy. In some periods, [poeple] have wanted to abolish the monarchy in order to have a presidential system. Our country is not suited to this and it would only lead to more power struggles.

[Question] You have been in the military for a long time. How do soldiers feel about democracy?

[Answer] I think our soldiers are very democratic. I wrote my thesis in 1966 at the Army College. I wrote about the problems of Thais in Thailand. My thesis was one of the five best theses. I wrote about politics, particularly about what soldiers thought. I do not think that even the government officials or civilians in the Ministry of Interior thought the same way I did. I wrote about how Thailand should govern itself. I think that what I wrote was too far ahead of its time.

I think that it is essential to have local administration start from local government. Things must begin at the commune and village levels. There must be village committees and commune, district and provincial councils. To have an elected parliament, the people must be allowed to elect people, from the lower levels on up. The commune councils must have real power.

What do soldiers want concerning administration and do they want to form a government themselves? Actually, soldiers cannot form a government. The soldiers bear arms and cannot play politics.

[Question] But ever since 1932, soldiers serving as RTA CINC have used their power to stage coups to become prime minister.

[Answer] At that time, the country was in turmoil because we had just implemented democracy. And democracy was understood by only a few small groups. The people could not keep up. Stated simply, this was something new that they were not familiar with. Some people took advantage of things and created problems for the people in general.

[Question] What is your view on the relationship between the position of RTA CINC and the position of prime minister? Since General Athit has become RTA CINC, some people think that if General Prem leaves the position, General Athit will become the next prime minister.

[Answer] The next prime minister must be elected. If the RTA CINC wants to be prime minister, he must resign his military position and run in the election.

[Question] But what if there is a revolution or coup or parliament continues to give power to the senators using the same election method it did when General Prem was elected?

[Answer] That is a collective matter, not an individual matter. If parliament is silly enough to do that, that is up to parliament. I do not know. But in principle, I do not think that would be correct. Prime minister Prem is a gentleman. I do not think he would do that. General Athit has always supported General Prem. He does not think about such things.

DEPUTY CINC SUP INTERVIEWED ON RTA BUSINESS ROLE, BOMBINGS

Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 14 Sep 82 p 3

[Interview with Lieutenant General Sup Aksaranukhro, the deputy commander in chief of the army; date an place not specified]

[Text] [Question] Concerning your new position as deputy commander in chief of the army, do you feel unhappy about anything?

[Answer] Concerning the matter of responsibility, this is a position with a great deal of responsibility. The person who holds this position is second in command after the RTA CINC. He must help carry out all the work and help the RTA CINC. But all this must be within the framework and policies stipulated by th RTA CINC.

[Question] When you take over this position, will there be any discussion about the young turks' -- the soldiers who instigated the 1 April 1981 affair -- request to return to government service?

[Answer] I cannot give you an answer about this for two reasons. First, as of today, I am not yet the deputy RTA CINC. I am still the deputy chief of staff. Second, this is a matter that must be discussed by senior commanders. Concerning this matter, I believe that it has already been discussed. It is not something new; it is an old matter. It happened a long time ago.

[Question] Discussions at what level?

[Answer] I cannot answer that because I have not started carrying out my duties. I do not know; I do not have all the data about what has already been done or at what level.

[Question] What is the military's view of the present situation of the government?

[Answer] Things are very stable. There should not be any problems because the government is carrying out its duties as usual. There are economic problems. The government is trying to solve the security problems. Domestically, we have scored very good results. The first, second third and fourth army areas have all scored very good achievements. During 1982, we have destroyed almost all of the enemy secure bases. As for outside security, we are ready to handle any situation. Thus, concerning the stability of the government, I do not think there is anything to be worried about.

[Question] The economic situation is not good. How can the military help the government?

[Answer] We are already helping. We are providing help in those areas that we can. The military cannot provide direct help in the economic sphere.But we can do so indirectly. For example, we can develop the areas that are seized. We have made plans to develop these areas. This is help in the form of making these areas safe.The people can make a living in peace without being bothered by the communist terrorists. This will help improve the economy in those areas.

[Question] Concerning the matter of Lieutenant General Han Linanon talking about the banks, what is your view on this matter?

[Answer] Concerning this, I will say frankly that I do not have the knowledge to analyze the matter. Economics, finance and banking are subjects that must be studied. I'm sorry, but I just can't answer you.

[Question] Concerning this year's military transfers, it looks as if Army Preparatory School Class 3 will play a greater role than Class 5. Will the members of Class 5 encounter any problems in stepping into command positions?

[Answer] Concerning the mass media in general, I would like to say that their separation of people by class is not good. It is not good because when considering a person for a position, it is possible that a person from the same class will be selected without our really having intended to choose him. But we must look at qualifications. If we get involved with the matter of class, this will lead the discussions astray. I once served as the director of personnel. I tried to avoid the matter of class. If we look at class too, our consideration of a person [for a position] will not proceed as it should. This is what I think.

As a matter of course, officers graduate every year. Thus, I do not know which class will move up every year. It is as if there is a time for every class to move up. For these reasons, I do not agree with looking at who is in which class.Things are uncertain. Those people who are very intelligent and capable individuals may move up faster than those in other classes.But we admit that they are very capable individuals.

A case in point is that I am a member of Class 3 but a member of Class 5 is my superior. How do I feel? I do not feel anything because every soldier is disciplined. It is not easy for a person to be promoted to a position, particularly as a member of the king's royal commnad. Everyone must accept this. Once we accept this, there is no problem. Everyone must simply carry out his duties. There is no need to sulk over the fact that someone else comes from a younger class.

[Question] This year, it seems that many of the officers who helped put down the 1 April rebellion were promoted.

[Answer] As for suppressing the rebellion, most of those left were promoted because only a few poeple helped put down the rebellion. Those who joined in restoring order were the ones who were left. And you cannot say that many have been promoted. Everyone had to help put down the rebellion.

[Question] What is your view about some future coup d' etat? Whenever something violent occurs such as a bombing, people think that there may be a coup.

[Answer] As for the bombings, I do not think it will reach that point. If there are bombings in many places all at once, they may in fact be planning something. But if there is just a single explosion, this is just someone causing trouble. It is nothing that would require forces to be brought out.

[Question] What was behind the explosion at the Ministry of Defense?

[Answer] We will know the answer to that when we find out who set off the bomb. If we can learn who set off the explosion, we will learn why this was done.

[Question] Concerning the matter of the prime minister being fired at at Lopburi and the matter of a grenade being thrown at his home at Si Sao, is there any indication of who was involved?

[Answer] I do not want to say anything because the results of the investigations of these two cases are not yet clear. But I understand that the officials handling these cases may know the answers.Those in the military [who know] are the security officials. The civilians [who know] are the police.

[Question] Concerning the assassination attempt at Lopburi, the commander of the Artillery Center and the commander of the Army District were both removed.

[Answer] I am uncertain about this. These people were too senior to be involved in this. There are many units at Lopburi. I think there was some other reason for their transfer.But by chance, this took place first. I do not believe this.

[Question] What is your view about the fact that officers are members of the boards of state enterprises?

[Answer] This is a matter for the RTA CINC. Don't think that soldiers know only how to fight. Many of today's soldiers have a Ph.D. Go observe things at the Armed Forces Staff College. Many of those studying there have their Ph.D. Thus, those soldiers with administrative and technical knowledge can monitor things for the government. The position of board member is not a work position but an executive position.

[Question] Will these soldiers have time to administer things and make decisions since they already have regular duties?

[Answer] They must have. If they are ordered to do this, they must have time. It depends.

[Question] As a senator, what is your view on what is being done to revise the constitution?

[Answer] This is now a game. The two motions to revise the constitution have both been rejected. To revise it, there are two ways. That is, the MPs must vote to convene a special meeting [of parliament] in order to discuss this matter.Another way is for the government to make this proposal. Concerning this, I do not know whether the MPs intend to call for a revision. But they have the right to do this.

[Question] How do the senators feel about this?

[Answer] Most of the senators served on the Legislative Council that produced the present constitution and so they approve of it.Since you have asked me, I can say that most of the senators played a role in writing this constitution and, therefore, few want to revise it. It has never been used. We would like it to be used. We would like the governmnt to have a majority in parliament to see how things go. If old-style elections are held in which the zones are divided and numbers are divided, there will be many small parties again. We want to see a government formed by having a political party.

[Question] But this way, the large parties that have large sums of money will win many seats in parliament. The small parties will not have a chance.

[Answer] This has both advantages and disadvantages. We must think about this. We know that by dividing the zones and numbers, there will not be a majority. If we do things this new way, there is the disadvantage that you mentioned. We must see what happens. The best way is to try this and see what the result is.

[Question] People are wondering whether the senators want to implement a "ready-made" democracy without giving the people a chance to learn for themselves or whether the people will be given a chance to elect [candidates] with the party system developing on its own.

[Answer] We are trying to emphasize the importance of the political parties and of choosing a single number. The people will elect a party. The parties will choose people [to run] and the people will determine which parties have good candidates. I cannot answer your question yet. We must wait and see what really happens.

[Question] What is your opinion of Thai newspapers?

[Answer] They are good. But as I have said from the very first, I know that some stories in the newspapers [are not true]. Take the matter of conflicts in the military, for example, There are no conflucts in the military, but the newspapers have printed stories saying that there are conflicts. This is not good. Thus, concerning those things that will help promote national unity and security, I would like the mass media to help. In particular, I would like the media to help with psychological operations. That is, they should not just wait for headline stories so that sales are good. [These stories] must first bring good results before we can say that the mass media here is good.

[Question] What is your view on how the news is presented?

[Answer] It's fine. Some stories are a little too sensational. But I think things have improved. Things are better than they were 5-6 years ago.

[Question] The press has the feeling that if anything happens, if there is a coup, the newspapers will immediately be shut down.

[Answer] Such an event is not normal. In my experience, whenever something happens, the newspapers sell a lot of newspapers. For example, on 1 April, there were three editions, in the morning, afternoon and evening. They made large profits, didn't they? Such events cannot be used as a standard. At present, the government is not watching over [the press] very clsoely. But some things that have been printed have affected certain people and they have complained. I frequently see retractions in the press.

[Question] Concerning the stories that were printed about the appointments of officers of the rank of colonel, the army did not want the press to print these stories. Why doesn't the army want such stories published?

[Answer] It's like this. The transfer orders have been classified as secret.They are classified secret because it is feared that, if people know, they will make a fuss.They will want to be transferred to certain places or they will not go to where they have been assigned. The assignments are kept secret until the transfer orders have been signed. The secret classification is then removed and the matter is revealed.But usually, based on what I have seen, some newspapers have obtained copies of these orders and printed them before the secret calssification has been removed. This is too soon. This has made us uneasy. Why have some of our men released this information to the mass media ahead of time?

[Question] But the list of appointments has been published.

[Answer] Not yet. The Adjutant General Department must first remove the secret classification before this is printed.

[Question] Does this mean that, from now on, when such items are released and the secret classification is removed they can then be printed as news items.

[Answer] Yes. They can be printed. But don't publish such orders just before the orders are signed like this. The ink is not even dry. That is one thing. Another thing is that transfers are a normal event for soldiers and government officials in general. But why are transfers in the military and Police Department reported? The press likes to print such stories. Actually, this is just a normal event.But it may cause readers to think that there is something behind the transfers.

Personally, if I were in the newspaper business, I would print only the important positions. I would not list all the positions. Some positions, such as teachers, do not need to be printed. The important positions can be printed in the social columns. Such things do not have to make the headlines.

WRITER VOICES FEAR OF RETURN TO SARIT-LIKE RULE

Bangkok MATICHON in Thai 21 Sep 82 p 5

[Article by Chaisiri Samutwanit: "Power, Propriety and Administration"]

[Text] Power, propriety and administration are all deeply connected with each other, particularly in a period in which the transfer of power, or strength of the country, is at a turning point.

Political scientists agree about many things concerning the transfer of power. They agree that it is of great importance for social order and security. But power changes depend on what apparatus is present to support the changes. And this apparatus depends on whether the concentration or dispersal of power is democratic or dictatorial.

It is for this reason that some political strategists have constantly affirmed that state power comes from the barrel of a gun and that administrative power comes from the propriety conferred by the people.

In short, if it is a matter of power, those who have forces will not be able to come to power without violence.They must use their forces to settle matters. Whether the forces are "domestic" or "outside" forces is another matter. But by nature, those who use force have only a single propriety in the activities in which their forces are their foundation in the struggle. For example, protecting the country from foreign enemies does not mean using the power derived from the forces to suppress the people, who are the ones who confer "propriety" in administration.

This is important because, at present, there is a high tide of desire to gain both military power and propriety on the part of those groups that also want to be administrators. This is entagling these two things. This mistake has been perpetuated ever since the military groups in the "trust the military to save you from danger" period held power one after another. And the trend in the perpetuation of this continues unendingly.

For this reason, the appointment of the RTA CINC is something that many groups give special attnetion to. And it has reached the point where people such as Maha Chamlong Srimuong who have reached a certain level of goodness have insinuated that the future of democracy depends on who becomes the RTA CINC. This means that this position with forces in place will determine the fate of national administration, with the largest body being the masses, or the owners of the country.

If this is assumed to be the case, it will not be possible to escape the vicious circle of political decline. But this does not mean that we cannot escape from this vicious circle of decline.

Machiavelli, a political scientist and the father of [modern] administration, once said that even though military power will determine the rise of administrative power in a country, it must be determined whether this power is "righteous" or not and whether it is oppressive power that causes trouble for the masses. He pointed out that, if it causes trouble and administration is corrupt, the people have the right to help virtuous poeple take up arms to topple this corrupt power and estalbish rightous forces and power.

Who Wants Sarit?

At present, many people are talking about a Sarit-like leader.But no one is interested in how Field Marshal Sarit rose to power. And is it true that Field Marshal Sarit had righteousness and that the people approved of his use of absolute power? The most important question is: What groups, or what type of people, want a person like Field Marshal Sarit?

Field Marshal Sarit rose to power mainly through the use of force.He was able to seize power from the former powerholders without violence.And he gave his word that he would support righteousness so that the country was governed in accord with the wishes of the people. But when he reached the top position [in the army], Field Marshal Sarit felt that he was "bigger" than Field Marshal Phibun and even "bigger" than the people of the country. And so he used this "bigness" to topple the old powerholders.

When Sarit came to power, he constantly used force. He issued Revolutionary Council Order 17, which in practice meant that he could do anything he wanted and he even made his own laws.

Field Marshal Sarit's use of power created a reign of terror. It was a show of power to get the people to bow down quietly. If anyone opposed him, he used the laws that he had made (or jungle law in political science terminology). He controlled everything.

Thus, Field Marshal Sarit governed the country by creating fear among the people. Because this fear was created by an administrator with military power, the people living under this administration had to submit without resisting.

There were people who had no desire to have jungle law or Field Marshal Sarit. There were such people. Those who felt that the country lacked law and order and that the laws were stipulated arbitrarily went and established an organization in the jungle. They challenged the state power and appealed to the people for support. It is certain that many people supported this group. And under the name of "the Communist Party of Thailand," they were able to build secure bases and create a broad united front that has endured for many years.

A society that is ruled through fear can be compared to a teapot that cannot release the steam when the temperature rises. This is because all the openings are shut tight.But when the jungle laws can no longer suppress the demands for democracy or for the right of self-rule, great numbers of people will gather forces to topple these jungle laws. And we have proof of Machiavelli's [statement] inthe 14 October affair.The student organization was greatly trusted by the masses concerning [the government's] uselessness and greed for state power. As the representatives of "righteousness," they were given great support.

Only a minority want a person like Field Marshal Sarit. If there are many such people, these people are selfish. They see only the immediate problems or think only about solving the immediate problems.For example, they want some resolute person to come control crime and violence or to control the evils. But this is a very minor matter when compared with entrusting all national power to just one person with the strongest military forces. This is the biggest political crime, and it is a very base thing for the soul of freedom and for humanity. And no one can prevent this.

What can people who do not want Sarit do?

In the past, those who did not want Sarit went and established a communist organization and mobilized the masses. They formulated a major plan, or policy, with the intention of assuring 10 freedoms when they came to power.

That period has passed. That group has become a "conservative" force that trusts the ideology of "experience" and that uses dictatorial principles in organization. And it has controlled the various groups so tightly that many people have split away and surrendered. The forces that oppose dictatorship have dwindled since this ideology has consumed itself and made everyone fearful. Things have declined to the point that there are rumors tha unprecedented numbers are repudiating this organization.

This is a very important factor. If the person with forces has the greatest strength at present, this is a factor in his group being able to handle the affairs of the country by putting all organizations under his contorl. He can fully control the lives of the masses by carrying out a coup or revolution. Propriety will not arise and those whom government officials refer to as "communists" will have a new lease on life. They will switch from the "2 lines, 3 tides" strategy to combining forces, and in the end they may build a large "nest."

Besides this, in the present situation the economic problem is a "stubborn" one.Even though the prime minister has openly announced that the rottenness of the outdated apparatus of the bureaucracy so that this is clear to people in general, in practice, this unchanged "stubbornness" is still present. Investors have turned away from this system and invested elsewhere. Even sugar mill owners, who are considered to be national-level investors, have had to announce that they are selling the mills and investing their money abroad for the sake of greater profits abroad.

The nation's path is to change the political, administrative and military structures. It is a joke to think that the military can play a creative role in building a new structure while the civilian organizations are retreating. They are more interested in building a foundation for their own political parties than they are in [building] a foundation for the people. The Social Action Party, which has said that it will build a mass party, has no chance of defeating the civilian organizations that the military has used for many years.

Those who have no need for Sarit or Sarit-like people must be disciplined. From discipline, they can create a system and from this system they can build an organization to set goals to achieve a perfect democracy. They must link up with the movement to develop political parties. Those who are standing alone must join a political party in order to change the political parties from cliques to parties for protecting the people as much as possible. Because the political parties established in order to administer the country are different from the military's organizations. The military's organizations were established only in order to fight and defend the country. They were not established in order to make it possible for some groups to mobilize [the organizations] in order to turn the country over to someone with forces.

Those who are sad and discouraged can no longer bear only discoragement. Those who love freedom should enthusiastically build up bargaining power and change the administrative system that is encrusted with rust so that it serves the poeple and serves as a bargaining lever against the hidden organizations of the dictators if someone prepares to take power, even if it is 3 months or 6 months from now.

Don't give propriety to the dictators. Don't allow the dictators to take administrative control.

DEBATE CONTINUES OVER THAI-ASEAN ROLE IN KHMER COALITION

Bangkok PATINYA in Thai 20 Sep 82 pp 23-26

[Article: "The Formation of the Khmer Coalition -- Who Benefited?"]

[Text] At Ramkhamhaeng University on the evening of 25 August, the Ramkhamhaeng University Student Organization held a debate on the topic: "The Formation of the Khmer Coalition -- Who Benefited?" The debate was held on the SWP lawn. The knowledgeable people taking part in the debate included Professor Chaloemchai Phinruongnon, a professor in the Faculty of Political Science at Ramkhamhaeng University, Police Major General Chana Samutwanit, the last Thai ambassador to Kampuchea before Kampuchea fell, Mr Chatchawan Chomphudaeng, a former MP from Roi Et who belonged to the New Force Party, and Mr Somchai Chottikhut, the editor of PATINYA. Mr Wiraphong Numwong, the president of the Ramkhamhaeng University student body, moderated the debate. The debate attracted much interest from students, government officials and the mass media. Before these knowledgeable people began debating, the moderator recited a short poem appropriate to the subject of the debate:

"The custom of beating a snake may bring trouble later on. Regardless of whether a crocodile lives in deep water or a tiger lives in the jungle, they are still fierce. If you capture the enemy commander and do not kill him, later on the enemy will become very powerful."

Erawan: The Khmer Government House

Professor Chaloemchai began the debate by saying that the "Khmer coalition government was formed on 22 June 1982 with the support of several groups." He stressed that "actually, it should not be called the tripartite Khmer coalition. It should be called the 4-group or 5-group Khmer coalition. Even though the fourth and fifth groups are not really Kampucheans, they are 'artificial' Kampucheans who supported the formation of the coalition and made it a reality. These groups are Asean, of which Thailand was the prime mover, China and one other non-communist country. Its deadly enemy is the Heng Samrin group, which is receiving weapons and war materials from Vietnam and which is being managed by the Soviet Union." Professor Chaloemchai also said that "both Thailand and Asean have benefited greatly from the formation of the Khmer coalition. But there are also great disadvantages for Thailand and Asean as the prime movers in the formation of this coalition. It is probably true, as peole say, that the Erawan Hotel is more the Government House of the Khmer Coalition Government than it is a hotel since it is used to hold the conferences of the cabinet of the coalition government. And Thailand has openly played the part of the prime mover by frequently arranging conferences in Bangkok." "Thailand and Asean have openly revealed their part in the formation of the Khmer coalition and have given strong support even though their policy called for remaining neutral. I think that this poses a great danger for the future." Professor Chaloemchai also said that "if the Khmer coalition continues to exist for any length of time, the Khmer Rouge (Pot Pot) will swallow the other Khmer groups and then establish a communist party. This will benefit China greatly. China was the one that exerted great influence on the formation of the Khmer coalition and it will benefit greatly in the future."

"As for the United States, I think that its policy is similar to that of Asean's. Or it stipulated the policy for Asean. We can see that the United States is giving weapons to Thailand and it has held joint military maneuvers with Thailand. Vietnam is very unhappy about this. Because Vietnam fought a long war against the United States, it knows the real 'nature' of the United States. As for the Soviet Union, it does not stand to gain much here. This is for the short-term . For the long-term, things must be reanalyzed."

Thailand United the Three Khmer Groups: a Bitter Policy

"At present, the forces opposing Vietnam are very strong, which is very bad for Vietnam and the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union must give more and more aid to Vietnam in order to save the Heng Samrin group. I think that it is the Kampuchean people who will benefit or lose the most since the war has broken out in their country and the Kampuchean people have to fight each other. And I think that they will benefit very little from this dispute, just as was the case in Lebanon."

Professor Chaloemchai said in conclusion that "concerning Thailand's policy concerning the Khmer coalition, we now think that it is the best policy and that it will bring great benefits. But in another 4-5 years or even 10 years, this policy may be the most bitter policy ever recorded in the history of Thailand. It is like the time the Nazi Party felt that its policy of invading other countries was the best policy. But later on, Germany learned what a bitter policy it was.

Following this, Police Major General Chana discussed the matter of Vietnam supporting Heng Samrin's invasion of Kampuchea. He said that "this was because Kampuchea is a small country. It has only 7 million people. This small country does not have capabilities. But the reason for their fighting each other concerns the two big powers, that is, Russia and Red China. These two great powers are each backing their own side.

Police Major General Chana: Support the Khmer Coalition

Police Major General Chana said that "concerning the formation of the coalition government as was announced, it is generally thought that they formed this coalition in order to oppose Vietnam. But behind this, Sihanouk has said that the Khmer coalition cannot defeat Vietnam and that these Khmer groups united in order to show the world that the Kampucheans can still unite to fight and that the Kampuchean people have not been annihilated. They are thus waging a guerrilla war and they want the people of the world to use politics and economics in order to compel Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea. And I think in all fairness that our playing the role of prime mover in this was proper. Those who like to cover up things should be criticized. For example, Ramkhamhaeng University students went and asked questions but were not given an answer. If it had been me, I would have answered in order to clear up things." In conclusion, Police Major General Chana said that "no conclusions can be made yet. It is the Kampucheans who are benefiting the most at present. Because when the three groups united, each group received support from various countries. I think that the government did the right thing in this matter. The clever people in the United Nations agree. And Thailand will benefit in both the short-term and the long-term. As for Vietnam, I do not think that it has the capabilities to fight Thailand. It has only the capabilities to invade Kampuchea.

The next person to speak was Mr Chachawan, who began by saying that the "United States wants to block the communists, including both Red China and Russia, because it knows that if the communists succeed in invading [us], they will continue on into Malaysia and the Pacific front, where the United States has drawn the line. Another thing is that, concerning Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations, the number of those who are against [Democratic Kampuchea] has constantly increased. Also, Vietnam is the enemy of China and, at present, China has been surrounded by Russia. The United States is unhappy about this. The United States has a good friend and that friend is Thailand. Thus, Thailand has had to follow the policies of the United States and prohibit trade with Indochina. This has resulted in losses for Thailand. Even though this is Asean's policy, implementing such a foreign policy must also depend on the interests of the country.

The Thai Minister of Foreign Affairs: As If Kampuchea Immediately Rose

"Sihanouk was not welcomed by the Kampuchean people. And Sihanouk has said that he is not ready to fight. This is interesting. I think that, regardless of who wins in Kampuchea, Kampuchea will not be free. Another matter of interest is that, if Heng Samrin defeats the Khmer coalition, what attitude will the Heng Samrin group take toward Thailand, which played a prominent role in the formation of the Khmer coalition? And if the Khmer coalition is defeated, the Heng Samrin forces will pursue them across the border into Thailand to crush them and so there will be border clashes. This will be very bad for Thailand. These days, I often look at the face of the minister of foreign affairs and see the face of a Kampuchean. And the more pictures that are taken of him, the more he looks like a Kampuchean," said Mr Chachawan earnestly admidst pounding rain.

What Has Thailand Gained: Go Ask the Minister of Foreign Affairs

"I conclude that Thailand has benefited. Vietnam has certainly benefited because it has scolded Thailand. Asean has benefited. China has benefited because it has been able to spread its influece in Thailand. And Thailand has benefited. But as for the long-term, I am not sure whether the United States will benefit. Before the Khmer colaition was formed, the United States could not deny that it was behind the efforts to form a Khmer coalition as it wanted. As for Russia, at present, it has suffered some losses. But in the future, if the Khmer coalition is driven out, Russia will benefit greatly because it will cooperate with Vietnam in carrying on things. But Kampuchea itself will not benefit by the formation of this coalition. Kampuchea is the unlucky one. It is the battlefiled for the great powers and a bargaining chip for the interests of others. And the most unfortunate ones are the Kampuchean people, whose leaders have all fallen under the influence of the great powers and used the name of the Kampuchean people in order to preserve their own interests and base of power on the inducements of the great powers in the backbround." As for Thailand, Mr Chachawan said that "today, it may benefit. But for the future, go ask the prime minister and the minister of foreign affairs." Concerning this, Mr Chachawan said that "if I say more than this, they will call me a child who does not know anything at all but who just wants to say something. Thus, I will not say anything more than this. If anything needs further clarification, it should be the minister of foreign affairs who points out what the advantages and disadvantages are. He can clarify this and go into greater detail."

Mr Comchai Chottikun, the editor of PATINYA, was the last one to speak. Admidst a steady downpour of rain, before he began his formal presentation, Mr Somchai said that "I would like to express my great joy at seeing our students take an interest in the problems outside the university. These appear to be distant problems and matters that the administrators are involved in. But they are matters that will concern our lives in the near future since they affect the survival of the country and may turn the nation's history in a different direction."

Who Gained By Uniting the Three Khmer Factions?

Concerning the formation of the Khmer coalition, Mr Somchai said that the other speakers had already said almost everything that he had planned to say and that he would emphasize the things that Thailand would gain from this. He said that the "formation of the Khmer coalition does not concern just the small countries like Thailand. It concerns all the great power countries that have made plans to compete for power. We are like a pawn on a chessboard that is used to protect its lord, meaning the great powers." Mr Somchai said that the "target of the great powers is not Thailand alone. They are also looking at the Strait of Malacca, which is the target of those great powers that want to expand their influence in this region in order to strangle their enemies. But at present, none of the great powers can do this and so they are supporting countries and getting them to fight each other in order to sap the will of the other." "Vietnam is the agent of the Soviet Union. Pol Pot, or Khieu Samphan, is the agent of China. The agents of the United States are Thailand and some of the other Asean countries." Mr Somchai said that the "government views Vietnam as a great enemy that has invaded a neighboring country. At the same time, it views China as a trustworthy friend since China has said that it will help Thailand if Vietnam invades Thailand." Mr Somchai made the criticism that "it isn't known whether they will help the government of General Prem or whether they will help Mr Prasit Taphienthong (CPT). Vietnam is indeed our enemy. But at present, it does not pose a danger to us. The country that can harm us now is China, which is supporting the CPT." Even though Vietnam wants to be our enemy, it is not felt that they can do anything to us. Our military forces are equal to theirs and so we can defend oursleves. But their economy is in shambles. And why should we fear an attack by Vietnam since, even though our economy is in poor shape, it is in much better shape than that of Vietnam.

Thailand Is Humanitarian and Peaceful and It Has a Buffer State

Concerning being humanitarian, Mr Somchai said that "I agree with this point too. But [our priority] must be to preserve the Thai race and not the Khmer race as Thailand is doing these days in citing the resolutions of Asean and the United Nations. Actually, Asean is taking our rice and other goods of ours and selling them. It is Asean that will benefit greatly from the formation of the Khmer coalition. And Asean will get the advantage of us too since we are so absorbed in preserving our honor. And Mr Somchai also said that the United Nations does not have any capabilities. The various countries in the world do not respect its resolutions. The resolutions go against the interests of these countries and so they do not act in accord with the resolutions. An example is Lebanon. Mr Somchai also said that "there is no way to solve the problems peacefully because weapons are being sent to the various groups and so there will be fighting. Kampuchea is like a stick of sugarcane that has entered the mouth of the elephant. There is no way that Vietnam will 'spit out' Kampuchea. Our only task is to keep them from swallowing us too. But we are dreaming if we expect to pry open the mouth using peaceful means." As for using Kampuchea as a buffer state, Mr Somchai said that "that state is on the Thai border. Whenever something happens, they will flee here. And if the Khmer coalition wins, the group that will take power in the end will be the Khmer Rouge. The Khmer Rouge will clash with us again."

Develop and Build Internal Security

Mr Somchai said in conclusion that we must hold to the interests of the country by having our country remain really neutral.We must not get involved in the Indochina problem, regardless of the matter. We do not have to recognize one faction as the representative of Kampuchea. Let them fight among themselves. When the fighting is over and one side has emerged as the leader of the country, we can recognize that group. There are probably many people who feel that Heng Samrin will win. Concerning this, Mr Somchai said that "I don't care who wins. I am not interested in who wins. I want the war to end quickly. By not getting involved, we will not have to go fight them. We can engage in trade with them and use the money to develop the country and the military. Before they can win, we will have strengthened ourself. When the war has ended and things are quiet, other countries will come invest here. Tourism will increase. We can use the money to develop and increase our internal security. This is better than using the money to support this and that person, thinking that this will bring us a little honor. This will give the advantage to Vietnam and allow it to come to the border. We can act like West Germany. Many East Germans have fled into West Germany." Mr Somchai pointed out that Thailand should do what West Germany has done. Otherwise, we will become their slaves. If we continue to carry out a policy like the present one and continually get involved in the affairs of these countries, if we are invaded, other countries will just feel that we are getting what we deserve. We have implemented this policy and have not gained anything. As for what we have obtained, the Kampucheans are looking for a way to get us to fight in their place. China and the CPT have a chance to restore their position. Vietnam is experiencing some troubles but in the long-term, it may be able to turn the situation around. The United States will benefit from us too, but we will not gain anything in return.

Yes. From this debate, you probably know who has benefited from the formation of the Khmer coalition. Since this is the case, will Thailand continue to carry out a policy of being the slave of the Khmer coalition?

GEN HAN INTERVIEWED ON BANK CONTROVERSY, FOURTH ARMY MATTERS

Bangkok SIAM MAI in Thai 25 Sep 82 pp 28-32

[Interview with Lieutenant General Han Linanon, the commanding general of the Fourth Army Area; date and place not specified]

[Text] [Question] To date, no high-ranking military officer has ever spoken about banking matters, even though this matter has caused the people much trouble. What do you feel about having brought up this subject?

[Answer] My bringing up this matter stems from my contact with the people in Betong. One evening, I invited a group of Moslems, or religious leaders, to meet with a group of Chinese merchants in Betong. The Chinese are engaged in the rubber purchasing business while the Moslems are the ones who tap the resin. I wanted them to meet each other and get to know each other. I wanted to eliminate the misunderstandings between the Thais of Chinese extraction and the Thai Moslems. These misunderstandings have given rise to a terrorist movement along the border. Disorder has arisen because of these two groups.

When the two groups met, they discussed things in general and gained a better understanding of each other. But then they began discussing economic subjects. The Chinese are the wealthy ones while the Thai Moslems are mostly poor and they are mostly workers on rubber plantations. At one point, they said that during the season for extracting the resin, they collect much resin but they cannot sell it for a very high price. This is because when they try to sell it, prices are kept low. They asked that the Chinese, who are the ones who purchase the resin, pay higher prices for the resin. The Chinese merchants sympathized with the Moslems, but they said that they normally have only a limited amount of cash to make purchases during periods when yields are large. Suppose, for example, that the resin is normally sold for 14 baht per kilogram. But in seasons when yields are high, cash purchase prices are driven downward to only 10 or 12 baht per kilogram. But if they [the Moslems] want them to pay the original price, they can give them a check, which they must wait 3 to 4 months to cash. This is why the Moslems have complained and asked that a way be found to help them.

The Chinese merchants sympathized but they said that they did not know what to do. To pay in cash, they must borrow from the banks and the banks will not give them a loan. This is the reason that I thought about this matter and brought it up. But actually, concerning the banks, we have known about this for a long time. But until then, the time for me to speak up had not come. Thus, when the Betong affair arose, I spoke out about this. I did not think that this was to be a major affair.But after I spoke out, I felt that people throughout the country were interested. No one dared to say anything about this. How could they? Many of our senior people are bank presidents. Everyone knows about this but no one can speak out because the banks have made them bank presidents and all of them have interests in the banks.

Thus, concerning this, they have not thought about the suffering of the people. However, I hold to the government's policy. Policy 66/1980 clearly states that dictatorship and injustice must be eliminated. I hold to government policy 66/1980 in carrying out my duties in the south. Or this [can be considered as] a part of doing things in accord with the Tai Rom yen Policy. And so I had to speak out about this matter. This was in harmony with government policy 66/1980 and it was in accord with the Tai Rom Yen Policy.

But I know that the banks intend to correct things. Or, some people have said that I do not know anything, that I do not know what I am talking about and that I haven't studied this matter. But I gauged things from the feelings of the people before saying what the banks are like. Why aren't our commercial banks like those in other countries? I think that our banks have taken on a role in trade activities. And difficulties have arisen now. Thus, concerning what I said, I want to affirm that I spoke out in accord with the principles of the path of struggle to defeat the communists. But I certainly did not advocate taking over the banks. Nationalizing the banks is what the communists would do. I hold to Policy 66. The interests of the various classes must be coordinated.

I would like the wealthy people to help. But this does not mean helping by solving just the immediate problems. Using military terminology, it does not mean providing tactical help but rather providing strategic help. That is, they must support long-term projects. They must not simply distribute things or take only temporary action. Helping in a strategic way means helping them to be able to stand on their own. The money they earn based on the stipulated daily wage must be sufficient for them to support their families.Everything must be related economically. I think that if the government takes an interest in Policy 66/1980, the problems facing the country will disappear. The economic and social problems facing the country will be solved simultaneously.

[Question] Concerning the matter of the banks, when you said that the problems must be solved strategically, how should things be solved in the long-term?

[Answer] When you ask the question like that, I don't know how to answer. It is a matter of technique and of administration. Experts must be used to help solve the problems. Those directly responsible must think about how to solve the problems. The Ministry of Finance must take responsibility. Don't make the people have to pay high interest rates when they borrow money to make investments. Don't let the banks get involved in everything. Today, the banks are involved in everything and so they are the ones who make all the profits.

[Question] [Would you say something] about lowering interest rates on savings and loans?

[Answer] They have announced that rates are being lowered 1 percent. But people have cheered just a 1 percent drop. Some investors borrow as much as 20 to 30 million baht and so this is a large reduction for them. I think that the banks should reduce the rates even more, just as banks abroad have done. I have learned from those who have studied this matter. They have said that foreign banks have lowered interests rates more than this, although I do not know how much they have lowered the rates. The rates should really be lowered because it is time that we coordinated the profits of the banks.They must be willing to lower rates for the benefit of our society. They must help so that we can all survive. The commercial banks will then be real servants of the people and not the servants of their own groups.

[Question] Concerning communist suppression operations, at present, are there any operations underway?

[Answer] We recently completed major military operations, that is, operations 9 and 11. As a continuation of these operations, we must eliminate the liberation forces of the CPT throughout the south, from Chumphon and Ranong to the border. And along the border are the Malaysian communist guerrillas and the bandit terrorists. We must eliminate them too. We have scored successes in destroying various secure bases. The liberation army built these bases many years ago but we have now destroyed them.

These are successes that have erased our neighbor's suspicion that we are supporting the Malaysian communist guerrillas. That is, Malaysia has constantly suspected us of supporting the Malaysian communist guerrillas. Actually, we have never supported them, but things took place along the Thai border with Malaysia, the target. And up to now we have never been in a position to take action against them. And what is important is that this group has received support from Malaysian Chinese who came and settled down in Betong. They have provided support. But the Chinese whom I have met in Betong, who are all Thais now, have said that they do not want to provide any support but that they have been forced to do so in order to protect themselves.

But even though the military operations have been concluded, we are not stopping. This is the last month in this fiscal year. September is the last month. But our national army, in which the forces of the Fourth Army Area are the main forces in the struggle, will continue to work. Our forces are beginning to carry on operations in the plains. This is no secret. I can say so openly. We are active. The only thing is that we are selecting the places to carry on operations in accord with the intelligence reports. The target of the operations in the plains is to search for the liberation army forces, who are now operating like guerrillas. They fled to live among the villagers after we seized their camps. This is true for both the Malaysian communist guerrillas and the bandit terrorists. In general, the communist terrorists have gone to live in the plans and are living in villages that support them. Our goal is to search these villages and search for strangers based on the documents we have. We are also searching for weapons and local gangsters. We are doing everything that we can. This will give the people in the villages greater security. The Tai Rom Yen policy will make things safer in the south. There may still be kidnappings and demands for ransom, but we are solving the problem. We are using military and police forces to provide protection.

I once told civilian-police-military soldiers that when they read about kidnappings and robberies or receive reports about such things, they should not let the police take all responsibility for such things. We must all work together. The military must take the lead because the military can accomplish everything.

[Question] As for the Malaysian communist guerrillas, it is said that we have not suppressed them because they are a help to us in our fight against the bandit terrorists.

[Answer] That is what they think. But I do not agree. I do not think that illegal forces will be able to bear arms in our country. Having illegal forces here, whose target is Malaysia, has caused misunderstandings between Thailand and Malaysia. When the Malaysian communist guerrillas came into being, the bandit terrorists arose also along with the supporting factors. Since people had already instigated the matter of separating the territory, the bandit terrorists came into being. They have operation bases in Malaysia. Things were just right for them. The bandit terrorists who are planning to separate our country are living in Malaysia. The Malaysian communist guerrillas, whose target is Malaysia, live in Thailand. Both the bandit terrorists and the Malaysian communist guerrillas are bad for us. I thus decided to destroy the Malaysian communist guerrillas. The destruction of the Malaysian communist guerrillas shows that we are sincere toward Malaysia. Regardless of what people think, I do not want to criticize anything in retrospect. Since we have attacked the Malaysian communist guerrillas, they are finished. At present, more and more Malaysian communist guerrillas are surrendering.

Concerning our political activities, once we destroy the Malaysian communist guerrillas, the danger of Moslems being harmed by the Malaysian communist guerrillas will disappear. Thus, there will be no reason for the bandit terrorists to expand. There will be no reason for third countries to support the bandit terrorists and so their support will decline. Actually, the bases of the bandit terrorists are located in Malaysia. Since we have taken this action, we can tell them [Malaysia] to take action too. For example, at the latest conference, we did not say anything but we felt hurt. Actually, we can claim that in Tat Bai District we killed 12 armed people who had crossed over from their side. At Ban Ba Rai, during the time Lieutenant Colonel Sarot was working in Narathiwat, people crossed over and we shot them and seized their weapons. They also had Malaysian military uniforms. We did not say anything about this out of politeness. But they criticized us. Thus, from now on, I will certainly criticize them too. We must tell them where the bandit terrorists have bases. Previously, we did not say anything. But they have criticized us and this is something we never expected.

[Question] Will you give up your position with the Fourth Army Area?

[Answer] Concerning this, if I am transferred somewhere else, someone else will come and continue the work I have done here. This includes continuing to carry out the Tai Rom Yen policy, which is now a policy of the people. As for how things will be carried out, all commanding officers understand this. The young officers understand the problems. Thus there will not be any difficulties if someone takes command here. The present path is the correct one. I think that we will continue to follow this course.

[Question] Concerning the structure of the military, what elements do you think need to be improved, particularly concerning the annual transfers?

[Answer] Concerning the structure of our military, we must have faith in those who carry out things. We must praise and reward those who do a good job. We must not reward seniority. Seniority must only be a factor when several people have done an equally good job. But people who have done nothing have been promoted every year. We are past that age. Doing things that way will destroy the military. These types of people prevent the good officers who have done a good job from gaining higher positions because the dead wood take up all the positions. This is a problem that will determine how efficient the military is. It depends on the appointments. That is, people must be appointed based on their past achievements, not because of close friends or seniority.

[Question] Supreme Command Headquarters has proposed making some changes in Supreme Command Headquarters. That is, they have proposed making the commanders in chief of the armed services deputy supreme commanders. What is your opinion about this?

[Answer] I think that there will be greater unity. That is, there will be greater solidarity, if people don't think too much (laughs).

[Question] And the disadvantages?

[Answer] Those who thought they would be promoted to deputy supreme commander will not be promoted since the positions are already taken.They may become dissatisfied.

[Question] Will this increase the power of the supreme commander?

[Answer] If there is unity, there is power (laughs).

[Question] Is there any chance that the officers with real ideals will establish a political party?

[Answer] How could they do that. Aren't they prohibited from doing so? We are regular soldiers.

[Question] What if the law is changed?

[Answer] Changed in what way? People would probably not approve of soldiers forming a political party. It will be sufficient if there is a democratic spirit in the military. Because if the military is dictatorial, it will support a government that is dictatorial. Thus, we must train our officers to have democratic ideals. If the military is democratic, it will not allow dictators to rule the country. There would be a fight. This is an important principle. Thus, the officers must be persudaded to have a democratic spirit and to cling to the principles of democracy. As for the national army, we have definite ideals an duties.

[Question] Concerning the new way of thinking in the military, such as the idea of the national army, is this being accepted by the military?

[Answer] Much progress has been made. The young officers understand the idea of the national army. Never mind the older officers; they will soon be retiring. Some people have adjusted and accept this but others are stubborn. Most of these people are very right-ring in their thinking. They are not very smart. But they will be retiring soon. But the military can continue to function with the young officers.

[Question] Concerning the present prime minister, do you think he is suited to bringing real democracy to the cuntry?

[Answer] Do I think he is suitable? The fact is that he loves democracy very much. He has seen the suffering of the people. But the various obstacles have not all been overcome because the atmosphere in the recent past has been one of dictatorship. We should give him another opportunity. Whenever he has his own way, his own ideals and ideas and his own independent policy, it is then that he will greatly benefit the country. If he uses the ideas or policies of some political party whose aim is to use him, he will not be able to bring democracy to the country. But if he has his own policies, he will certainly bring democracy to the country.

NEPAL'S KING, FINANCE MINISTER MEET WITH EEC'S THORN

BK081511 Hong Kong AFP in English 1445 GMT 8 Nov 82

[Text] Kathmandu, Nov 8 (AFP)--Visiting European Economic Community's (EEC) President Gaston E. Thorn called on Nepalese King Birendra at the Royal Palace here today for talks which centered on Nepal's ties with the EEC.

Earlier Mr Thorn had 40 minutes of formal talks with Nepalese Finance Minister Dr Yadav Prasad Pant during which he announced that the EEC had agreed to "substantially increase" its economic assistance to Nepal.

"In view of the food shortage in Nepal this year, the EEC has agreed in principle to provide an additional 12,000 metric tons of rice. This commitment however is subject to the approval of EEC council members," Dr Pant told the press after the meeting.

The EEC has already granted Nepal 3,400 metric tons of rice a few months ago to meet a food shortage.

On long-term aid to boost of Nepalese farm output, Kathmandu has sought EEC's help to construct godowns and warehouses that would facilitate food storage in food-short districts.

"The EEC's response to other areas of cooperation was quite favourable... More assistance for improving the quality of exportable goods was agreed in principle," said Dr Pant.

He indicated that EEC aid in establishing a medicinal herb plant to boost exports of processed herbs to overseas market was also discussed, adding that a final decision on this project would be studied by experts.

Also discussed was possible cooperation in irrigation, agriculture water supply and training facilities, Dr Pant said.

He noted that the head of the new Delhi-based EEC office was expected to visit Nepal shortly to look into prospects of cooperation in this area, he added.

Mr Thorn arrived here Sunday after an official visit to India. He is scheduled to leave Kathmandu tomorrow.

CRITIQUE OF STATEMENTS BY BEGUM NASIM WALI KHAN

Karachi JASARAT in Urdu 20 Sep 82 pp 2, 7

[Commentary by Zahid Hussain: "Reporter's Diary: Begum Nasim Wali Khan Is Not Clear on Many Issues; Activity in the City Dies Down After Sunset"]

[Text] Karachi nowadays is the victim of fear, terror and rumors. Zuhur-ul-Hassan Bhopali was assassinated; the body of Elias Siddiqi, the companion of hijacker Tippoo and the student leader of the People's Student Federation, has been identified. The police have not yet succeeded in catching the murderers. Shots were fired at the car of Kuwait's consul general in Bahadurabad; the culprit escaped and the consul general returned home. Iranian and Iraqi students clashed in Karachi university and shots were fired. A telephone call warning of a bomb in the Habib bank plaza building created confusion; the building was searched, but no bomb was found. The number of burglaries is no longer climbing, although reports of burglaries continue to be received from different parts of the city. Newspaper offices receive calls asking why the reports of robberies in various parts of the city are not published. Rumors continue, creating fear and anxiety. The streets are quickly deserted as night falls; traffic decreases and snack bars and late-night restaurants have no c-stomers. Hustle and bustle in the city ends at dusk. Under these donditions, police activity continues. Scooters, motorcycles and cars are searched; papers are examined and police raids in various localities continue. They raided the house of the prominent councilman, Dr Athar Qurayshi, against which the defunct Karachi Jamiat-e Islami's Amir Mahmud Azam Faruqi protested strongly in a crowded emergency press conference. He demanded that action be taken against those responsible and asserted that the police had no justification for this late night action which was nothing less than "police terrorism" and the harassment of honorable individuals without any proof of illegal activity. The authorities continue to maintain silence regarding the raid. They have offered no explanation and no action has been taken against anyone.

Begum Nasim Wali Khan arrived in Karachi a few days ago. She met reporters on the evening of 18 September at Abid Zubairi's residence. When the reporters started to ask questions, Begum Nasim said, "Abid Sahib brought me here to "meet the press,' but this looks like a press conference."

Begum Nasim Wali Khan said that the country was divided into four parts and the residents of one province were prevented from traveling to another province. Whether fortunately or unfortunately, the time also came when travel outside Peshawar was restricted. She said, "There are countless problems ahead about which countless things can be said. But what you will write, what will be censored and how much will be added to the report, I cannot say. We have been tongue tied for so long that we have forgotten how to speak. There are no meetings, no speeches; everything has ended. There is neither politics nor a political course. There are restrictions everywhere." Begum Nasim was asked what she thought about the present conditions and what her prognosis was for the future. She replied, "It is dark, too dark to see anything. In this darkness, anything can happen at any time." After a pause she added, "The country is ruled by a single individual; all decisions revolve around him. There are no democratic organizations, no judiciary, no parliament, no administration and no press. Under such conditions, one cannot make predictions about the future." Begum Nasim Wali Khan was asked if the NDP had any program for remedying the situation. She answered, "The NDP is under a ban; we are a part of the MRD and we will consider the program in the meetings of the MRD." She acknowledged that the harmony and enthusiasm that existed among the members of the different parties comprising the PNA did not exist between the members of the NDP and the People's Party. The leadership got together, but gave no thought for ensuring cooperation among the lower level party members. Begum Wali Khan expressed opposition to the policy of violence in the country and described her party's pro-peace policy. It was brought to her attention that the People's Party was believed to be involved in the violent acts committed in the country. She replied, "We discern no such conndction. An organization outside the country called Al-Zulfiqar is believed to be involved in these acts. That organization has not claimed to be affiliated with the People's Party, nor has the People's Party claimed any connection with Al-Zulfiqar. If the People's Party should openly acknowledge that it was following a policy of violence, we would then either make them abandon the policy or dissociate ourselves from them." At this juncture, a lady reporter suggested that Begum Bhutto had already condemned the activities of Al-Zulfiqar. Begum Nasim Wali Khan said, "When Begum Bhutto has already condemned violence, how can we level these accusations at her?"

Begum Nasim Wali Khan forgot that Al-Zulfiqar's leader is Murtaza Bhutto, the son of Begum Nusrat Bhutto. From outside Pakistan, he has laid the foundation of a policy of violence. Begum Bhutto has never dissociated herself from her sons' subversive activities, nor has she announced that because of their activities, she condemned them and severed all connection with them in the traditional manner. How can anyone believe that Al-Zulfiqar is not connected spiritually and ideologically with the People's Party?

Begum Nasim Wali Khan was very circumspect in her statements about the MRD and said nothing worthy of note about Tahrik-e Istiqlal's attitude. She was similarly careful about her answers regarding the round talbe conference, non party elections and cooperation with Jamiat-e Islami. She said, "Mr Nurani wants to bring national leaders together to think of ways to rescue the country from the present situation. There is an existing alliance of different parties, namely, the MRD, for this purpose. Parties outside this alliance should come and talk to the alliance. "Regarding the round table conference, she said that MRD would make a decision if it received an invitation. Concerning nonparty elections, Begum Wali Khan said that the matter would be taken under consideration when elections were announced. She said that they had a long-standing friendship with Jamiat-e Islami; if the matter should come up in the future, NDP would not block Jamiat-e Islami's entry into the MRD. When she was asked as to when a movement would be started, she answered, "The people, not leaders, start movements. It is not a matter of minutes, hours or years. The people have to be prepared first, and a relationship established with them."

It seemed as though Begum Nasim Wali Khan was not clear on many issues, nor did she have a program in view other than the official one. This is what our politicians do; they talk endlessly on national issues, but do nothing. When it comes to practical politics and action, politicians have the final word: "Public opinion is not yet ready." At this meeting, Begum Nasim Wali Khan conveyed a similar impression.

PPP'S CLAIMED DISSOCIATION WITH AL-ZULFIQAR REFUTED

[Editorial: "The Sacrificial Altar of Politics"]

[Text] Begum Nasim Wali Khan has stated that it would be going too far to suggest that the People's Party was guilty of acts of violence. The Qaim-ul Zulfiqar organization claims responsibility for these acts from outside the country. [She said] that the Al-Zulfiqar organization never claimed affiliation with the People's Party nor had the People's Party claimed Al-Zulfiqar as one of its "own" and that Begum Bhutto had also condemned these violent acts.

We are wondering whether to call Begum Nasim's statement a wise oversight or criminal ignorance of the facts. We can only marvel at such innocence that cannot see the open ties between Al-Zulfiqar and the People's Party. At the time Begum Nasim Wali Khan was making this statement, newspapers inside and outside Pakistan were publishing the news that Murtaza Bhutto had called a meeting of People's Party members living outside Pakistan to draw up a plan of action for the People's Party in Pakistan. These reports also said that Murtaza Bhutto wants to take over the leadership of the People's Party. Following the publication of these reports, Begum Nusrat Bhutto did not even feel it necessary to announce that Murtaza Bhutto was in any way affiliated with the People's Party and that the meeting of the People's Party outside Pakistan that he had called was not connected with their People's Party. Begum Bhutto's condemnation of acts of violence is news to us. She must have whispered this statement to Begum Nasim Wali Khan, because the only statement of hers that appeared in the newspapers was the one in which she did not condemn violence but justified it on the grounds that such incidents are bound to happen as long as political freedom is denied.

Al-Zulfiqar's top subversive, Salamat-Ullah, alias Tippoo, gave a statement in Kabul, which was recorded and has been heard on the radio by the citizens of this country several times, in which he mentioned Mrs Nusrat Bhutto. We are surprised that even after this open acknowledgment by the Al-Zulfiqar subversives, Begum Nasim Wali Khan has failed to see any connection between the People's Party and Al-Zulfiqar. Only the other day, the confessions of three terrorists connected with Al-Zulfiqar, Niaz Ahmad, Fayaz and Mudsar, appeared in the newspapers in which they said that 2 years ago they went to Kabul because, being members of the People's Party, they feared arrest. During their stay in Kabul, they met with the Afghan leader at the time, Nur Mohammad Taraki, and the present leader, Babrak Karmal. They then established contacts with Murtaza Bhutto and joined the Al-Zulfiqar organization. When the Government of Pakistan started recalling Pakistanis from various Libayan camps, these individuals were sent to Libya to join these camps and return to Pakistan. After reaching Pakistan, they waited for an agreed period after which they were to carry out plans of subversion and terrorism; but they were arrested by the police before they could do so. They confessed that there were other members of their group among the Pakistanis brought back from Libya.

This statement acknowledges that these individuals were active members of the People's Party and that they joined Al-Zulfiqar after goint to Kabul. As for the statement that they "went to Kabul out of fear of arrest," it is a lie because if they had gone out of fear of imprisonment, they would not have returned after the establishment of the present government. The arrangement that emerges from this statement is that the People's Party there sends its members to Kabul where they are trained in subversion by Al-Zulfiqar and returned to Pakistan to start subversive activities here. It seems that Al-Zulfiqar is the branch of the People's Party that trains subversives. This is not the first time that these activities have been reported in the press; such reports have continued to surface not only in Pakistani papers but in newspapers all over the world which shows the open connection between the People's Party and Al-Zulfiqar.

Published reports about terrorist Elias Siddiqi, who was slain with Zuhur-ul-Hassan Bhopali, link him with the People's Party. He was the president of Urdu College's People's Student Federation. What is the People's Student Federation? It is a branch of the People's Party that works among students. It seems as though the examination of the background of every terrorist uncovers links with the People's Party. In spite of these facts, Begum Nasim Wali Khan still says that there is no connection between the People's Party and Al-Zulfiqar. She might believe in what she says, but the people cannot swallow such politics wholesale.

The participation in the MRD of Tahrik-e Istiqlal, the Pakistan Democratic Party, Muslim League and National Democratic Party, and the advocacy of the People's Party by the leaders of these parties, Khwaja Khair-Uddin, Malik Qasim and Begum Nasim Wali Khan, has led to great disappointment and suspicion not only among the people but also the members of these parties themselves. Many party members have not accepted the MRD. Begum Nasim Wali Khan herself acknoweldged this when she said, "The time has come to start a movement in the country, but movements cannot be started in minutes, hours or days. Public opinion has to be prepared first, because movements are started by the people, not by the leaders. It is necessary to create harmony among the members of the MRD parties. There is unity among the leaders, but the parties have not prepared their members for cooperation with the People's Party members."

This statement shows clearly that the MRD is an alliance of only the politicians, not of the members of the participating parties. The reason for the aloofness of the members from the alliance is that these individuals work among the people, and tley cannot offer any justification for the alliance with the People's Party of those same parties that began a movement among the people against this same People's Party. The people cannot start a movement at the request of an alliance that contains the People's Party--a party engaged openly in terrorist and traitorous activities. According to this analysis, those leaders who have formed an alliance with the People's Party and joined the MRD, and now insist on remaining in this alliance, are not only preparing for political suicide, but have also created the most serious obstacles in the path of the efforts to restore democracy in the country. They have disappointed the people and engendered repugnance towards politics.

As long as these parties do not acknowledge their mistake, leave the MRD and rescue themselves from this morass, the people will not listen to them and the country will not move toward a political solution. We think that the political leaders who have committed this foolishness, without taking their members into their confidence, lack the moral courage to confess their political error. It would be a better idea if the party members courageously tried to rescue their parties and their leaders from the MRD morass. There would then be some hope of finding a political solution and restoring political activity. The MRD platform is nothing less than a political sacrificial altar. The sacrifice of the country's politics and its democratic future on this alter should be prevented.

COMMENTARY ON DIVISIONS WITHIN MRD

[Commentary by Raouf Tahir: "Lahore Diary: Whether for Medical Treatment or for Pleasure, Communist Landlords Always Head for the United States or Europe"]

[Text] From the beginning, Pakistan's experience with socialism has been tragic. When Pakistan was created, the patrons of socialism and socialists were major landowners, like Mian Iftikhar-Uddin. When socialism became a public slogan in 1970, the leader of the movement was another major landowner who held 36,000 acres of land. The average socialist here who gained "class consciousness" through socialism strove to raise himself from the lower class to the middle class and from the middle to the upper class. One could name numerous individuals who acquired progressiveness when they were members of the oppressed class. But gradually, as a result of "class struggle," their fortunes changed and they left the lower class to join the middle class.

A greatcontrast appears between the slogans and the actions of these Pakistani socialists. Whenever communist land owners have needed medical treatment, they have headed for American or Europe; and when they have felt inclined toward sightseeing, they have not gone to their favorite Red paradise but have headed for the so-called oppressive capitalist societies of Europe or the United States. Whenever they found conditions in their own country "unfavorable" they chose as their refuge the United States or a European country. This article was inspired by the news that Shaheen Haneef Ramay, wife of the former progressive chief minister of Punjab, Haneef Ramay, is visiting Lahore. Her daughter has enrolled in Fatima Jinnah medical college and Mrs Ramay will be returning to the United States. Mr Haneef Ramay nowadays resides in his very spacious and magnificent house in California and owns a huge 10-pump gasoline station on Madrid Avenue. In this self-imposed exile, he is also a part-time lecturer at Gerkley. He has abandoned liberalism for Sufism and has written a two-volume work on the subject that he is translating into English. He finds time for his long-time interest in painting and has no intention as yet of returning to his native country.

Dear reader! This is the same Haneef Ramay who, at one time, was a salaried publicity secretary of the late Ayub Khan's Convention League and used to sing the praises of his basic democracy. Then Ramay became a progressive savant and in Bhutto's administration became the minister of the treasury and later the chief minister. During this time, he announced the glad tidings at public gatherings, which in those days were the prerogative of only the People's Party, and in the Punjab assembly that "Asia's brow will be adorned with the vermilion of socialism." But he then left the ministerial office "in great disgrace," as the famous couplet goes. For a time, under the protection of Muslim League landowners, he indulged in opposition politics; later, he formed his own political party (Musawat) [Equality Party] under the slogan of "Dal Roti" ["Bread and Soup"]. Nowadays, having given up the troubles of his "Dal Roti" phase, he is in American contemplating the problems of Sufism.

Regarding the MRD even the leaders who have now given it a permanent structural form have been saying from the beginning that this is not a political alliance but rather a "political declaration," because the political parties appearing on a single political platform under the name of MRD share no common values except the slogan of "restoration of democracy." They have differing points of view and different interests; and most important of all, only a few years ago, the MRD's Tahrik-e Istiqlal, Jumhuri Party, Muslim League (Khair-Uddin group), NDP and Jamiat-e Ulema-e Islam (Maulana Fazl-ur-Rahman group) were part of the Pakistan National Alliance that only a few years ago started a historical movement against the oppressive, cruel and undemocratic power of the People's Party, now a member of the MRD; and to ensure the success of that movement, this country's numerous mothers suffered beatings at the hands of the army. Thousands were imprisoned and many sacrificed their young lives.

This same Asghar Khan repeatedly said in public gatherings: "Let us in; when we come into office, we will hang Bhutto." One of the influential leaders of this same NDP,Wali Khan, said repeatedly after his release from the Hyderbad tribunal case that no one could release Bhutto because his actions had put him under God's arrest. After the end of the Bhutto period, the Muslim League's Khwaja Khair-Uddin would tell stories on the television about the cruelties he had suffered and would cry and try to make others cry.

In view of these facts, the political alliance of these parties with the People's Party would have been a regrettable action that the average member would never have accepted. Hence, all the parties of the MRD adopted the attitude that theirs was not a political allinace but a political declaration.

Then it gradually became clear that the People's Party wanted to turn the MRD into a political alliance and seize its leadership. The Tahrik-e Istiqlal people detected the "plot" a long time ago; ehnce, they remained adamant from the beginning that the MRD should not become a permanent organization, although it Asghar Khan had been free, Tahrik-e Istiqlal might also have relented somewhat. But Asghar Khan remains under house arrest (for the last 1,000 days). He and his friends understand well that if MRD ever becomes a permanent organization, its leadership in all probability will go to Nusrat Bhutto of the People's Party.

A few days before the announcement regarding MRD's permanent secretariat, Mushir Pesh Imam, with the permission of the government, met Asghar Khan in Abbotabad. According to the reports we have received, it was decided at this meeting that Tahrik-e Istiqlal should remain adamant on its previous position.

According to informed sources at the defunct Jumhuri Party, the catalyst for the move to establish permanent secretariat of the MRD was Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan's letter, which he had written to his party's acting president, Mr Zainul Abidin, who placed the letter before a high-level meeting of the MRD Nawabzada wrote in his letter: "I do not think that the present leadership of the MRD, which is devoid of political insight and lacks decision-making strength, will try to make any decisions aimed at changing the present conditions." Regarding Tahrik-e Istiqlal, Nawabzada wrote, "These people do not want the present situation to change in any way."

He also wrote in his letter: "A strong public movement as well as a vibrant and dynamic leadership is needed to change present conditions. But the situation here is such that even after a year and a half since its creation, MRD has not yet succeeded in establishing a permanent secretariat nor is there any arrangement for mutual contact among the members. During this time, there have been provincial organizations. There is no arrangement even for keeping records of the meetings. In view of such a lack of seriousness, how can a movement be started to change the present military government?"

Informed sources state that Nawabzada's letter prompted the decision to give the MRD a permanent strucure. Nasrullah Khan, who earlier had been slinging barbs at Air Marshall Asghar Khan over the "united fronts' policy," because of which Asghar Khan was allergic to Nawabzada, once again was able to defeat Asghar Khan and have an important decision taken contrary to the latter's views.

Tahrik-e Istiqlal leaders reacted strongly against the complete disregard of their views in the mo-e to establish a permanent secretariat for the MRD Tahrik's acting leader, Sayyed Munir Shah, not only termed the move a deviation from the MRD's basic principles but also announced that Tahrik would choose its own line of action. Sayyed Munir Shah did not stop there, but in his press conference he released to the press the letter Air Marshall Asghar Khan had written to the army during the '77 movement against Bhutto in which he had discussed in detail and with great feeling the injustices of the Bhutto administration. According to Tahrik-e Istiqlal circles, the reason for releasing the letter at this time was to hold up a mirror to the past actions of the People's party and to express the fact that they could sign a "political declaration" with a political party with such a shameful past but could not enter into a permanent alliance with it.

In addition to expressing their opposition through statements to the press, the leaders of Tahrik-e Istiqlal took a practical step to show their opposition to the decision by suspending their activities in the MRD and summoned an emergency meeting of the working committee to prepare a plan of action for the future.

There are strong differences within Tahrik-e Istiqlal over Tahrik's continued relationship with MRD. Like Karachi's Nafees Siddiqi, Etezaz Ahsan here in Lahore enthusiastically supports cooperation with the People's Party, whereas other leaders consider the decision to establish a permanent secretariat for the MRD an insult to the Tahrik-e Istiqlal.

ELECTION ISSUE, DEVELOPMENTS IN KARACHI EXAMINED

Peshawar MASHRIQ in Urdu 17 Sep 82 Magazine p 8

[Article by Ali Akhtar Rizvi: "On Pir Ali Mohammad Rashdi, Maulana Kausar Niazi and Khwaja Mohammad Safdar"]

[Text] Pir Ali Mohammad Rashdi and Maulana Kausar Niazi's articles and Federal Advisory Council Chairman Khwaja Safdar's statements are read with great concentration and study by political circles in Karachi. We pray to God that the impression these circles are gaining about the future political atmosphere of the country by reading between the lines of the articles and statements by these personalities is true. As far as Khwaja Safdar is concerned, his services regarding the restoration of democracy cannot be overlooked. As a member, and later as the chairman of the Federal Advisory Council, he has been presenting the government's and his personal views regarding the elections and the restoration of democracy, and in light of the election commission's present activities and meetings held to prepare the electoral register, it has to be admitted that, being an intelligent politician, Khwaja Safdar's judgment in accepting membership in the Federal Council were correct. Some circles believe that the problem of restoring the national and provincial assemblies and electing the members through direct public vote is still unresolved, and that the election commission's current activities are merely preparing for local elections. It is possible that these views are correct. However, President Zia-ul-Haq and every minister of his government admits the fact that no government can be called strong and durable unless it has the confidence of the public. As far as the present administration is concerned, undoubtedly, the political circumstances and incidents of the past 5 years clearly indicate that it does have the full support of the Pakistani people. In spite of this, it is necessary that a clear and solid political system be restored in the country, one that not only harmonizes with the ideology of Pakistan but also reflects the Islamic sentiments of the public.

During the reign of Field Marshal Ayub Khan, Pir Ali Mohammad, in his columns, used to draw Ayub Khan's attention through hints and references to Pakistan's situation in light of external developments. He provided opportunities for thinking and understanding to the Pakistani public by refering to the youth revolution in France and the movements initiated in India and other Asian countries in favor of democracy at that time.

After being relieved from advising the former government, Pir Ali Mohammad Rashdi is once again writing thoughtful articles these days. These articles illuminate in great detail the role of the working officials in Pakistan. It is not known, however, shy Pir Sahib avoided mention of the former government's era, in which, through the federal security force and other semi-military institutions, the politicians were driven like sheeps and goats. Pir Ali Mohammad Rashdi's solumns will certainly guide future historians.

Although Maulana Kausar Niazi's columns are not directly connected with politics, the beautiful manner in which he describes the current circumstances facing the country gives the impression that, in view of the present circumstances, Maulana's political concern on 5 July 1977 was totally correct and genuine. Its proof is Mr Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi becoming the leader of the defunct provincial People's Party in place of Mumtaz Bhutto in Sind Province. Mumtaz Bhutto has repeatedly challenged this position. Following the middle path is mutually valued by Ghulam Mustafa Jatoyi and Maulana Kausar Niazi. When Maulana Kausar Niazi and Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi were in power, they were surrounded by sincere workers and companions, but the opportunists also benefited from them a great deal. As far as Maulana Kausar Niazi is concerned, I have been well acquainted with him for almost 17 to 18 years. Thank God, being a minister, Maulana was the same Kausar Niazi to me as he was before he came into power. Since he left office, there still has been no difference in the warmth of his relations with me. Maulana's special quality, which distinguishes him from his other political collegues, is that even if his personal enemy comes to his house and asks for something, Maulana will not turn him down. Nevertheless, these are the people who change with the lapse of time. There are many senior journalists in Karachi today whose current employment is the result of Maulana's personal efforts. However, when these people have had a bit too much to drink, they first of all make their own benefactors the targets of their ego and gossip. Nevertheless, instead of Pir Pagara's predictions for holding elections in the country, the political circles of Karachi are now discussing the vicissitudes of Pir Ali Mohammad Rashdi and Maulana Kausar Niazi's views and Khwaja Safdar's newspaper statements.

Whenever and wherever there is discussion about those who demonstrated bravery and sacrifice for Pakistan's integrity, solidarity and stability, young Rashid Minhas's name tops the list. This pilot trained by the Pakistani Air Force gave up his life during the 1971 war, but he defeated the efforts of a traitor country trying to seize a Pakistani Air Force plane. In view of Rashid Minhas's patriotism, he was awarded the country's highest military honor, Nishan-e-Haidar. Rashid Minhas was a unique youth in the world who, at the very outset of his career, was awarded the highest honor of his military life. The Pakistani Ari Force will certainly be ever proud of this young man.

One of our readers has drawn our attention to the fact that whereas all the newspapers are publishing attractive news about an Indian film actor wounded during a shooting, no special articles and features have been published in the newspapers to mark the anniversary of martyr Rashid Minhas. Our reader's complint is totally justified and correct. Since we too are the victims of this tardiness, what else can we do except apologise. However, the question here is: do the journalists alone have to fulfill all the national responsibilities? The responsibility lies in the hands of our national figures, as well. Certainly we should have utilized Rashid Minhas's martyrdom day to inspire that sense of sacrifice for the protection of which Rashid Minhas not only offered his life but also set a shining example for us. As far as the question of publishing news about the Indian actor is concerned, besides fulfilling national responsibilities, the newspapers also hold up to view the mental tendencies of the public. We all know the public's attitude about Indian films and actors. All the country's small and big cities are full of Indian film cassettes. In the field of culture, through the VCR, India has acquired all that it could not achieve through Amritsar television.

The present campaign in Pakistan to reform society can also be a source of repulsing this heavy attack. An estimate of the manner in which nudity is advertised and sex is presented in Indian films can easily be made from the sale in shopping centers of Indian cassettes full of immodest songs.

There is hardly a neighborhood in Karachi where at local shopping centers, cassettes of Indian films are not sold or available for rent. Noticing the boldness and indency with which these films are shown without censorship in our homes, the campign to reform society through Pakistani television and radio cannot prove fruitful. The essential thing is that just as the death penalty for drugs and smuggling is under consideration, in the field of culture as well, the death penalty should also be decreed for thos who spread nudity and indencency.

Following the establishment of Pakistan, the example of sacrifices made by the Liaqatabad area of Karachi to safeguard the solidarity, integrity and ideology of the country can hardly be found in the Pak-Indian subcontinent. Up to the present day, no neighborhood or region of any subcontinent city has secured such an honor that during any period of our national life, whenever the people's wishes were violated, the area in question not only protested but made sacrifices in lives to end the system of oppression and looting. Whether it is Ghulam Mohammad's dictatorship, Ayub Khan's dictatorial system or Bhutto's antipublic era, during every age Liaqatabad's people led elements throughout the country in support of democracy to safeguard the public rights. During the past 34 years, there were few rulers whose hands were not stained with the blood of the unarmed but courageous people of Liaqatabad. It is incorrect to think of Liaqatabad as only one neighborhood of the city since its collective population is more than 70 percent of the country's citizens [as published]. An entire continent's civilization and culture lives here under the ideology of a single nation. During every ear, this area's people remained the flag-bearers of the ideology of Pakistan, and in this matter they never agreed to compromise in the face of force, corruption or greed. This way of thinking of Liaqatabad's inhabitants turned every government coming into power in the country against them. The result was that despite having one of the few big populations and shopping centers in the city, this area was overlooked in every era. The government is not practically involved in those big buildings and markets, instead of huts, that are seen in Liaqatabad today. Rather, they are the result of the personal efforts and struggles of the area's people. Since Liaqatabad was always perceived as an antigovernment area, the local administration as well, fearing the federal government, regarded even planning for this region's progress equal to an invitation for their own punishment. During the former government's era, in the course of the ceremony opening Liaqatabad's supermarket, the former administration, with the cooperation of a few opportunists of the area, tried to give the impression that Liaqatabad's people also acknowledged the leadership of the former administration. Not only did they fail badly in that endeavor, the leader of this effort dared not saty in Liaqatabad more than a few minutes.

During the past 34 years in the history of Liaqatabad, it is the first time that an incident has taken place that practically proves that the current government not only realizes the problems of Liaqatabad's inhabitants but wants to solve the problems of this vast and expanded region. The provincial government of Sind gets an income of millions of rupees from this region. Over the past 34 years, however, the provincial government has never felt the need to establish any health institution in an area of more than 800,000 inhabitants. Nevertheless, the educational institutions established by the private sector were nationalized, thus fulfilling the educational needs to an extent.

While the current government has begun serious efforts to solve the basic problems of Karachi, it has also started to pay attention to the fundamental problems of Liaqatabad's people. Very quietly, therefore, in the heart of Liaqatabad, preparations were under way for the establishment of a Sind government hospital furnished with modern equipment. The people of Karachi received the glad tidings of the establishment of this hospital when the governor of Sind, Lt Gen S.M. Abbasi, reached Liaqatabad to perform the opening ceremony. Undoubtedly, the personal interest of provincial minister of health Mr Ahad Yusaf also played a role in the establishment of this hospital. It could be said that this is the first incident in the history of Sind wherein the provincial government felt the need to establish new health institution in Karachi at its own expense; otherwise, this responsibility was entrusted to Karachi municipality. As a result, even today the local council is under the burden of hundreds of thousands of rupees in debt. The slackness shown in acquainting the public with the provincial government's feat indicates that the selfish elements do not wish for the public to be informed about the efforts being undertaken by the current administration to solve the problems of Liaqatabad's people. In this regard, the bureaucracy is also collaborating with selfish people. In the past, our bureaucracy used to make such loud announcements of their paper schemes that nothing else could be heard. But now it does not feel the need to inform the public about such a worthwhile project in Liaqatabad by the Sind government, the very first accomplishment on government level in this region's history. The bureaucracy's attitude indicates that they do not want the good work done by the government and the administration's achievements to be effectively presented to the public.

BALUCHISTAN GOVERNOR COMMENTS ON CURRENT SITUATION

Rawalpindi HURMAT in Urdu 6-26 Aug 82 pp 267-271

[Interview with Governor of Baluchistan Lt Gen Rahim on the occasion of Independence Day: "Some Interested Elements Wanted To Take Advantage of Baluchistan's Special Geopolitic Position. No Sardar Will Be Allowed To Stand In the Way of Developmental Process. Law and Order Situation Is Highly Satisfactory."; date and place not specified]

[Text] Baluchistan is Pakistan's most sensitive province. Its geopolitic position in Southwest Asia has placed this province at the focus of attention of the big-power struggle for warm water access. Because of the province's special geopolitic background, the task of administering it is not only difficult but requires delicate handling. Lt Gen Rahim-Uddin Khan, in his capacity as governor of the province, has been entrusted with this delicate task. He has been executing his duties of maintaining law and order with great success. The governor of Baluchistan, in his special interview with HURMAT, deals at length with the socio-economic development to be implemented in the province under the martial law administration, law and order and the political situation. Here we present Governor Lt Gen Rahim Khan's special interview.

[Question] Some opponents of the government say that the law and order situation in the province is not satisfactory, the life and property of the people are not safe, crime is common and the government has failed to bring criminals to justice.

[Answer] The law and order situation in the province has never been better than under the present government, and this is confirmed by the report regarding the reduction in the crime rate in the province in 1980. The crime rate in Baluchistan is the lowest in the country. In Baluchistan, the crime rate is 5.12 percent, whereas in the Punjab it is 56.6 percent, in Sind 24.6 percent and in the Frontier 15.6 percent.

The rapid rate of development in Baluchistan is yet another proof of the fact that conditions in the province are peaceful, and the fact that the development process in the far and remote areas is proceeding unhindered also point to the same thing. Political leaders representing public opinion have also applauded the present government's policies and have voiced their support. I think you will agree with me that even in the most civilized countries in the world there are reactionary elements who are opposed to the most civilized governments. Baluchistan is a province that had its own tribal system of administration for centuries. Now the province is passing through a transitional period, education is replacing ignorance and a change is taking place in the thinking of the people. Thus, opposition from certain circles may be perceived as a natural reaction.

I can say with confidence that the law and order situation in Baluchistan is perfectly normal. No one's life and property are in danger. The life and property of the people are completely safe, rate of crime has dropped and the government is ready to deal with criminals.

[Question] All of the former governments jailed the sardars [chiefs] of the Mengal, Bizenjo and Murree tribes and other sardars. But these sardars are not taking up arms against the present government. What conclusion can be drawn from this? Are the sardars frightened of the present government or have their political problems been solved? Are there any political prisoners in the jails in this province?

[Answer] First of all I would like to stress that we believe in an honest, selfless and sincere government. The problems facing our government are totally different from those of the previous governments. As far as detention and imprisonment of the sardars during the previous governments are concerned, you are aware of the conditions leading to these arrests. You know that the people of Baluchistan are as patriotic as the people of the Punjab, Sind and Frontier Provinces. In the past they were made victims of repression and the reacted to this repression. They are not terrorists but were forced to take up arms. Today there are no political prisoners in the jails in Baluchistan. To make up for the excesses committed against them it is necessary to work honestly and selflessly in Baluchistan. We respect them as human beings and they respond in kind. All the tribes in Baluchistan are living peacefully. Their cooperation in the field of development is praiseworthy. I am fully satisfied with them and they too, in turn, are content with the government, because the government healed the wounds inflicted by the previous governments. We rehabilitated the people who were left without homes during the disturbances in 1977 and we restored their civil rights. We did not keep them in the dark.

The people of this province believe that its future development depends on a peaceful atmosphere. They believe that they have the same rights as the people in other provinces and have made up their minds that they will not be misled by passionate slogans of self-seeking elements, because such elements raise these slogans for the sake of special interests. They also know that certain interested elements would like to take advantage of the special geopolitical position of Baluchistan for their own particular ends. But the people of Baluchistan have decided not to allow themselves to be deceived anymore. They naturally feel secure and satisfied after having rid themselves of age old backwardness and economic deprivations. Baluchis are as good Pakistanis as the people living in other provinces and they are satisfied with their overall participation in the affairs of the province. We have no hostility with any sardar, but at the same time we will not allow anyone to stand in the way of development. We are working for the entire population of Baluchistan and not for the privileged few.

[Question] There are Afghan refugees in Baluchistan. What is the provincial government doing for them? Has the influx of Afghan refugees into Baluchistan created any political, social or financial problems?

[Answer] There are 580,000 Afghan refugees in Baluchistan and they are settled in 40 tent cities. We are building 24 more tent settlements to accommodate a further influx of Afghan refugees in the province. We have a complete organization to look after the welfare of Afghan refugees. The federal government is spending 2.2 billion rupees with the participation of international organizations. Out of this, 550 million rupees have been allocated for Baluchistan. In addition to food, housing and medical and health facilities, every Afghan refugee is given a daily allowance of 50 paisa [half a rupee]. Arrangements are being made to provide drinking water, schools and self-help projects. All of the refugees are being brought together and tent townships are being built for them in areas far away from the local population.

Refugees may have internal problems but the influx of Afghan refugees has not created any political, social or financial problems for Baluchistan.

[Question] Afghan planes have violated Pakistan's air space many times in the Baluchistan region. What is the reaction of the people to this?

[Answer] The local population in Baluchistan seriously condemned the violation of Pakistan's airspace. In the Dobandi area the local population opened fire on the Afghan planes. The violation of Pakistan's airspace by the Afghan planes has further strengthened the bonds of unity among the people of Baluchistan and has made them still more cautious about their defense.

[Question] What new development projects were launched during the past 5 years and how many of these have been completed so far? How much aid has been provided by the federal government for these projects?

[Answer] Compared with other provinces, the development projects in Baluchistan present a totally different picture. To understand the various aspects of the development process in Baluchistan it is necessary to understand the special incompatibilities prevailing in this province. In this context, the following points have to be kept in mind:

1. Development projects were started in the Punjab, Frontier and Sind Provinces immediately after the establishment of Pakistan. But during this period there was no idea of any development projects for Baluchistan.

2. Conditions in the Punjab and other provinces were conducive for starting development programs, whereas in Baluchistan many geographical and territorial problems had to be solved. Besides, there is no basic framework for any development projects in the province. Lack of transportation facilities, like an adequate road system, tops the list, and this is the main reason for the tremendous expenses incurred in transporting goods to remote regions in the province.

3. Baluchistan covers a very wide area. It is spread over 134,000 square miles, which constitutes 42 percent of the total area of Pakistan. It is sparsely populated and only 3 percent of the total population of the country lives in Baluchistan. In other words, any development projects carried out in Baluchistan would benefit only 3 percent of the total population in the country.

4. The climate in the upper parts of Baluchistan is extremely cold, whereas the lower parts of the province suffer from high temperature. Due to these weather conditions, the people of the province live a nomadic life, so that the development process cannot be of much help to the people.

5. Because of the tribal way of life, the social structure of this province is quite different from that of other provinces. During past decades, extraordinary conditions prevailed in this province. When the present government came into power an atmosphere of political friction existed that was hindering progress and development.

6. When the present government took over the helm, the people of Baluchistan were skeptical about the aims and objectives of the government. The government therefore had to give top priority to bridging the gulf separating the government from the people. We restored the confidence of the people and we brought ourselves closer to the people. Since this government does not have any political designs, we worked with sincerity and with the help of God the confidence of the people in the government was restored.

The present government got a number of unnecessary projects in its legacy in the province that did not conform to the wishes of the people. We could not discard these projects altogether but neither did we finish them completely. For us there was only one way and that was to go ahead and, starting with these unfinished projects as a basis, improve them or rectify them.

Prevailing backwardness in Baluchistan has made heavy financial expenses necessary to complete short term projects as soon as possible without having to abandon the long-term projects.

The present government, after assuming power and while keeping all the above facts in mind, set to work with full vigor and determination, within its limited resources. With our untiring and sincere efforts, we have succeeded in increasing the provincial budget from 340 million rupees to 650 million. Besides this, 860 million rupees have been obtained for special development projects. In addition, the federal authorities are also spending

1.3 billion rupees. Time does not allow us to give a detailed account of various development projects for the last 5 years, but we can provide a short survey of the development projects scheduled to be completed within the next 5 years.

It is a bitter fact that Baluchistan was not supplied Sui natural gas, even though this gas is produced in the province. The president has promised the people of Baluchistan natural gas within 2 years. According to the president's instructions, 400 million rupees has been allocated to lay a gas pipeline from Shikarpur to Quetta. The work on this project is expected to be completed by December of this year. In addition to the money being spent for installation of the pipeline, another 210 million rupees will be spent on the distribution of gas.

Up to 1976, the total grid load in the province was not more than 30 megawatts; now it is 132 megawatts. Similarly, up to 1976 only 18 villages were supplied with electricity. But now, during the past 5 years, 267 villages have been provided with electricity. We are planning to supply electricity to 300 more villages by the end of 1982.

At this time, with a 200-megawatt grid load in the province, it is not possible to extend the existing electric supply system to remote areas of Baluchistan like Zhobe, Ziarat, Loralai, Khozdar, Dera Bugti, Harnai and Chagh. Therefore, we are planning to increase the present electric power supply by another 220 megawatts. We have supplied electricity to Othal and Bella districts from Karachi. Transmission lines have been extended to Quetta and Muslim Bagh. Similarly, transmission lines have been extended in the east to Fort Saifullah and in the south to Mastung, Mingo Char and Qalat. In the field of communications, much has yet to be done. The federal government has taken over construction of major roads: Karachi-Khazdar; Quetta-Chaman; Jacobabad-Sibi Quetta and Quetta Zhob-Dera Ismail Khan. This has helped reduce provincial expenditures. RCD Highway has been completed and Loralai-Dera Ismail Khan Road is in its final stages of construction. Work on the coastal roads in Makaran is also in progress. Coming now to the livestock sector, since 80 percent of the population in Baluchistan rears cattle, every person in the province has on an average 3 sheep and 1 goat. Government has started two major projects at a cost of 240 million rupees.

In the water supply sector, our government has spent a total of 1.42 billion rupees on 300 different projects. It is our sincere desire to supply drinking water to every nook and corner in Baluchistan. In education we have spent 250 million rupees in the last 5 years. In this context, our main goal has been to improve primary education and along with this to improve the condition of 27 colleges and other educational institutions.

As far as health services are concerned, rural areas were totally neglected in the past. We have established a number of health centers in villages and remote areas and have supplied these centers with adequate quantities of medicine. At present there are about 250 hospitals and dispensaries throughout the province.

[Question] Will you enlighten us on the progress achieved in the industrial sector?

[Answer] We have made sufficient progress in the industrial sector.

Gadani Ship Building industry is the third largest of its kind and employs 10,000 workers. Besides this, work on the Saindak Copper project is expected to start shortly. The copper project is the second most important industrial project in Pakistan after the steel mill.

Due to limited provincial resources, the federal government is willingly providing funds. In 1977-78 the federal government granted 750 million rupees to Baluchistan, whereas in 1982 the expenditure was 1.3 billion rupees. In addition to this, the federal government granted an additional 128.5 million rupees to make up for the deficit in the budget.

The interest the federal government is taking in the development of Baluchistan can be seen from the inauguration of the special development program for the province. Friendly countries will contribute 20 billion rupees, of which 860 million will be spent during the current fiscal year.

[Question] Generally speaking, only privileged people benefit from development programs. In what way has the comman man gained from the development programs in Baluchistan?

[Answer] When a government does not have any political interests, it does not adopt a discriminatory policy. In this connection, we will have to examine the development programs worked out for economic development of Baluchistan.

In the current annual budget, special attention has been devoted to rural development. Plans have been worked out to extend general facilities to rural areas. These include water, electricity and gas. To ensure that the common man gets maximum benefit from the development projects, local councilors have been included in large numbers in the development programs. The federal government has started a special development program for 1982-83. Primary education, health services, roads, providing tractors to farmers and supplying drinking water are some of the items included in this program. As can be seen, all these projects are directed at providing collective benefits.

[Question] Baluchistan is a backward province. What facilities are being provided to the private sector for establishing industries? During the past 5 years, to what extent has the private sector advanced in this field?

[Answer] The federal government has provided a number of incentives for establishing industries in the province. These include exemption of duty on imported industrial machinery, exemption of tax and exemption of 5.5 percent of profit. In addition to these, two industrial estates are being set up, one at Hub and the other at Quetta. I think that the reaction of the industrialists is quite encouraging, because so far we have issued 700

no-objection certificates for setting up different industries in Baluchistan. I am sure you will agree with me that the development of industrial facilities requires a long period of time. Centuries-old discrepancies cannot be rectified overnight. I believe that the measures we have adopted will be conducive to creating suitable conditions that will help accelerate the growth of industries on the basis of local products.

[Question] Baluchistan is rich in minerals. One of the charges being leveled is that the government has been handing over these mines to "waderas" [landlords] and sardars and that the mineworkers are thus being deprived of their benefits. What measures have been taken to rectify this situation?

[Answer] As far as the charges that the mines are being given on contract to the sardars in exchange for paltry sums of money are concerned, these charges are baseless. But it is true that we did not impose restrictions on giving the mines to the sardars. In accordance with the established practice, mines are given on a first come first served basis, irrespective of who that first person turns out to be--a sardar or a common man. So far, 380 prospective licenses and 245 mining licenses have been duly issued. There are not so many sardars in Baluchistan and the number of sardars who have been attracted to mining does not exceed 12. I think that these sardars, instead of depriving the poor of their money, will themselves work and earn their living. Similarly, no restrictions have been placed on allotting mines to people coming from other provinces. They too can take mines on a contract basis provided they are prepared to take local people into partnership in view of the prevailing economic and local conditions. The mining industry was totally neglected in the past. We are now trying to draw the attention of more and more investors to the mining sector.

Mines are located in isolated places and we are prepared to build roads to help investors reach those places. We are also prepared to provide water and electricity on a priority basis.

As far as providing benefits to the workers is concerned, they are given adequate wages for their labor. Coal mine workers receive salaries ranging from 800-2,500 rupees per month. On the other hand, workers engaged in marble and chromite mines receive monthly wages ranging from 600-1,200. I would like to point out that a person receiving a salary of 1,000 rupees does not come under the category of a worker. Despite this, in case of death or an accident of such a person, mine contractors do not refuse suitable compensation because they cannot afford the displeasure of the local workers. Government has also provided miners with housing, transportation and medical facilities.

[Question] It is being said that remote places in Baluchistan do not have good roads, electricity and water and that the people living in these isolated places are facing unemployment, food shortage, and housing difficulties. What is the actual situation?

[Answer] All this is incorrect. Baluchistan today is totally different from what it was in the past. Most of the regions in Baluchistan do have roads, electricity and water, and we are making every effort to provide these facilities to every nook and cranny in the province. It is not easy to provide such facilities to a small number of people scattered over a vast area of land extending over 134,000 square miles. It is natural that these facilities should first of all be provided to cities and towns. We would like to provide basic facilities to rural areas on a priority basis. Special development programs to which I referred earlier have been launched to achieve these objectives. Besides this, under "special project plans", development programs have been extended to include backward areas. As far as the first part of your question is concerned, I would like to state that the population of Baluchistan is 3 percent of the total population of the country and that 80 percent of the people are cattle breeders. This occupation is such that all the members of the family have to be preoccupied with looking after the cattle.

Due to a scarcity of water, agriculture is almost extinct in Baluchistan. The real problem is the shortage of manpower and, because of this, unemployment does not constitute a serious problem in Baluchistan.

BIZENJO INVITED TO ROUNDTABLE

Karachi DAWN in English 1 Nov 82 p 1, 6

[Article by Siddiq Baluch]

[Text]

Mir Ghous Bakhsh Bizenjo, President of the defunct Pakistan National Party was the first to receive a verbal invitation to attend a round-table conference of all political parties.

Maulana Shah Ahmad Noorani, President of the defunct Jamiatul Ulema-i-Pakistan, accompanied by Prof Shah Faridul Haq and Maulana Mohammad Hassan Haqqani, conveyed the invitation to Mr. Bizenjo at the Musti Khan Lodge late on Sunday night.

Maulana Noorani informed Mr. Bizenjo that the invitation cards and agenda of the round-table conference were being printed.

According to reliable sources, the RTC will be held sometime in November.

PNA criticised

Earlier, talking to newsmen at the Masti Khan Lodge, Mr. Bizenjo said that the component parties of the defunct PNA were responsible for the imposition of Martial Law and it was their responsibility to bring back democracy and restore political rights denied to the people.

He said the present situation was the creation of PNA's component parties and they should take the country out of this mess.

When asked about the usefulness of holding the RTC, Mr. Bizenjo said that a meeting of political leaders was by itself an encouraging sign because whenever they met they discussed the country's political problems and their solutions. At least they sometimes agreed to formulate a strategy for that purpose, he added.

Questioned about the agenda of the RTC, Mr. Bizenjo opined that such a gathering should discuss ways and means of restoring democracy, holding of general elections and peaceful and smooth transfer of power to elected representatives of the people. There could be no other agenda or issue for such a meeting, he insisted.

When his attention was drawn to Mr. Hafeez Pirzada's contention that the holding of such conferences might confuse the issues, he said that no clear-cut strategy could be adopted for the restoration of democracy without discussions among political parties.

Mr. Bizenjo claimed that the 1973 Constitution stood abrogated as the imposition of Martial Law negated constitutional rule. However, certain clauses of the Constitution could be useful in holding elections, he said. He did not agree to a correspondent's suggestion that a Legal Framework Order, like the one issued by Gen. Yahya Khan in 1970, could serve this purpose. When his attention was drawn to Mr. Pirzada's suggestion that the 1973 Constitution needed a fresh enactment, he remarked that an elected parliament was a sovereign body and it could enact or adopt any constitution, with or without any amendments.

Mr. Bizenjo criticised the arrest of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. He said Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan was a most respected leader and was working for solidarity and integrity of the country. He demanded his immediate and unconditional release.

He denied he had any communication with Sardar Ataullah Khan Mengal and Nawab Khair Bakhsh Marri, the two Baluch leaders now in self-exile in Britain and Afghanistan, respectively.

MRD'S PLEA FOR CONFIDENCE IN PEOPLE

Karachi DAWN in English 1 Nov 82 p 12

[Text]

Convenor of the Movement for Restoration of Democracy (MRD), Mr Arshad Chaudhri, has called upon the Government to take the people of Pakistan and Kashmir into confidence for seeking any solution to the Kashmir problem.

Announcing the decisions of the MRD meeting which was held in the city on Saturday evening, Mr Arshad Chaudhri told newsmen that any solution to the Kashmir problem which did not recognise the right of the Kashmiri people to self-determination would not be acceptable.

He expressed his satisfaction over the movement launched by the legal community and said it was heartening that the lawyers gave priority to the issues of national importance than their own problems.

He was glad to see that the Lawyers have integrated their demands with those of the MRD — revival of 1973 Constitution, restoration of democracy and fundamental rights of the people, holding of general elections and trasnfer of power. He criticised the recent amendments in the Bar Councils Act and Legal Practitioners Act and arrest of the lawyers.

He said that all lawyer members of political parties in the MRD have been instructed to fully participate in the struggle of the advocates as he considered their struggle as just.

He extended his full cooperation to the legal community and said the MRD was considering some "concrete steps" in support of the lawyers. He did not elaborate his point.

He advised the Government not to take any severe action against the detained lawyers and other political prisoners arrested on different charges.

He also criticised the detention of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan and pointed out the double standards of the Government in dealing with different political parties. Elaborating, he said, the Secretary General of a defunct political party was recently allowed to tour the NWFP, and the movements of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan were restricted and he was put under house arrest.

A case was registered against him for trying to hold a meeting on the occasion of Independence Day, he claimed.

He also criticised the extension of the period of detention of Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan, continued detention of Mr Asghar Khan, Moulana Fazlur Rehman and Miss Benazir Bhutto and others.

He also criticised the delay in granting permission to Begum Bhutto to go abroad for treatment. He deplored that Sardar Attaullah Khan Mengal was sent abroad for treatment on Government expenses while Begum Bhutto was denied permission.

Mr Abid Zubairi, Central Information Secretary of the defunct National Democratic Party (NDP), said the party branches were holding meetings to chalk out a programme of action against the arrest of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. He said his party chief, Sardar Sherbaz Khan Mazari, was reaching Karachi on Nov. 3 next and he would discuss the issue with his partymen.

Meanwhile, Mr Fatehyab Ali Khan, Acting President of the Mazdoor Kissan Party, will take over as Convenor of MRD for November from today (Monday).

GHAFFAR KHAN CRITICIZES VIOLENCE IN POLITICS

Karachi DAWN in English 1 Nov 82 p 6

[Text]

PESHAWAR, Oct 31: Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, founder of Khudai Khidmatgar Tehrik in NWFP, has once again stated that violence in politics was not a solution to any problem and that the Afghanistan problem could not be resolved through bullet and that it requires mutual understanding among the concerned parties.

Before his detention yesterday, the Red Shirt leader addressed various public meetings in different areas of Mardan including Takhtabahi, Takker, Katlang, Kohi Barmol, Mian Eisa and Shergarah during the last two days.

He said he had left Pakistan earlier due to indifference of Pathans of this region adopting self-exile in Afghanistan but he was extremely disappointed by disintegration of Afghan nation which had to see Russian motivated revolution which was taking valuable lives of Pathans unjustifiably.

He reiterated that the battle that was being fought in Afghanistan was neither for Islam nor was beneficial for Afghanistan but it was a direct clash between the interests of two super-powers who were causing massacre of Muslims in the world.

He said revolution was destined for every state in the world and only alive and sensible nations could survive the fatal destruction stemming out of these revolutions while ignorant and lazy nations were flown in the waves of ruthless revolution.

He warned that Pakistan was passing through worst kind of dangers and that he had come out to alert the people about the threats encircling them from all dimensions.

He said it was call of the hour that all petty differences were sunk and complete unity was forged among the ranks and file of the nation of face these dangers as war was knocking at our doors.

He said that if we do not realise the gravity of the situation history would never forgive us. He said he had no political designs and that he was only a Khudai khidmatgar who wanted to serve the interests of the people.

He appealed to the local population to treat the Afghan refugees brotherly because they were our Pukhtoon brethren but certain parties were trying to create misunderstanding between us to serve their ulterior motives which was not a good trend.

He warned the Government that if such activities of creating confusion among the people by certain parties were not checked a dangerous fire of hatred and disruption would break out which would be very difficult to control.—PPI

CHILDREN'S VILLAGE SET UP IN NWFP

Karachi DAWN in English 1 Nov 82 p 4

[Text]

PESHAWAR, Oct 31: The SOS children's village, second of its kind, inaugurated at Dhodial yesterday by NWFP Governor Lt-Gen. Fazle Haq, will also serve as a summer holiday camp for the children from the Lahore village, thus introducing a unique facility for orphans in Pakistan.

Plans are under way to establish SOS villages at Karachi, Rawalpindi and Faisalabad.

The NWFP Governor donated Rs. 2 lakh for the SOS village.

The distinctive character of SOS children's villages is that they provide a normal family-type environment for the children, with the conditions as similar as possible to the natural homes of which they have been deprived.

The village, which consists of 15-20 family homes, serves the need of multi-purpose community centre, a dispensary, an infirmary, a nursery school, a workshop, a grocery shop and an administration office.

In the SOS village, a child receives care and shelter and learns to live in harmony with friends and neighbours. Ample grounds are provided for sports and games.

The children are encouraged to participate in gardening and other activities related to proper maintenance of premises.

Inaugurating the village, the Governor called upon philanthropists and well-to-do people to come forward to help such organisations as they were running on voluntary basis.

The Governor also donated four acres from the Government lands. The construction of the village, which had started in May this year, was completed last month (September).

Funds for the construction of the village were mainly donated by friends of SOS Children's Village International, Norway.

The function was also addressed by Begum Mehmooda Salim, Chairman of NWFP Committee of the SOS organisation.

She thanked the Governor for his keen interest in the establishment of the village.

MR Thorbjorn Conradi, Vice-President of SOS International, appreciated the efforts of the SOS movement in Pakistan and assured all possible help and cooperation.

The ceremony was also attended by the Federal Minister for Health, Dr Naseeruddin Jogezai; Begum Attiya Inayatullah, Advisor to the President on Population Welfare; Maulana Abdul Baqi, NWFP Minister for Auqaf and Religious Affairs; and members of Federal and Provincial Councils, besides large numbers of social workers.

Speaking on the occasion, the NWFP Governor said children were the valuable segment of society upon whom the future of society depended.

He said that what they could be moulded into today would largely determine the norms, value-structure and orientation of the society tomorrow. In this context the critical role of formal education in the impressionable years for inculcation of ideas was universally acknowledged, he added.

He said that parental love, care and affection was equally vital for this purpose and also the evolution of a harmonious, well-integrated society. This was available in society to the vast majority of children.

He added that society owed a moral obligation to provide an institutional alternate for those children who had been cruelly deprived of home by circumstances. The institution, he said, would work as a filling up of the gap in their lives that marked the importance of this 'village'.

Its success, he said, would not be gauged so much by the physical facilities it provided — no doubt they were also important — but by the extent to which the ideas of love, care and affection were actualised in the lives of the inmates. This was a fairly demanding task requiring high standards of professional aptitude and dedication on the part of the staff, he maintained.

Lt-Gen. Fazle Haq said that with the break-up of the traditional family system under the pressure of ongoing socio-economic change an increase in the extent of social deprivation was to be expected. This would devolve an increasing responsibility on social workers and the community as such to organise themselves, pool their resources and make available all over the province the kind of facilities this village had, he added.

He expressed the hope that social welfare organisations with the cooperation of people would solve such problems voluntarily. He thanked the international organisation of SOS with whose collaboration the village was established.

About forty destitude children would be housed in the village in five homes.—APP

QUOTAS IN TRADE WITH INDIA LIKELY

Karachi DAWN in English 1 Nov 82 p 6

[Text]

LAHORE, Oct 31: The Federal Government is considering a proposal for the implementation of a formula of "quota system" for local importers, regarding restricted trade in the private sector with India.

Authoritative sources informed "Dawn" that to channelise the flow of imports from India certain limits would be set for the intending traders from Karachi and the up-country areas. Equitable distribution of quota for import items from India would be ensured to avoid overflow of a particular item, which might cause any negative effect on the foreign exchange position on the one hand and the accepted principles of demand and supply on the other.

Meanwhile the tentative list of about 45 items for imports from India has been described officially as under: tea, betel leaves, betal nuts, seeds vegetable, fruits and flowers, vegetable plants for dyeing, cutch and gambier, essential oils, books, (technical professional and religious only) spices, excluding chillis turmeric and cumin seeds, resin based chemicals, steel strips for manufacture of razor blades, dyes coaltar, viscose fibre and yarn, calculators and calculating machines, ball bearings (permissible sizes only), lifts and escalators, cane plaster, cutter binder, potato or onion diggers, rice spreat transplanters, rotary cutters, rotary B cutters, rotavaters, spinner broadcasters, drilling rigs, postal franking machines, compressor units for airconditioning plants, compressor units for domestic refrigerators, fire engines, microscopes and other laboratory instruments, felt for paper mills, combination turret, lathe-above 103 mm bar capacity and 800 mm swing, radial drilling machine over fifty mm drilling capacity in steel, heat exchangers of over 300 PSI capacity only phithalic (raw materials for synthetic resin), Citric acid lactic acid, titanium dioxide (paints) beta ionone saccharino, aniline (printing material for textile), aluminium powder and paste, fibre glass yarn-choppedstrande-mats and revings cash registers-incorporating calculating device and duplicating machines.

Dropped items

Five items, included in the original list of 50 items, are understood to have been dropped, namely wood and timber, ginger ferro alloys, carbon electrodes and graphite crucibles.

The imports of the above-mentioned items on the approved list would be carried out through the TCP. The Corporation has been provided with the list of these items.

Anyhow, an official announcement is likely to be made very soon for the opening of LCs etc, after which trade would be initiated.

SERICULTURE DEVELOPMENT EFFORTS LAUDED

Karachi DAWN in English 1 Nov 82 p 7

[Text]

RENEWED efforts have been launched for promoting sericulture as an agricultural sub-sector in Sind and other parts of the country. The Sind Government has started silk-worm breeding by planting mulberry on a big scale near Hyderabad. Improved mulberry varieties imported from Japan, China and South Korea have been raised over 120 acres of land. It is for the first time that autumn silk-worm rearing is being attempted during the October-December period. Earlier in the year, 160 packets of silk-worm eggs were imported from Japan and Brazil and were used for rearing during February-April period with success. Rearing of silk-worms can provide a new source of income for the rural populace. Recognising its potential, the Women's Division of the Federal Government has also initiated a scheme for the promotion and practice of sericulture as a gainful vocation for women in the countryside. It is practised as a cottage industry in many developing countries and is particularly suited to our rural areas where unemployment and under-employment are widespread.

Promotion of sericulture will also provide a wide base for silk yarn-making and weaving and thus give an impetus to the local silk industry. Promotion of sericulture and production of silk cocoons in abundance will encourage silk yarn industry. Mechanical production of silk yarn in the country on a large scale will reduce the dependence of the weaving industry on imported silk yarn, valued at Rs. 12 million per annum, specially for fine quality fabrics like Banarsi sarees and silk turbans. Establishment of a number of modern silk filatures, for which a provision exists in the investment schedule, will not only ensure the supply of fine quality yarn for silk fabrics woven in the country but, in turn, will also give a boost to silk-worm rearing as a lucrative vocation.

BRIEFS

BLACK LIST OF LAWYERS--It has been learned through reliable sources that the Ministry of Law is preparing a list of those lawyers who work as legal advisors or consultants for the official or semi-official bodies and who are also openly opposing the recent amendments in the Legal Practitioners and Bar Councils Act. The Ministry is thinking on the lines that if these lawyers continue their opposition to the government, their contracts and consultancies will be abolished. [Text] [Rawalpindi HURMAT in Urdu 28 Oct 82 p 4]

MRD AND KHWAJA KHAIRUDDIN--Certain MRD [Movement for the Restoration of Democracy] leaders strongly believe, rather they have said, they have proof that Khwaja Khairuddin [Head, Muslim League (Khairuddin Group)] has a tacit understanding with the government. The MRD leaders have therefore decided that Khwaja Khairuddin will not be invited to any of their important meetings. They have also agreed that all their important decisions will be made in informal meetings and only such matters will be decided upon in their formal meetings (in which Khwaja Khairuddin will also participate) which are meant to be conveyed to the government. [Text] [Rawalpindi HURMAT in Urdu 28 Oct 82 p 4]

CASSETTES OF LEADER'S SPEECHES--A large number of cassettes of the speeches of a former leader are rumored to have been smuggled into Pakistan from across the border. The smugglers, it is said, want to use these cassettes the same way as Imam Khomeyni's speeches were used during the shah's regime in Iran. But it has been learned that as soon as these cassettes arrived in various cities of Pakistan, government agencies seized them in large quantities. [Text] [Rawalpindi HURMAT in Urdu 14 Oct 82 p 4]

WHO AFTER ZIAUL HAQ?--It has been learned that the talks and discussions going on between the leaders of various defunct political parties have been unable to resolve the hypothetical matter of succession to Zia. Given the supposition that all political parties unite and launch a countrywide movement against the present government and, as a result of that movement, President Zia resigns, what will happen afterwards? Pondering over this question, majority of the leaders have concluded that after General Zia leaves, power cannot and will not be transferred to a civilian government; rather, it will stay in the hands of the army. The leaders are therefore asking themselves: If power cannot come into civilian hands what is the use of launching a movement? [Text] [Rawalpindi HURMAT in Urdu 21 Oct 82 p 4]

STUDENTS ON HUNGER STRIKE--Several students belonging to different educational institutions of the remote parts of the Province have reportedly gone on hunger strike in support of their demands. This was stated by General Secretary of the Jiye Sind Students' Federation, Khawaja Ghulam Hussain, while addressing a Press conference in Karachi on Saturday. The main reason for their hunger strike was stated to be delay in their trial, he said. If tried by a court of law and convicted, they would have got a year of prison sentences. But he added, they are in jails for more than two years. [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 1 Nov 82 p 12]

HYDERABAD BAR BODY STRIKE--Hyderabad, 31 Oct--All the members of Hyderabad Bar Association today observed complete strike to protest against the arrest and conviction of Karachi and Lahore lawyers. The lawyers boycotted proceedings of all judicial and revenue courts in the district and assured full cooperation and support to their brother lawyers throughout the country in their just struggle for acceptance of their genuine demands. NEWSMAN SENT TO JAIL--Lahore, 31 Oct--A Summary Military Court today sent Mr Mohammad Idrees Butt, Lahore Correspondent of Daily "AMN', Karachi, to Camp Jail on 14 days judicial remand. He was arrested on Oct 27 under Martial Law Regulations in connection with the 1978, "Pamphlet Case." In this case four persons were required by the Martial Law authorities. The trial of three has been completed out of which two accused were given imprisonments and one of them was acquitted by the Military Court. According to details, Mr Idrees is allegedly involved in the case and was wanted by the authorities. A case was registered against him with the Old Anarkali police station in 1978. On Oct 27 he was arrested. [Text] [Karachi DAWN in English 1 Nov 82 p 12]

OUTLOOK FOR SOCIALIST PARTIES IN 1983 ELECTIONS DISCUSSED

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 21 Sep 82 p 9

[Article by Chatcharin Chaiyawat: "The Future of the United Socialist Front Party and the 1983 Election"]

[Text] The socialist parties once generated great alarm among the conservative politicians when they fought in the election and were given victory by the people in several provinces after 14 October 1973.

But since then, the purge by the antisocialist movement and the right-wing conservative groups has destroyed the role of the socialist parties. In the election held about 4 years ago, the socialist parties were soundly defeated on the parliamentary stage.

In the coming election to be held in 1983, a question worth asking is whether these parties can put up much of a fight in the parliamentary process and if so how.

The Weakness of Socialist Thinking

Socialist ideology, which spread among the students, intellectuals and scholars during the period 14 October 1973 to 6 October 1976, created a mass force on the Thai political stage. But the persecution by and confrontation with the cruel dark powers caused most of the forces of this ideological group to shift to a different form of struggle. That is, they "repudiated the parliamentary system" and joined the armed struggle together with the communists.

The mass leaders with socialist thinking who went and took up arms were partly responsible for the fact that those socialists who continued to fight using the parliamentary system became weaker and weaker until it reached the point where two of the socialist parties, that is, the Socialist Party of Thailand and the United Socialist Front Party, disbanded and joined together to form the Social Democracy Party.

During that period, even though the two parties cooperated in order to strengthen their position and survive in the election of April 1979, these parties lacked capable people both in the party and among the masses who supported the party. Thus, they were soundly defeated in that election.

But while student leaders, intellectuals, laborers, farmers and others who suscribe to socialist thinking have had conflicts with the communists and left the jungle, this does not mean that they will be able to create a force to support and give new life to the socialist parties.

Several of the factors worth discussing in this context are:

1. Some socialists who left the jungle have abandoned the political struggle.

2. Some socialists who left the jungle still want to wage a political struggle but they do not see the need to wage a parliamentary struggle.

3. Some socialists who left the jungle agree with waging a parliamentary struggle but they feel that the political parties that have real power will be able to play a greater role than the greatly-weakened socialist parties.

Besides this, something special that has happened during the past 2-3 years is that socialist thinking throughout the world has been shaken and this has played a part in greatly reducing the strength of these political parties.

Thus, concerning the election in 1983, many groups tend to agree that the socialist parties have no further role to play in parliament.

The Method of Struggle of the Socialist Parties

The New Force Party will probably continue to play a role in parliament, a role slightly greater than that of the Social Democracy Party. It has said that, like the Social Democracy Party, it will field the full slate of 161 candidates as required by the constitution. But at present, the New Force Party still has a few MPs in parliament.

If the election is fought using a combined-zone, single-slate form, the chance of these two parties surviving in order to have an opportunity to use the parliamentary stage in their struggle is very slim, since they will not be able to compete with the other political parties.

It seems that the only methods open to them are the following:

1. They can field 161 candidates, but they cannot spend much money campaigning and will have to concentrate their campaign efforts at a few points (about five or six provinces).

2. They can field 161 candidates, but they will have to gather the important people in the party, such as the committee members, leaders and secretaries-general, to concentrate their efforts on those provinces where they have the greatest support.

3. They can let their members who have a chance of becoming MPs go join other political parties in the provinces in order to use the bases of these political parties to gain an opportunity to wage a parliamentary struggle.

4. They can refrain from fielding candidates and carry on activities as political power groups.

Based on an evaluation of the situation of the socialist parties, the struggle methods possible for them probably include the three to four methods mentioned above. But based on reports about the activities of the Social Democracy Party and the New Force Party, it is believed that both parties will probably use either method one or method two. That is, they will field 161 candidates and concentrate their campaign efforts in one province rather than using method three or four, which would damage the reputation of the party.

Thus, looking at struggle methods one and two and at the possibilities in the 1983 election, we can guess that the socialist parties will still not have a chance to play much of a role in parliament, or they may not have any role at all.

And this means that the chance of these parties making a comeback will grow even smaller.

The Methods of Struggle of the Socialist Groups

Someone once proposed that the socialist political parties that want to wage a parliamentary struggle should "throw out a bouy" by carrying on political activities "outside parliament," especially if 1983 election trends are analyzed carefully and especially now when many groups tend to agree that parliament's role in Thai politics next year will not be very great (after the military reshuffle in September).

Thus, if there is an attempt to build a "party" or create a real "socialist line," then a political role outside parliament is an important matter. And the political parties in this camp are experienced and adept and they have a good image in carrying on activities in such a situation.

The socialist groups that join together to form socialist parties will neglect their "powerful" role in movements outside parliament.

Besides this, someone has proposed that, in the coming period when their parliamentary role will decline, one important task of the democratic movement is to find an "alternative balance of power" in place of parliamentary power, which may be cut back greatly. This refers to trying to create a "political power group" type movement that is carried on in accord with the law and that gains greater recognition from the masses in various groups.

In particular, in a period in which the state is trying to promulgate Policy 66/1980 and is supporting the legal freedom movements, in a democratic system, of the political power groups, this opportunity provides another stage that will enable the socialist groups, or socialist political parties, tc find a way to carry on activities and regain their strength so that they are stronger and more secure than at present.

Besides just the two methods, that is, waging a parliamentary struggle and waging an armed struggle, which is illegal, the socialist groups, or socialist movement, should figure out other ways to carry on the struggle that are more fitting than the two mentioned above.

And there will be a chance to use the conditions and proper moments to make the socialist movement strong so that it can raise its ideological banner and compete on an equal footing with the other political groups.

WRITER URGES YOUNG TURKS' REINSTATEMENT INTO MILITARY

Bangkok MATUPHUM In Thai 22 Sep 82 p 9

[Article by "A Non-Military Man": "The Future of the Young Turks"]

[Text] In the army, there are celebrations at having a new commander in chief. I do not know whether the new RTA CINC has any "sikriet" for the young soldiers group. Among this group of soldiers are many "professionals," or many professional soldiers.

Concerning the reinstatement of the young turks into the military, I have heard that General Athit said rather tersely that this is a matter that must be discussed in the army and that the matter cannot be decided by the RTA CINC alone.

This is a "many reservations" type of reply. It is a political response.

What is important is that in the Ministry of Interior and the Police Department, it seems that the 1-3 April group is very "happy-go-lucky" about everything. There is a spirit of overcoming the widening rift and a feeling of compassion everywhere.

In short, it is worth considering the fact that if these young soldiers had not made a mistake or acted rashly but just served their country, we would now have the services of these officers, many of whom are good fighters, and they could serve as professional soldiers to help defend the country.

We understand quite well that the reinstatement of the young soldiers into the military is a delicate matter and that past resentment [toward them] was rather strong among military commanders. In particular, the officers who were promoted in the recent reshuffle are all professional soldiers who are on a different path than that of the young soldiers, who were professional soldiers too but whose path, or theory, was different.

Now, the resentment felt by both groups should have died down. But the chances of the young soldiers being reinstated into the national army do not look bright. However, we have faith in General Athit's fighting determination to develop and build solidarity in the army.

Thus, we are confident that a desire to coordinate the benefits and preserve the custom of commanding subordinates like an older brother watching over his younger brother will arise in the heart of the new RTA CINC.

Philosophers have said that a man should not be judged by his words but by his actions. This statement can be proven in the Ministry of Interior and in the Police Department.

We would like the army to prove this statement of the philosophers too. In particular, at a time when the country is very tense and the possibility of war is increasing, the duty to oppose the nation's enemies makes it necessary for all Thais to forget their [internal] feuds and turn toward the enemy.

Thus, making the internal system strong and brave and, in particular, admitting the past "mistakes" of the army should be an important factor in providing the young turks with a chance -- and many groups believe that their chances are nil -- to receive special consideration.

In writing this, I want to make it clear that I am not acting as a representative for the young turks. I have heard rumors that many of the young turks have definitely decided not to return to the army and that they will instead engage in politics. I wish them good luck.

But I think that among those who encountered this fate because of "following the leader," many of the subordinates of the young turks met this fate because they obeyed the orders of their commanders. Their spirit in following the orders of their superiors, who led them to carry out a rebellion, was really very strong. But wasn't their discipline very good?

Soldiers have the discipline of soldiers. Who would have thought that what took place would turn out to be a rebellion? Also, I believe that, if the coup had succeeded, those soldiers at the lower level would have returned to being professional soldiers; they would not have gained power in the army.

The purpose of all this is to point out that human resources are very important. If you have money and resources, you can buy artillery and rockets. But sometimes it is impossible to purchase good-quality men with high combat spirit and good training to serve as soldiers.

Thais are resolute and kindhearted. They are understanding. They know what is wrong and they are forgiving. We have seen this throughout history. Thus, I feel that allowing the young turks to return to the military, with the commander holding to the principle of making friends out of enemies and uniting to attack the nation's real enemies, will create something new for people in general so they see correct morals. People both in and out of the military will certainly praise these good moral qualities.

The most important thing is that foreign enemies will know that Thais are ready to unite forces, regardless of how serious the conflicts among them.

Another thing is that if the young turks return to government service, I believe that the gossip, or dirty rumors, to the effect that this group is going to attack that group will immediately come to a halt since the factors that fuel such false rumors will not arise as easily.

The final thing that must be mentioned is the readiness to follow the new commander. Those young turks who are real soldiers must admit that, in the present chain of command, those in the army have agreed about who should be the leaders and who should be the followers.

It is possible that, if the young turks and those who were promoted this year really unite, in the future our country will be stronger than it has ever been. There should be great enthusiasm in the army. This will build tremendous morale and be good for the political atmosphere.

If one side is forgiving and accepts the mistakes that were made, the other side should reciprocate without trickery.

I think that the young soldiers must be ready to accept this and do something in order to make this come true. When each side has proven itself to the other, there will be a greater chance of a reconciliation between the two sides.

It isn't necessary to keep saying that the army is united and that there aren't any conflicts in the army. The only thing necessary is for this matter to be handled in a sincere manner, or for people to speak to each other "from the heart."

I think that if the new RTA CINC, that is, General Athit, just says what his personal view of the young soldiers is, things will immediately improve and all the problems will disappear.

Getting together and helping each other is better. Do not let the atmosphere become ever tenser or darker than it is.

These remarks will certainly not have much of an effect on changes of direction in the army. But I believe that the calls from people outside the military who want to see the problems solved will have some effect. And concerning this call, even though [I] do not represent all the people outside the military, the things that I have proposed have been proposed in order to [bring about] solidarity, to reduce the conflicts and to help bring unity to the country.

POLL SHOWS TOP MILITARY, CIVILIAN LEADERSHIP OPPOSED TO ASEAN MILITARY BLOC

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 20 Sep 82 pp 1, 12

[Article: "Ninety Percent of the Generals Oppose Asean Becoming a Military Bloc"]

[Text] Mr Kramon Thongthammachat, a new senator, disclosed the results of a study on the "views of Thai leaders concerning security and the effect on Asean." From a survey of more than 200 generals, or government officials from grade C9 on up, it was learned that more than 90 percent oppose Asean forming a military bloc. They favor it remaining an organization for economic and social cooperation.

Mr Kramon also said that the fact that Mr Lee Kuan Yew, the prime minister of Singapore, proposed that the military exercises should be expanded to include Indonesia as well as Singapore just meant "expansion." It did not mean that Singapore wants direct military cooperation between the members of Asean.

When asked what things would be like if Asean formed a military bloc, Mr Kramon said that he did not think that anyone would agree with this since Asean is an organization for economic, social and political cooperation. If there was military cooperation, this would generate tension in this region.

"The truth is that Thailand wants political support more than military support since each of the Asean countries now has its own internal problems."

On the evening of 17 September, General Saiyut Keotphon, the supreme commander, said that "militarily, it is essential to hold joint military exercises. But whether it is possible to hold such exercies or not is a political matter."

General Pamot Thawonchan, the army chief of staff, said that, to date, Asean has never cooperated militarily. He does not see the necessity of doing so since this would be contrary to the goals of Asean.

"But considering the situation in this region, it depends on whether the policies will permit military cooperation among the Asean members," said General Pamot.

MILITARY ACADEMY ALLIANCES, ATHIT CONCENTRATION OF INFLUENCE ANALYZED

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 13 Sep 82 pp 2, 12

[Article: "Reshuffle of Army Officers, the Period When General Athit Kamlangek Has Gathered Together the Power Centers"]

[Text] "Compete to win; do not compete with fate." "The current is swift; do not take a boat too far out." "The value of a person depends on whose man he is. If he speaks too much, he will put himself in danger." "If General Athit is resolute, there will be no danger of a coup and the army will definitely grow stronger." And so on.

These were various thoughts expressed by officers after the announcement of the list of promotions for high-ranking military officers for fiscal year 1983. The radio of the Public Relations Department broadcast the announcement on its 2000 hours news broadcast on 10 September in accord with the 9 September 1982 announcement by the Office of the Prime Minister on officer assignments. General Prem Tinsulanon, the prime minister, was the person who signed the royal order.

Because this year's reshuffle involved the promotion of senior officers of the armed services, including officers in the Ministry of Defense and Supreme Command Headquarters, from "major general" on up, various groups showed a great interest in this.

But everywhere, attention was focused mainly on the position of RTA CINC since everyone wanted to know whether it would be General Athit Kamlangek, the assistant RTA CINC, or General Pamot Thawonchan, the army chief of staff, who would be promoted to RTA CINC.

Athit's Strength -- Secret Strength?

General Athit has become the new RTA CINC as was expected by most observers. Even though some people insisted that General Pamot would become the new RTA CINC, the actual result clearly shows how strong General Athit is.

Some reports that leaned toward General Pamot becoming the head of the army stated that General Prayut Chrumni, the RTA CINC who will soon retire, General Saiyut Keotphon, the supreme commander, and General Prem all wanted General Pamot to be the new RTA CINC and that this showed that General Pamot had won three to nothing.

But high-ranking officers close to General Athit told MATUPHUM that Geneal Prem, General Prayut and General Athit had agreed that General Athit would become RTA CINC. Thus, General Saiyut was bypassed. Because this was the case, it was meaningless for General Saiyut to make any proposals about who should be RTA CINC, even though deep down he wanted the position to go to General Pamot.

At the same time, a high-ranking officer said that both General Prayut and Geneal Saiyut proposed that General Pamot be made RTA CINC. But it was General Prem who made the final decision and he chose General Athit without further discussion.

Actually, what was behind the promotion of General Athit is not yet clear. But what happened will definitely become clearer in the next few days.

The Promotion Picture -- the Prem and Athit Lines

"Its only natural that the new RTA CINC will be asked his opinion on who should be put in what position in order to be able to solve future problems or to have things be proper.General Athit had to go and give his views on the promotions. Athit knew a long time ago that he wuld be appointed to this position. In an interview, General Prayut clearly stated that everyone in the army knew who the new RTA CINC would be. It was the newspapers that made an issue of this and that interpreted things incorrectly," said an officer who was well-informed on this year's reshuffle to MATUPHUM.

The words of this officer certainly make sense if we look at the results of the military reshuffle. Looking back at the resnuffle of September 1981, the only two people whom General Prem called in to confer with closely, who knew the secrets and who had the right to voice opinions and propose names for various positions were General Prayut, the RTA CINC (since 26 August 1981) and, General Sak Buntharakun, the then chief of staff of the army (after the reshuffle, he became the deputy RTA CINC).

And concerning this year's reshuffle, it was only General Prem and General Athit who decided who would be appointed to the various positions. General Prayut played no part in this.

Dusting Off Army Preparatory School Class 5, Old Friends Appointed

Army Preparatory School Class 5 is the class of General Athit. This year, this class made rapid progress with one of its members, General Athit, becoming RTA CINC.

In this year's reshuffle, the interesting thing about this class is that Lieutenant General Thianchai Sirisamphan, the director of the Territorial Defense Department for 2 years, was promoted to the position of assistnat RTA CINC. Prior to this, there were rumors that General Athit had restored good relations with Lieutenant General Thianchai. His appointment to the position of assistnat RTA CINC was an important recovery by Lieutentant General Thianchai. And he will definitely serve as the first assistant RTA CINC in place of General Athit since he will be in charge of personnel, an important task in general. Lieutenant General Pathom Soemsin will serve as second assistant RTA CINC in charge of logistics, which is his speciality.

Another person of interest from Class 5, even though he is only a major general, is Major General Pawatwong Hutaswei, who will move from Army Headquarters to become the commander of the Lopburi Military District in place of Major General Khanung Sirimarut. Looking back to the time when Major General Pawatwong was the leader of the 23rd "R" [company] in the Second Army Area, Major General Pawatwong once made General Athit the deputy commander of the 23rd R. But 2 years ago, Major General Pawatwong served as an army expert and last year he was attached to Army Headquarters. Now, he has been "dusted off" and sent to clear up matters at Lopburi.

Besides this, another soldier from this class who has been transferred to Lopburi is Major General Athaphon Somrup, the deputy director of the Territorial Defense Department who will become the commander of the Artillery Center in place of Major General Amphon Sombunying, who is being transferred to Army Headquarters to await retirement. Thus, General Athit has sent friends from the same class to Lopburi in order to solve the problems there.

At the same time, another member of Class 5 is Major General Chuthai Saengthawip, an officer assigned to the Army Operations Center who has now been promoted to lieutenant general and made the assistnat army chief of staff for intelligence. He replaces Lieutenant General Chaloei Sanguansak, who in compensation will assume the pay scale of a general and be attached to the Supreme Commander's Office.

Yutthasak Is Finished; Assigned to Army Headquarters

Concerning Lieutenant General Yutthasak Khlongtruatrok, a classmate of General Athit, after he was promoted to lieutenant general and served as a advisor to the army for a year, there were rumors that he would be made commanding general of the Fourth Army Area. But his hopes were dashed when he was assigned to Army Headquarters. This shows that there is no chance of restoring relations between General Athit and Lieutenant General Yutthasak. During the events of 1-3 April 1981, Lieutenant General Yutthasak and General Kriangsak Chamanan went to Korat as peace emissaries but they were turned back and so his star fell.

It is thought that little will be heard from Lieutenant General Yutthasak this year since "the sun [Athit] is bright," as Lieutenant General Yutthasak has said. Or it may be that Lieutenant General Yutthasak will sing a new song. We will have to wait and see.

Class 3 In Prem's Line Has Been Silenced

Some officers from Army Preparatory School Class 3, the class to which General Pamot Thawonchan belongs, have been kicked [upstairs] and assigned to Army Headquarters. Such officers include Major General Charun Khaothiemsang, the deputy commander of the First Army Area, Lieutenant General Wichit Chitsawi, the assistant army chief of staff for logistics, Major General Dam Prayunson, the deputy commander of the Second Army Area, and Major General Prasat Wimonsilapin, the commander of the Anti-Aircraft Artillery Division. But two other members of Class 3 have shot to the top in the army.

One of these is Lieutenant General Pathom Soemsin, the deputy chief of staff (2) who has been close to General Prem ever since they worked together in the Second Army Area. He is being promoted to assistnat RTA CINC. And it is not expected that there will opposition to this since Lieutenant General Pathom is a highly professional soldier.

"I just learned of my appointment to this position. I just heard the announcement and learned of it the same time as you. Before this, I heard some talk but I didn't pay any attention," said Lieutenant General Pathom to MATUPHUM.

The other officer is Lieutenant General Sup Aksaranukhro, the deputy army chief of staff who is the senior man since he was promoted to lieutenant general 2-3 years ago. He is being given the position of deputy RTA CINC. By turn, it should be general Pamot but it doesn't seem proper. But his classmates will probably understand.

Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy Class 5, New Influence In the Army

As for the officers from CRMA Class 1 on up, looking at the results of this year's reshuffle, it can be seen that CRMA Class 5 has grown in importance. Officers from CRMA classes who were promted to major general and lieutenant general include:

1. CRMA Class 1: Major General Chaowalit Yongchaiyut, the director of operations to become the assistant army chief of staff for operations. He will be promoted to lieutenant general, the first in his class to make lieutenant general. Colonel Chat Chaiyawut, who will become the director for education of the Joint Forces School, Directorate of Education and Research. Colonel Somkhuan Suwan, who will become the secretary of Supreme Command Heqdquarters. Colonel Thien Chonmaitri, who will become the deputy director of the Joint Communications Directorate. Colonel Wichai Phoemsap, who will become the chief of the Army Accounting Control Office. Colonel Ngamphon Nutsathit, who will become the chief of army intelligence. And Colonel Aphithep Intharaphithak, who will become the commander of the Chiang Mai Military District.

2. CRMA Class 2: Colonel Wisit Atkhlumwong, who is being promoted to major general and who will become the chief of staff of the Third Army Area.

3. CRMA Class 3: Colonel Thamniep Thapmani, who will become the assistnat chief of staff of the Central Directory Division, Supreme Commander's Office. Colonel Chawan Kanchanakun, who will become the director of the Office of Civil Engineering. Colonel Kasem Thammakun, who will become a special operations officer at Army Headquarters. And Colonel Arun Pariwattham, who will become the commander of Combat Support Headquarters 2.

4. CRMA Class 4: Colonel Chao Khongphunsin, the deputy commander of the 1st Cavalry Division who will become aide to the defense minister and who will also be attached to Army Headquarters; it is believed that he will be promoted to major general. Colonel Wattanachai Wutisiri, the deputy commander of the Anti-Aircraft Artillery Division who will become the commander of the Anti-Aircraft Artillery Division. And Colonel Siri Thiwaphan, the deputy commander of the 4th Division who will become the commander of this division.

5. CRMA Class 5: Colonel Suchinda Khraprayun, the deputy director of the Army Operations Directorate who will become the director of this directorate (in place of Major General Chaowalit). Colonel Israphong Nunphakdi, the deputy commander of the 1st Division who will become the commander of the 6th Division. Colonel Wimon Wongsanit, the deputy commander of the 6th Division (he is a senator too) who will become the commander of the newly-formed 1st Special Combat Division.

A reliable news source told MATUPHUM that even though only three members of Class 5 were promoted to major general within their chain of command, it can be said that all of them are in command of important forces. It will be these first three men who open the way for the others in this class.

The most important factor is that the influence of Class 5 stems from the intellectual brilliance of its members and from the fact that the members of this class are closer to General Athit than are members of other classes from CRMA.

Thus, the members of CRMA Class 5 are also serving as close advisors to General Athit. And the news source said that Class 5 had great influence on the promotions to important positions.

An investigation by MATUPHUM has revealed that, concerning the names on this year's promotion list, the ones who knew and who were almost always correct when they made a statement about this were officers from Class 5. Thus, while some people were saying that General Pamot would be promoted to the position of RTA CINC, those in Class 5 did not waver in their view that the next RTA CINC would be General Athit.

Lopburi Sobs, Ekek Bunyathi Must Wait

As MATUPHUM once reported, the events at Lopburi have affected at least two officers, that is, Major General Khanung Sirimarut, a member of Army Preparatory School Class 7 who was the commander of the Lopburi Military District, and Major General Amphon Sombunying, the commander of the artillery center. Both were transferred to Army Headquarters following the attempted assassination of General Prem at the Lopburi Artillery Center.

Major General Khanung served as the commander of the Lopburi Military District only 1 year and he was certain to have remained in this position for another 2 years. When the promotion list was first prepared, Major General Khanung was still listed as the commander here. But then at the end of August, Major General Khanung was transferred to Army Headquarters because it was thought that he was the source of the rumor to the effect that the Lopburi soldiers who had been arrested had been beaten and that at a meeting with his subordinates he had said that he felt that General Athit had been too harsh and that he had not shown any respect for the local commander, that is, Major General Khanung.

"I want to say that I am not unhappy about having been transferred to Army Headquarters. I will not discuss the matter of whether I have been treated farily. I am a soldier, and it is up to my commanders to issue orders. If I remained at Lopburi, I would have had much work to do. I have always worked very hard," said Major General Khanung to MATUPHUM tersely.

As was mentioned above, the officers transferred to Lopburi are all classmates of General Athit. This major purge has given General Athit greater confidence in the solidarity here.

As for Major General Ekek Bunyathi, the commander of the Special Warfare Center, he will probably remain in place. And it is expected that, next year, he will be made a lieutenant general and given a "soft" job in the army.

Han Linanon, Wait to Become Army Chief of Staff Next Year

At the level of army area commander, except for the First Army Area, where Major General Phat Urailoet took command, no changes in command were made in the other three army areas. In particular, in the Fourth Army Area, it was expected that Lieutenant General Han Linanon would be promoted to the position of army chief of staff to replace General Pamot. This is a most interesting matter.

A reliable news source told MATUPHUM that, at first, Lieutenant General Han greatly wanted to become army chief of staff. He had discussed this with some high-ranking officers and told them that when he became army chief of staff, Lieutenant General Prayung Bunnak, the assistant chief of staff for operations (who has been promoted to deputy army chief of staff), should, as a southerner, be made the commander of the Fourth Army Area since the present deputy commander is not ready to become commander.

"But Lieutenant General Han later gave up this desire after talking with several groups. Many factions felt that he should remain in his present position for another year since there is much work to do there and since the south still needs a person like Lieutenant General Han," said the news source.

The news source stated that officers from CRMA Class 5 had talked about why it was necessary for Lieutenant General Han to remain in his position for another year. Next year, the position of army chief of staff will definitely go to Lieutenant General Han. And because Lieutenant General Han is a rather progressive person in the army, he immediately stopped thinking about becoming army chief of staff this year.

The National Army and Democratic Soldiers

Based on everything that has happened, it is thought that those thinkers who work closely with Lieutenant General Han will be given a chance to play a more active ideological role in the name of the national army since Lieutenant General Han has now abandoned some of his desires in order to continue working in the south.

In short, the thinking of Lieutenant General Han is the same as that of the Democratic Soldiers, whose ideals are influencing national policy more and more, starting with security matters. An example is the policy to defeat the communists in accord with Order 66/1980 and Order 65/1982.

"General Athit has given them freedom concerning such thinking. There will not be any problems. Even if such policies cannot yet be implemented, this is something good. I do not think General Athit will block this.But he may try to control things," said an officer close to General Athit.

Thus, concerning the ideas of Lieutenant General Han's group, the trend is for more and more of these ideas to be turned into national policy during the next several years. What will increase understanding even more is a clear formulation of what these policies are.

Athit, the New Center of Power

In the past period, there was no real power center in the army. But now it is clear that the upper command echelons in the army have given General Athit a chance to use power more resolutely in order to solve the problems in the army. At the same time, things depend on whcih way General Athit will lean in solving the problems and developing the army.

As for General Prem, it can be said that, to preserve his political power, he must continue to rely on the military power wielded by General Athit. Even though General Prem has ties to some senior officers in the army, most are professional officers whose hands have not been "dirtied" by politics. And he has ties with some officers in the cavalry.

As for Supreme Command Headquarters, which General Saiyut is feverishly trying to increase the importnace of, this year's reshuffle has had a great effect on it. Even officers such as Lieutenant General Som Khattaphan, the director of the Information Office, who are tied to General Kriangsak Chamanan have lost their positions and been assigned to headquarters. And fellow classmates such as General Lak Salikhup have been assigned to headquarters to wait to retire.

From the standpoint of the military, the thing that will tip the balance in General Saiyut's favor will be the navy and air force. Another thing that is important is that changing the structure by making the commanders in chief of the armed services deputy supreme commanders may give General Saiyut real power.

But it is thought that during the 1 year that he has left before he retires, General Saiyut will be busy with structural work more than anything else. But it is not certain whether these structural changes will be completed or how long they will last.

Those Who Oppose Athit, Little Hope

One senior officer told MATUPHUM that if people are going to watch the movements in the army, they should keep their eye on those who gained power and those who lost power to see what they do during the first 3 months. After the first 3 months, nothing will happen. By that time, the dissatisfaction will have died down and General Athit will have consolidated his power, if he does not trip first.

At present, General Athit does not have the respect of the senior officers. But concerning the effect of this year's reshuffle, there will probably not be any open reaction. It is more likely that what action is taken will be indirect. If this game of opposing General Athit is played in a secret and indirect, but vicious, way, the worrisome thing is that General Athit will have to use force in return. And if that happens, democracy will fail.

One member of CRMA Class 5 told MATUPHUM that "if the RTA CINC acts resolutely, there will not be a coup. As for a coup, the important instigators would come from the officers of my rank. If he is provoked, he may lose, like the 1 April affair, because of lower-ranking soliders like myself."

At the same time, the news source said that, concerning the groups that oppose General Athit, like the young turks, since the situation is like this, they will have to take a stance opposing General Athit in order to put greater pressure on him. Otherwise, things will be very dangerous for them. At the same time, if General Athit launches a political offensive against them by giving some of the officers in the group that was involved in things during the events of 1-3 April a chance to return to government service, he will gain, not lose. This would put great pressure on the young turks more than anything else. If General Athit put forward this proposal, the young turks could not refuse. As Colonel Manun Rupkhachon, the leader of the young turks, once said, their return to government service does not have anything to do with who is RTA CINC.

A New Political Face; Pressure From the Army

"I will say frankly that, at present, General Athit has real power. He has consolidated power. At the same time, he is the center for solving many of the country's problems. I think it is clear that he will use his power resolutely in order to solve the problems. Anyone who opposes him will pose a danger and this would force him to have to use this power in the form of a coup. In my opinion, this is the weakness that the democratic side has not yet found a way to overcome," said a scholar from one of the universities to MATUPHUM.

As for politics in the coming period, the RTA CINC will play a crucial role again. This is at a time when few sides can see what move Geneneral Prem will make in the political game, except to see that his goal is to become prime minister again using as little force as possible.

But what will that move be?

Besides General Prem, who of course knows, at present another person who knows is General Athit.

POSSIBLE SOLUTIONS TO NATURAL GAS IMBROGLIO PONDERED

Bangkok MATUPHUM in Thai 11 Sep 82 p 5

[Article: "The Union Oil Gas Problem: In the Eyes of the Government"]

[Text] Even though the matter of the Union Oil Company's Erawan field producing less natural gas than expected and the explanations of the government have been discussed so much, even to the point where there was a television program on this last month, people in many circles, particularly businessmen, still feel that the matter is not very clear.

At the same time, there are questions about whether the amount of gas in the Erawan field is in fact 70 percent less than the amount that was surveyed, whether this will have an effect on the investment plans and on the use of gas in industry and, if so, to what extent.

Union Oil is one of the two companies that did explatory drilling for oil in the Gulf of Thailand that discovered commercially viable deposits of natural gas. The other company was the Texas Pacific Company.

Prior to this, it was announced that the Union Oil and Texas Pacific companies had discovered up to 12 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. That is, [it was announced that] in the concession area of the Union Oil Company, 1,795 trillion cubic feet of gas had been discovered at the Erawan site, 1.319 trillion cubic feet had been discovered at the Kra Phong and Pla Thong sites, 2 trillion cubic feet had been discovered at the Satun site and 1 trillion cubic feet had been discovered at the Ban Phot site.

As for the Texas Pacific Company, it [said that it had] discovered 5.446 trillion cubic feet of gas at the B site and 0.2 trillion cubic feet at the 17-E1 site.

In short, it was estimated that there would be about 11.76 trillion cubic feet of gas available for use.

As for the Erawan site, a difference between the actual amount of gas and the amount first estimated, that is, 1.795 trillion cubic feet, arose after an independent company of experts was employed to make a definite determination of the amount of gas before a gas trading contract was signed between the Petroleum Authority of Thailand and the Union Oil Company.

The survey by the DeGolyer and McNaughton Company confirmed that the gas reserves estimated at 1.58 trillion cubic feet could differ from this amount by at most plus or minus 15 percent, or 0.203 trillion cubic feet.

The result of this estimation of the amount of gas reserves resulted in the Union Oil Company signing a contract to deliver 200 million cubic feet of gas a day to the Petroleum Authority of Thailand during the first year. This was to increase 50 million cubic feet every year to a maximum of 500 million cubic feet a day in 1990. Of this amount, 250 million cubic feet were to come from the Erawan field; the rest was to come from the other fields in the concession.

The confidence in the results of the survey by the McNaughton company resulted in the Thai government agreeing to invest a large sum of money in the construction of a gas pipeline from the Erawan site to Ban Nong Faem in Muang District, Rayong Province. The length of the pipeline is almost 415 kilometers.

At the same time, gas pipelines were constructed to send gas from the coast to the Bang Pakong and Southern Metropolitan power plants, a distance of 260 kilometers. The cost of constructing the pipeline was approximately 15 billion baht.

Furthermore, in the private sector, the Siam Cement Company believed the estimates concerning the amount of gas at the Erawan site just like the government and so it invested approximately 5 billion baht to construct a gas pipeline from Bang Pakong to Saraburi in order to supply its two cement plants. Construction of the pipeline to the first plant is now more than 90 percent complete.

But as for the actual situation, ever since Union Oil delivered the first gas to the Petroleum Authority of Thailand to supply the two power plants on 12 September 1981, the greatest amount of gas delivered by the Union Oil Company has averaged only 100 million cubic feet a day.

Recently, the Union OIl Company proposed that the government re-estimate the amount of gas reserves at the Erawan site.Citing the results of a recent survey that it had conducted itself, it said that it had discovered that the amount of gas reserves was lower than that estimated by the McNaughton company by almost 69 percent, which means that there is only about 0.48 trillion cubic feet of gas. And now, the Union Oil Company is able to deliver only 130-140 million cubic feet of gas a day to the Electricity Generating Authority of Thailand [EGAT] instead of the [planned] 200 million cubic feet. This has greatly affected the use of gas to generate electricity for EGAT.

This disclosure by the Union Oil Company has generated widespread criticism of various sorts. Some have said that this is just a plan by the Union Oil Company to renege on its agreement to deliver gas to the government in order to hold back the difference with the hope of adjusting the price next year in accord with the contract that calls for yearly gas price adjustments or in order to bargain for an increase in the price of the gas.

The reason for this is that [the company] feels that the government did not stipulate a fair price for the gas as compared with the price paid to the Texas Pacific Company, which is receiving almost $1 more per 1 million BTU, or 1,000 cubic feet.

What Are the Facts?

On 18 August 1982, Mr Snoh Unakun, the secretary-general of the National Economic and Social Development Board, convened an extraordinary conference for the sectors concerned in order to discuss the facts concerning this problem. At this conference, four reasons for the problem were discussed:

1. Problems arising from leaks.

2. Problems arising from geological complications.

3. Problems arising from mistakes or carelessness on the part of the Union Oil Company.

4. Problems arising from other chronic problems.

The discussion can by summarized by saying that the leaks of the Packers are due to the fact that the temperature below ground is very high. But this problem can be eliminated form the list of problems because the Union Oil Company has made repairs and corrected the problem at eight wells. There are now only five wells left [where repairs must be made]. Thus, this should not be such a great problem that it would cause the amount of gas delivered by the Union Oil Company to be less than that specified in the contract.

Thus, the next point discussed was whether the problem could be due to the geological structure here. Concerning this point, the conference felt that, actually, the geological structure of the rock layers containing the petroleum was different from [what was first thought]. Based on a more recent survey using a new method, the three dimension siesmic survey, it was possible to get a clearer picture of the structure of the layers that contain the natural gas. That is, it was learned that there were more errors than in the data used to calculate the value of the reserves agreed on when the natural gas contract for the Erawan site was made. And the gas is located in pockets, or small holes, in different layers instead of in a single layer. Because the pockets of petroleum are not connected, with the result that the gas [from the various pockets] cannot flow together, the pressure is much less than it would be otherwise and so gas production has declined. Besides this, two other wells, E3 and D5, are almost dry since the gas has escaped.

As for the third point, that is, the belief that part of the problem may stem from mistakes or technical carelessness on the part of the Union Oil Company, it did not test actual production in the layers where gas was found but simply assumed that gas was present after testing just a few spots. Thus, the Union Oil Company did not make as accurate an estimate of the gas reserves and rate of flow as it should have.

As for the fourth point, it is possible that production and the drilling of wells by the Union Oil Company has not proceeded in accord with the stipulated targets because of [the company's] desire to conceal some of the operations in order to handle the problems discussed in the first and second points. This has resulted in a severe and chronic shortfall of gas.

The contract states that, in the first year, Union Oil must deliver 200 million cubic feet of gas a day to the Petroleum Authority of Thailand. This has made it necessary for Union Oil to have to drill about 20-25 production wells (including swing 25 percent) with each production well having an average of two stems and with each stem producing an average of 5 million cubic feet per day. Thus, each production well can produce an average of 10 million cubic feet of gas a day. But when production began in October 1981, there were only 18 production wells (and to date, Union Oil has drilled only 11 additional production wells). And when the problems mentioned in points one and two were encountered, the gas shortfall increased even more. That is, only one stem per production well is producing gas. Furthermore, Union Oil has had to stop using the three drilling rigs to drill new wells. Only one drilling rig can be used since the other two have had to be used to repair old wells. As for the five drilling platforms that have been built, only two of the platforms are working well, that is, platforms A and B. Platform C has not drilled any wells, platform D has begun drilling well 7 and platform E has drilled only two wells. Each platform must drill 10 wells.

Thus, at this point, the government feels that these are the reasons for the gas shortfall, in which the Union Oil Company has delivered an average of only 115 million cubic feet of gas a day to the Petroleum Authority of Thailand during the past year, which is not in accord with the contract.

However, concerning the reasons for the shortfall based on the first and second points above, based on a study by the Department of Mineral Resources, it is believed that these two points would lower the original estimate of gas reserves, that is, 1.58 trillion cubic feet, by about one-third only. But concerning this matter, there are still things that are not clear.

The Way to Solve the Problem

This means that the government has accepted the gas shortfall, according to the targets, as a fact. Because of this, the question that arises is: How will the government solve this problem? Because this state of affairs will definitely have a great effect on things, to solve this problem, there are two paths to take:

1. The Union Oil Company can drill an additional 90-100 production wells. This would enable Union Oil to increase gas production to 180 million cubic feet per day by the end of this year.

2. The natural gas from other fields in the Gulf of Thailand can be developed. For example, the natural gas of the Union Oil Company in the Chakrawan and Funan fields can be developed, and the gas of the Texas Pacific Company at the B Field in concessions 15 and 16 can be developed. And the land oil fields at Lan Krabu and Khon Kaen can be developed. But this measure still has many problems that will take many years to solve since none of the fields here have produced any oil that can be used profitably.

However, the government still has hopes in the Pla Thong field and in the other fields in concessions 10-13. The gas reserves here total approximately 5 trillion cubic feet, and it will be possible to deliver this gas at a rate of 150 million cubic feet a day during the first year beginning on 31 March 1985. This will increase to 300 million cubic feet a day by the third year. But this means that there will continue to be a gas shortfall for 3 more years unless Union Oil is able to increase the number of production wells in the Erawan field.

Definite Effects

As for the effects that this is sure to have, these can be summarized as follows:

1. The plans of the Petroleum Authority of Thailand to deliver gas to EGAT and the investments by EGAT, which now total at least 10.7 billion baht, in building power plants that use natural gas for fuel at the Bang Prakong and Southern Metropolitan power plants have been affected. And deliveries to and investments in the cement plants belonging to Siam Cement, which has already invested several billion baht, have been affected.

2. This will affect the gas-separation project. It is certain that the Petroleum Authority of Thailand has already invested money to start construction on the gas-separation plant in the first unit. This plant, which will have a production capacity of 350 million cubic feet a day, will go into production around 1984. During the first 2 years of production, the production target is 250 million cubic feet of gas a day. Concerning the effect of this problem, the Petroleum Authority of Thailand claims that this will cause only a 6-month delay in the construction of the gas-separation plant.

As for the effect on other plans such as gas delivers by the Petroleum Authority of Thailand and other projects, the government does not feel there will be any problem since most of these projects still have at least 3 more years [before they will be completed]. Similarly, the gas export plan will take at least another 8 years of preparations before things are ready.

Things Are Still Not Clear

Even though the results of the summary of the causes, effects and solutions seem better than expected, there are still certain problems that the government has not clarified. For example:

First, there is the effect from the government, or the Union Oil Company, agreeing to the drilling of another 30-50 gas wells in the Erawan field. This will probably have an effect on the gas price changes of the Union Oil Company. Even though the government has made the assumption that it is difficult for Union Oil to invest more since its income from the sale of the natural gas and natural gas waste [if low], the additional billions of baht that Union Oil must invest will certainly affect the principal and business returns.

Second, it is true that the government is not able to correct the mistakes in the contract made with the Union Oil Company. The government can only act in accord with the conditions. That is, it has the right to fine the company 20 percent of the sales price.Or it can pay for the gas delivered by the company at a rate of only 80 percent of the actual price until the company delivers the full amount of gas as called for in the contract.

And during the conference that day, the government admitted that taking action against Union Oil still involves several problems concernign the factors concerned that even the government has not been able to summarize.

UPPER HOUSE DEBATE ON IMF BANK BILL REPORTED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 20 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] THE Government does not propose to devalue the rupee, Union Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee told the Rajya Sabha on Tuesday.

Replying to the debate on the International Monetary Fund and Bank Bill he said that but for the dollar rate, in which the rupee had lost by about 4.5 per cent, the Indian currency had appreciated from 5 to 20 per cent with respect to the pound-sterling, deutsch mark and franc, which constitute the basket on which the rupee rate is fixed.

The Rajya Sabha later passed the Bill, with the Opposition, barring the National Conference, boycotting the voting. They charged the Government with bartering away the country's economic and political sovereignty. The Bill has already been passed by the Lok Sabha.

Mr Mukherjee denied the charge, made by almost all Opposition speakers including Mr M Kalyanasundaram, Mr Kalyan Roy and nominated member Malcolm Adisheshiah that the economic information demanded by the IMF could be used to pressurise India into falling in line with western dictates on financial and other matters. "The information is of a general nature like annual GNP, foreign exchange reserves and the like. India will not part with information which it considers to be sensitive or which could be used against it," the Finance Minister assured.

The debate was marked by persistent Opposition fears that by accepting IMF conditionalities, and depending on foreign finance, India was risking the bankruptcy which had shattered Mexico and had been responsible for the situation in Poland.

The other major points the Opposition members raised were the dilution of the self-sufficiency concept by liberalised imports of commodities and technology and a shift in foreign policy as shown in the changing stance on the agreement with the US on nuclear fuel for Tarapur power plant.

Opposing the Bill, Mr P Ramamurti (CPI-M) charged the "sudden change" in the Government's stand on the nuclear fuel supply for Tarapur plant was the result of a threat held out by the United States to block the loan India was getting from the IMF.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi had announced the changed stand at a meeting of the Consultative Committee attached to the Department of Atomic Energy soon after a "diplomatic note" holding out the threat was received by the Government, Mr Ramamurti said.

The CPI-M leader read out certain portions from what he called "an authentic copy of the diplomatic note" to substantiate his charge.

He sought to place the copy of the note on the table of the House but was not allowed by Deputy Chairman Shyam Lal Yadav. However the CPI-M leader challenged Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee to deny his charge.

According to Mr Ramamurti, the note said it India did not change its stand on the nuclear fuel supply for Tarapur plant, it might have congressional repercussions which might force the United States to block the IMF loan to India.

The CPI-M leader said the IMF was dictating terms to India to change its policies and Parliament had been reduced to a rubber stamp to endorse all these dictates.

In a hard hitting speech, lasting 40 minutes, Mr Ramamurti said "the Government has mortgaged the country's economic sovereignty which will ultimately lead to mortgaging our political sovereignty as well."

He urged the Government to terminate the IMF loan because the 600 million people of this country were capable of standing on their feet. The Government must withdraw the bill, Mr Ramamurti said.

Mr Ramamurti said the industrial policy had been redrafted by the Government at the instance of the IMF. While the European countries were adopting protectionist policies in the wake of recession and growing unemployment, they were forcing India through the IMF to open its door for their goods to compete in the Indian market, he said.

The IMF did not meant to help India but on the contrary was interested in passing on the burden of the European countries to India's shoulders, the CPI(M) leader said. At the dictates of the IMF, Mr Ramamurti said the Government was indirectly devaluing rupee bit by bit in the name of export promotion and allowing foreign collaborations and foreign investments.

The country's foreign exchange bill was going up and the foreign exchange reserves shrinking, he said.

In his reply, Mr Pranab Mukherjee said the Opposition had not made a case that the country withdraw from the World Bank or the IMF. "Their charges are fantastic nonsense," he said.

The Finance Minister said the basic work for the IMF loan had been done during the Janata Party regime. "The amendments in the IMF were accepted by the then Government in 1978 and implemented in 1979.

Mr Mukherjee said he admitted that the IMF was not a missionary organisation and was not giving funds out of charity. "We are not surrendering any right—the Government has the right to decide what type of information to give them," he said, adding that such information was needed for the IMF's international monetary system.

The Government, he said, was nonetheless fighting in international forums that World Bank and IMF could not impose straight-jacket conditions on developing countries, but should take into account their specific situations. "We have told them that ultimately, if developing countries have to pay back 90 per cent of their foreign exchange, they will stop buying from the West."

IMPLICATIONS OF IMF BILL DISCUSSED IN LOK SABHA

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 18 Oct 82 p 9

[Article by M. H. Jadhav]

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Oct. 17.—The formal and seemingly innocuous title of the Bill adopted by the Lok Sabha last week to amend the International Monetary Fund and Bank Act, 1945, hardly gives an indication of the serious legal and constitutional implications for the relationship between India and the IMF.

It was stated by the Government that the Bill only sought to incorporate in the Act the amendments carried out in 1969 and 1976 (which was brought into force in 1978) in the Articles of Agreement with the IMF. The Government took nearly four years to incorporate in our Act the amendments carried out in the Article of Agreement of the IMF

Clearly the amending Bill followed a loan of $5.8 billion (Rs 5,000 crores) the Government of India contracted with the IMF.

The International Monetary Fund and Bank Act came into force in 1945. It was for the first time, during the last week, that independent India's Parliament had the opportunity to go into the merits and demerits of the Legislation. The principal Opposition speakers were Mr Satish Agarwal (BJP), Mr Sunil Maitra (CPI-M), Mr Subramaniam Swamy (Janata) and Mr Inderjit Gupta (CPI).

'SURVEILLANCE'

Mr Agarwal pointed out that the Government of India now accepted the "surveillance" of IMF on the exchange-rate policies. Section 3 reads: "(A) The fund shall oversee the international monetary system in order to ensure its effective operations and shall oversee the compliance of each member with its obligation under Section 1 of this article. (B) says: "In order to fulfil its function under (A), above, the fund shall exercise firm surveillance over the exchange-rate policies of its members, and shall adopt specific principles for the guidance of all members with respect to those policies. Each member shall provide the fund with the information necessary for such surveillance, and when requested by the fund, shall consult in on the member's exchange-rate policies"

EXCHANGE-RATE

As Mr Agarwal asserted, "in regard to exchange-rate policies the Government of India is not free to act in any manner it likes and the IMF has got full powers under Section 3 to have a firm surveillance over our exchange-rate policies".

The amendment of the Act, which binds the institutions, organisations, importers and exporters, and the Government of India, the Reserve Bank of India to furnish all information to the IMF, in Mr Agarwal's view, is clearly in violation of the Fundamental Rights enshrined in Chapter 3 of the Constitution. He pointed out the danger of massive borrowings, internally and externally, resorted to by the Government of India.

In support of his assertion, he said the founding fathers of the Constitution had already made a provision in Article 292 of the Constitution to enact Laws to fix a limit on the borrowing power of the Union Government. Mr Agarwal's demand that the Government must bring forward a Legislation under Article 292 of the Constitution, was well-received by the House.

Mr Subramaniam Swamy raised the question of repayment of the IMF loan of Rs 5,000 crores in nine instalments, from January 1985. The IMF loan, compounded at a rate of interest of about 12% to 13%, worked out to Rs 9,000 crores, four years hence. It also meant that an extra Rs 1,000 crores annually in foreign exchange would have to be earned, over and above that necessary for meeting the nation's trade-deficit, running at a level of Rs 6,000 crores. Besides, India had to pay Rs 880 crores annually in foreign exchange on interest and amortisation of the old loans of the World Bank.

G. K. REDDY REPORTS ON VISIT TO BEIJING

Interview with Zhao Ziyang

Madras THE HINDU in English 13 Oct 82 p 1

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Oct. 12.

The Prime Minister of China, Mr. Zhao Ziyang, wants the Sino-Indian border dispute settled on the basis of the five points put forward by the leader of the Chinese delegation, Mr. Fu Hao, at the last round of the official-level talks in Delhi.

These five points, read in conjunction with the five principles of co-existence, could serve, in his view, as basic guidelines, for evolving through further discussions, a mutually acceptable concept of a comprehensive settlement of the border problem.

In a 90-minute interview in Beijing on October 3, Mr. Zhao did not mince words in voicing his disappointment at the lack of progress during the first two rounds of the official-level talks on the border question. He felt that India should make adequate preparation before the next round of talks in Beijing towards the end of this year for which no date has been suggested yet by either side.

The five points referred to by the Chinese Premier were equality, friendly consultations, mutual understanding and mutual accommodation, fair and reasonable settlement and comprehensive solution. Unfortunately, there was nothing new in these five points which were only components of the classic sentence that the Chinese officials had been repeating since 1960 during various stages of the talks on the border problem.

Position restated

At the last round of talks in Delhi, Mr. Fu Hao merely restated the Chinese position that the two countries, treating each other as equals, could, through friendly consultations, and, in a spirit of mutual understanding and mutual accommodation, reach a fair and reasonable, comprehensive settlement. But, in commending this approach to the border problem, Mr. Zhao left no scope at all for any ambiguity about the Chinese stand by stating categorically that China would not compromise on its sovereignty or make any unilateral concession.

The whole accent of Mr. Zhao's advocacy of a fair and reasonable solution was on a comprehensive settlement of the entire border problem and its inter-related issues. It was for this reason that he declined to be drawn into a discussion on Sikkim and Bhutan. All that he said was that during his visits to India's neighbours, Nepal and Pakistan, he had advised them to improve their relations with India, while stressing that if India also followed a good-neighbourly policy, it would help to create a better atmosphere of peace and stability in the South Asian region.

The Chinese Premier did not, therefore, think that the time was ripe for elevating the current Sino-Indian dialogue to the political level in the absence of any progress at the official level on the very concept of a settlement. It would be more advisable, in his opinion, to continue the present talks at the official level until the persisting differences were adequately narrowed down.

Keen on PM's visit

But, at the same time, Mr. Zhao was very keen that the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, should pay a visit to China to keep up the momentum of normalisation in other spheres. He said he had personally extended her an invitation when they met in Cancun in October 1981 and it was subsequently renewed by the Chinese Vice-Premier and Foreign Minister, Mr. Huang Hua, when the former Indian Ambassador to China, Mr. K. S. Bajpai, paid a farewell call on him in June last before returning to Delhi.

The Chinese Prime Minister said that Mrs. Gandhi would receive a very warm welcome which, some other Chinese leaders assured, would be comparable to the memorable visit of her father in October, 1954, during the high noon of Sino-Indian relations. He conceded that border settlement was central to Sino-Indian normalisation, but continued to maintain that the two countries should work together in other fields without waiting for a solution of this complex problem.

If Mrs. Gandhi paid a visit to China, the border question would no doubt be discussed, but it would not be the only issue to be considered during such a visit since there were several other spheres for increased cooperation.

The two countries should make conscious efforts to expand the current dialogue to develop both bilateral and international cooperation without confining it to the border problem. Apart from making a great contribution to the cause of the third world, India and China could learn from each other by sharing their experiences and exchanging experts for better utilisation of their talents and resources. It was in this context that China had been pressing for a wider normalisation of relations.

The Chinese Premier did not agree that the Sino-Indian border conflict was one of the sad legacies left over by the Maoist era that required to be settled soon to provide greater credibility to the present Government's pragmatic policy of shedding the past rigidities and displaying greater flexibility in the conduct of China's foreign relations.

He said China, like India, was a victim of imperialism and, by implication, he seemed to defend fully the stand taken by the Chinese delegation at the last round of talks in Delhi that it was an injured party that was no less entitled to redress over the border problem.

Political stability

The principles that were embodied in the package offer made to India were the same as those applied in settling the border issues with several other neighbouring nations. The Chinese people, including the Tibetan population, felt very strongly about the border problem and, if India did not agree to the application of these principles, it would not be possible to resolve this problem. It was in this context that Mr. Zhao said that China would not compromise on its sovereignty or make any unilateral concessions to arrive at a settlement.

The Chinese Prime Minister spoke at length about the recent changes in China and the efforts of the present leadership to usher in a long period of political stability and orderly economic development, the efforts under way to undo the damage done by the Cultural Revolution and the decision to do away with the dogma of permanent revolution. The new stress on socialist modernisation implied not merely a readiness to dispense with the doctrine of a continual class struggle, but also a renewed emphasis on the rule of law to restore the confidence of the people.

Sensitive questions

In opening up China to the outside world, the present leadership was also trying to develop good relations with all countries of the world on the basis of the five principles of peaceful co-existence. But, in seeking better bilateral relations with both the super-powers, China was not in any way diluting its stand against hegemonism. He drew a distinction between the offensive hegemonism of the Soviet Union which continued to arm itself and commit aggression and the defensive hegemonism of the U.S. which was still supporting Israel and South Africa, stationing troops in South Korea and interfering in China's internal affair through its stand on Taiwan.

The Chinese Prime Minister received me not in the Great Hall of the People where the Chinese leaders normally meet foreign visitors, but in the Zi Guang Ge pavilion in the Zhong Nan Hai part of the Forbidden City, where all the top leaders live and work in a special security zone. It is the inner sanctum sanctorum of the vast web of Chinese party and Governmental power, where Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai and others used to reside.

At the end of the 90-minute interview, there were still some questions which remained unanswered, but Mr. Zhao had to leave to attend an important party conclave. He said his colleagues would be happy to answer them on his behalf, but no replies were received because these were of a sensitive nature relating to some recent border incidents, the renewed Chinese reference to U.S. resolutions on Kashmir during the exchange of protests over the extension of the Karakoram road through the Khunjarab pass and the suggestion that China should declare that this road would never be used for military purposes.

Sino-Indian Relations Reviewed

Madras THE HINDU in English 17 Oct 82 p 2

[Text] A SIGNIFICANT feature of the Sino-Indian relationship at present is that there is greater awareness, and even appreciation, in China of the progress India has made in many fields since Independence. As a country that has gone through the agonising ordeals of several setbacks to its own development, China is no longer taking a dim view, as it used to do in the past, of India's ability to forge ahead under its present political dispensation.

The better informed people in Beijing have no hesitation in conceding that India is well ahead of China in several spheres, if only to drive home the point that the two countries could benefit considerably by cooperating with each other and sharing their knowledge. The refrain of any conversation in China on Sino-Indian relations is that the two neighbouring nations should work together and utilise their skills in the common endeavour of improving the living standards of their peoples. Those who matter in Beijing now do not subscribe to the theory of an inherent rivalry between India and China representing two antithetical political systems.

The Chinese with all their fixations still tend to see at times symptoms of deepening dissonance in the Indian polity, when they hear of recurring regional animosities, communal riots, labour unrest, student violence and persecution of weaker sections. But after the sobering experience of their own turmoils they are inclined to take a more understanding view that these are only a painful manifestation of the inner turbulence of a society in transition from stagnation to development.

The social disparities in India come in for some critical comments, but here again the whole tone and tenor of the criticism is aimed at driving home the point that developing countries could not afford the luxury of laissez-faire. It is not intended to decry Indian socialism as no more than a camouflage for capitalism.

Sign of resilience

The Chinese critics of the concept of a mixed economy, no doubt, draw attention to the inner contradictions in the Indian policy of letting the private sector have a free run by confining State ownership to the commanding heights of the economy, which only facilitates the growth of capitalism with the big business houses reaping the benefits. But in pointing out the basic incompatibility of the two approaches to steer a middle course between socialism and capitalism, the Chinese advocates of a greater degree of public ownership do not jump to the conclusion that the Indian experiment is bound to fail because of these ideological contradictions.

On the contrary, the Indian capacity to muddle through even in the face of insurmountable difficulties is recognised as a reassuring sign of its resilience, a source of strength than weakness, in making an ambitious bid to chart out a less painful course to achieve its socio-economic objectives. The accent is on wishing India well in making a success of this experiment, rather than pointing a critical finger at it.

After the 1962 conflict, China was bent on demolishing India's image in the eyes of the Afro-Asian peoples by branding it as a decadent society that was bound to fall apart sooner or later, torn asunder by its internal dissensions. China's policy then was to go out of its way to denounce India in every possible way to belittle its importance. When the representatives of the five Colombo Powers went to Beijing in December, 1962, on an exploratory mission, Mr. Liu Shaoqi spoke very harshly that until India was repeatedly hit it would not come to its senses. The then Chinese Premier, Zhou En-lai told them that he had not met a more arrogant man than Nehru about whom he spoke with scant respect.

Cooperation

Now it is referred to with considerable commendation as a country of great achievements that is destined to play a pivotal role in the promotion of peace and stability in South Asia. It is no longer regarded either as a running dog of Western imperialism or a stooge of the Soviet Union, but accepted as a great Asian country that required to be assiduously cultivated and weaned from these evil influences. The Chinese see no harm in striving for a mutually beneficial relationship in other spheres to erase the bitter memories of 1962, even if it is not possible to settle the border dispute in the foreseeable future.

It was against this general background that the Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Zhao Ziang, repeatedly stressed that the two countries which held identical views on Third World problems should cooperate more closely in evolving a new economic order to pave the way for a more equitable relationship between the rich and poor nations. He wanted India and China not only to share their technical expertise but also extend it to other developing countries which were badly in need of such assistance. He assured India that China was not interested in interfering in the internal affairs of other countries, much less in exporting revolutions to them.

What the Chinese are aiming at is not a return to the frothy bhai-bhai phase but the establishment of a sound and sensible relationship that would provide enough flexibility for agreeing to disagree on many issues without detriment to their bilateral cooperation. The Chinese are not happy with what is regarded in Beijing as India's increasing dependence on the Soviet Union, but they are prepared to live with this until India disengages itself from it.

Erasing the scars

It is quite evident that China is keen on normalisation, but it is not ready to settle the border dispute except on its own terms. As a highly sensitive nation that is conscious of its own territorial claims, China can also be insensitive to the feelings of other peoples involved in these disputes. The tone of sweet reasonableness changes suddenly into a dogmatic reassertion the moment one broaches the border problem during any discussion on Sino-Indian relations.

The Chinese want Mrs. Gandhi to visit their country because they believe that she alone can display courage and imagination in erasing the scars of the 1962 conflict. The ruling triumvirate — Mr. Deng Xiaoping, Mr. Zhao Ziang, and Mr. Hu Yaobang — think that they can establish a better understanding with her. It is not in the Chinese tradition to make any concession in advance, other than conciliatory gestures, to make it politically possible for her to visit China before some progress has been made in the border discussions.

The Chinese continue to maintain with an air of injured innocence that in proffering the package proposition they had indeed given up their claim to the territory south of the McMahon line in return for India's acceptance of the de facto position in Aksai Chin. If India does not agree to this mutual adjustment, China cannot proceed on the assumption that while the McMahon line stands accepted in the north-eastern sector, the disputed territory in the western sector is open to negotiation. It is in this context that the Chinese have been insisting that the offer should be accepted in toto without ripping open the contents and discussing them separately for a sector by sector settlement, before they can be put back together into a single package.

The moment the border issue is bypassed or got out of the way in any discussion on Sino-Indian relations, the Chinese revert automatically to their posture of sweet reasonableness and start speaking eloquently about the need for early normalisation. They are quite earnest about their desire for better relations because of the growing conviction that it is in mutual interest. If the differences over the territorial aspects of the border dispute could be narrowed down, the Chinese would probably agree to settle simultaneously the other issues relating to the border region.

Reservations

The Chinese readiness to accept India's primacy in South Asia, especially in the subcontinent, is at present subject to several reservations. They would certainly like to maintain close relations with both Pakistan and Nepal and continue to cultivate Bangladesh and Bhutan without prejudice to India's special interests in the border region. But the Chinese acceptance of Sikkim's integration will have to be negotiated as part of the border settlement. There will have to be a similar accord, as part of the proposed package settlement, on the uses of the Karakoram Road if India cannot recover the occupied part of Kashmir from Pakistan.

It is a complex situation that calls for a careful approach to avoid the pitfalls of further complications. The Chinese want to concentrate first on improving relations in other spheres before coming to grips with the border dispute, although they are prepared to keep talking about it. They are not inclined to elevate the level of the dialogue at this stage for fear of its ending up in a bigger stalemate. Any such setback in their view might take years to overcome before the two sides could resume the threads of normalisation.

Sentimental links

The common people in China are not aware of all these complexities, but they seem to think that the worst is over in Sino-Indian relations. Once again there is a lot of good-natured curiosity about India which is still looked upon as the land of the Buddha with which China had many sentimental associations. In places like Honghzhou (Hangchow) where there are many Buddhist shrines, many Chinese including serving soldiers congregate round the rock sculptures of Indian monks and take pictures.

The exuberance of the 1950s that sadly yielded place to the hostility of the '60s and sullen silence of the '70s has now opened the way for renewed warmth of the '80s auguring well for Sino-Indian relations. The present leadership in China appears to be keen on keeping up the momentum of conciliation even if it is not possible to achieve a breakthrough in the near future.

It is a challenge as much to Indian statesmanship as to Chinese wisdom in making a bold and imaginative effort to resolve this tangle in a spirit of understanding and accommodation. And history will not forgive the present generation of leaders in both countries if they fail in healing the old wounds and erasing the scars to open the way for reconciliation.

DEFENSE MINISTER'S REMARKS IN LOK SABHA REPORTED

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Oct. 15.—The Defence Minister, Mr R. Venkataraman, today assured the Lok Sabha that India was "matching" almost every one of the military equipment being acquired by Pakistan. Mr Venkataraman declared in the House, to the visible satisfaction of members, that India was keeping a close watch on developments in Pakistan.

The Defence Minister told Dr Krupa Sindhu Bhoi during question time that all measures and precautions were being taken to protect the nation's inland territories of Andaman, Nicobars and Lakshadweep. He pleaded with the member that it would not be in the public interest to disclose everything.

In his reply to the main question, Mr Venkataraman said that studies into various aspects of the south Atlantic and West Asia wars had been undertaken. Indeed, they were part of the continuous process of defence preparedness. Also, he said, the nation's defence preparedness would be based on relevant information and such studies. He also told Dr Bhoi that a lot of sophistication had been introduced in weaponry in recent times. He mentioned jamming of radar as one of the lessons India learnt from the Israel-Lebanon war.

The Defence Minister said India had signed agreements with Russia for updating the country's defence systems in tanks, guns, air defence and missiles.

He told Mr P. M. Sayed that a memorandum of understanding had been signed with France for co-operation in defence. In recent discussions with the French Defence Minister, it was agreed that France would share its technology in certain specified technical training to Indian officers in French institutions. "We procure such armaments and equipment as are required from other sources, like the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden and Italy", he said.

On the question of a threat arising from American arms supply to Pakistan, Mr Venkataraman said India kept "a watch on the escalating arms build-up in the region and took necessary and adequate measures to meet the situation".

Mr Venkataraman informed the House that discussions were held with the British Secretary of State for Defence during his recent visit, when it was agreed that it should be possible to expand the areas of cooperation between the two countries. Experts from India and Britain would meet periodically to explore ways of intensifying cooperation in the field of defence.

The Defence Minister said that there had been claims and counter-claims by the parties in the Falklands war of having destroyed or rendered ineffectual opponents' weapons. It was not possible for India, a third party thousands of miles away, to verify them or the validity of the strategies. India could only study the information available for learning some lessons for its own benefit and these were continuing, he said.

WHEAT IMPORTS DISCUSSED IN UPPER HOUSE

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 16 Oct 82 p 9

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Oct. 15.—The Government made clear in the Rajya Sabha today that there was no proposal to import more wheat this year because there were adequate stocks in the country.

Replying to a number of suplementaries during question hour, Rao Birendra Singh, Minister for Agriculture, claimed that there had been record production and procurement this year. This year's wheat production was estimated to be 37.8 million tons. The stock with the Government was also more than last year. Besides, the Government had recently contracted for the import of 2.495 million tons from the United States at a cost of about Rs 400 crores.

The import had become necessary to meet increasing demand and contingencies, the Minister said while replying to Mr Arabinda Ghosh (CPI-M) and others.

Rao Birendra Singh said that the procurement policy had been largely successful in the last three years. But the extent of procurement depended upon the cooperation of the State Government and the Food Corporation of India could not do much on the matter. He told the House that the off-take of wheat had also been increasing because of the expanded public distribution network and owing to differences between the free market price and the issue price.

The Minister characterized as "unfair" the Tamil Nadu Government's demand for foodgrain from the Centre. Tamil Nadu and Orissa were among the States which had not been handing over to the Food Corporation of India the stocks procured by them. Tamil Nadu procured 500,000 tons of rice last year but did not offer a single grain to the FCI. The State Government was now demanding a share from the Central pool.

The Tamil Nadu Government had been maintaining that it could manage the food economy of the State. But last year the Centre had given foodgrain to Tamil Nadu when the State faced severe drought, Mr Birendra Singh said.

The Agriculture Minister did not agree with members that the Government was paying a higher price to the U.S. grower than to Indian farmers by importing wheat.

DEMOCRATIC SOCIALIST LEADER TALKS TO PRESS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Oct 82 p 7

[Text]

JAIPUR, Oct 14 — Democratic Socialist Party leader Raj Narain has called upon Mrs Maneka Gandhi to join his party as it would be difficult for her to continue the fight against Mrs Indira Gandhi.

Addressing a press conference here today, Mr Raj Narain advised Mrs Maneka not to form a new political party as there were already several Opposition parties in the country to divide the anti-Congress-I votes. She should join a political party, he said, while offering her the membership of the DSP which was a democratic party.

When asked whether she was playing in the hands of the RSS Mr Raj Narain observed that while Mrs Maneka Gandhi avoided the RSS, the later had been trying to exploit her. In this context, he recalled the recent arrest of some leaders of the Sanjaya Vichar Manch. Mr Raj Narain said that the RSS had deputed two lawyers in the court to plead the case.

The DSP leader demanded prosecution against Mr Rajiv Gandhi on the charge of abetment of murder through his speech in Amethi which ultimately led to the murder of Sultanpur district secretary of the DSP, Parthasarthi Pandey at the instance of the local police authorities.

Mr Pandey's body was found in a local pond on the night of 29-30 June. Even the post mortem report was not available, he pointed out.

After getting the details of the incidents, Mr Raj Narain said he wrote two letters to Mr Rajiv Gandhi demanding investigations in the case and his side of the version but failed to get any response.

The DSP alongwith other parties has launched an agitation demanding impartial CID inquiry into the case.

He was hopeful of a merger of the socialist, democratic and secular parties. In this direction some efforts were on with the Lok Dal (K) and the Janata Party.

SANTHAL TRIBALS REPORTEDLY PLAN PROTESTS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 15 Oct 82 p 9

[Article by Ambikanand Sahay]

[Text] DUMKA (Santhal Parganas), Oct. 14—Far away from the corridors of power in the State capital, the starving Santhal tribals, who have been facing this season the worst famine since 1967, are beginning to take up arms against the establishment.

Already, a number of "guerrilla squads" have been formed in the hills and jungles of the Santhal Parganas. These extremist groups, which include youngmen and women, aim at liquidating what they describe as "foreign elements" in the administration and society.

Obviously, they hate the non-tribals in the administration and the new settlers in their "exclusive land." They feel that the living condition of the people of the Santhal Parganas cannot improve unless these "foreign elements" are liquidated or at least sent back to their own areas.

Armed with bows and arrows, tens of thousands of famine-stricken tribals will be organising a march in Patna in mid-November with a view to forcing the Government to come to their aid.

Mr Sibu Soren, M.P. from Dumka reserved constituency, and Mr Suraj Mandal, MLA, from the Poraiyahat constituency, said that more than 200,000 people form the seven districts of Chotanagpur and Santhal-Parganas would take part in the rally.

They condemned the police firing at a market place in Palojori on October 7 and the lathi-charge on "peaceful agitators" four days later.

The Jharkhand Mukti Morcha will meet in Dhanbad on October 26 and 27 to fix the date of the rally.

Mr Suraj Mandal said that in spite of reported appeals, the Deputy Commissioner of Santhal-Parganas, Mr U. D. Choubey, had not taken steps to irrigate the rivulets, ponds and wells. Tribals had to walk between 10 and 20 km to get a pitcher of drinking water. The Santhals were now prepared to face bullets.

Mr Soren said the police firing was part of the district administration's "operation terror".

To a large extent, the grievances of these extremist groups seem genuine. Officials have been, over the years, improving their own lot rather than that of the tribals. Relief is scanty in spite of the fact that the district has been experiencing one of the worst droughts in history. The Government's public distribution system has not been of use in the remote areas. In fact, many villages have not received rice or wheat through fair price shops for the past two years. And, those who demanded food were fired at by the police a number of times on October 7; five people were killed when the police fired at a group of demonstrators who were agitating for declaration of the district as a drought-affected area at Palijori. These people had come from all the 17 panchayats of the Palijori block for a meeting. The meeting was, according to eyewitnesses, peaceful.

Why did the police fire? The obvious answer is that the police and the administration, which had failed to contain the tide of discontent, possibly wanted to terrorize the people. They had information that the people of the district were organizing a bigger demonstration to press their demands.

LONG MARCH

But the tactics failed. On October 11, more than 25,000 people, mostly tribals, organized a 9-km-long march. Mr Sibu Soren, M.P., and Mr Suraj Mandal, MLA, the demonstrators reached a field near Mission School at Dudhnai at 3 p.m. And from there they proceeded toward the district headquarters. But they were stopped on the way. At least 100 people were injured in the police action.

Earlier, all routes to Dumka had been sealed. Hundreds of people were stopped on the Bihar West Bengal border at Mihijam near Chittaranjan. Many others were stopped and detained at Jamtara, Deoghar, Palijori, Jama More, Jarmundi, Hasdia and Godda. Important leaders and legislators who were arrested included Mr Stephen Marandi and Mr Simon Marandi. Mr Soren and Mr Mandal, however, escaped on a motorcycle.

This correspondent met Mr Mandal in his hideout near Murmala village in the Jama block at midnight on October 11. He said the administration had gone mad. First they refuse to give relief to the famine victims and then they open fire if the hungry people agitate for food". Mr Mandal said and added that the repression was worse than that witnessed during the British regime.

The police firing on October 7 and the lathi-charge on October 11 had a snowballing effect. General tribals, who had so far nothing to do with the extremists, are veering round to their ideology. It is feared that the Santhal Parganas will become another Assam if things continue to drift.

MIGRATION

At Palijori, at least 20% of the rural population eat once a day. Inadequate rain has ruined the prospects of a good crop. And thousands of people have already migrated to other States, mainly West Bengal, Assam and Punjab in search of jobs. The barter system has been in vogue in the rural markets with the tribals exchanging hens and goats for rice and wheat. The economy is in a shambles.

Landless farm workers are looking for other means of livelihood. Mr Girdhari Mandal, who was killed in Thursday's police firing was a landless labourer. When the rain failed, he turned into a mason. He was buying salt in the bazar when he was killed. His wife, Parvati, is yet to receive relief from the Government. Her husband was the only earning member in the family. She has a three-year-old son. She had not eaten anything for three days when this correspondent met her in her hut at Pindara village.

CHANGES IN PORTFOLIOS OF RAJASTHAN MINISTERS

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 19 Oct 82 p 9

[Text]

JAIPUR, Oct. 18.—Portfolios of almost all the old members of the Rajasthan Council of Ministers have been reallocated by the Chief Minister, Mr Shiv Charan Mathur, in reconstituting his expanded ministry yesterday. In the process many have been divested of important portfolios and left to head relatively less important ones. Mr Mathur, however, kept Home and Industries portfolios for himself.

Mr Mathur also divided the departments of Education and Agriculture while creating three new departments—of Sports Environment and Command Area Development. The Education Department will now consist of primary and secondary education, headed by a Cabinet Minister, and College and University Education Department, headed by a Minister of State. The Agriculture and the Command Area Development portfolios, which were part of one department, will be headed by a Minister of State and Cabinet Minister respectively.

Though the old Cabinet colleagues of Mr Mathur were burdened with several portfolios the impression created by the reallocation is that it would leave them with relatively less important ones. Mr Paras Ram Maderna, however, retains his key portofolio of Irrigation and Public Health Engineering while surrendering the Department of Energy Revenue, Land Reforms and Famine Relief. Mr Chandan Mal Baid the former Finance Minister, takes charge of the Rajasthan Canal Colonisation and the new department of the Command Area Development. Mr Mathur maintained that Mr Baid has been entrusted with "challenging" job because the State Government was keen to ensure completion of the Rajasthan canal within the Sixth Plan period with an additional allocation of Rs 40 crores from the Centre.

Mr Brij Sunder Sharma becomes the new Finance, Taxation and Excise Minister after losing the Law, Justice and Labour Departments. This is interpreted as a gain for him. Mrs Kamala is the new Energy Minister and will also head the Primary and Secondary Education, while earlier she was the Agriculture and Animal Husbandry Minister.

Mr Hiralal Deopura one of the five new Cabinet Ministers inducted on Friday will be in charge of Revenue, Land Reforms, Mining and Labour. Mr Khetsingh Rathod, Chief Whip of the ruling party, becomes the Minister for Medical Health and Family Welfare and Parliamentary Affairs. Mr Hanuman Prabhakar gets Flood and Famine Operation and the State Motor Garage. Mr Dula Ram, a Scheduled Caste, is the Minister for Social Welfare, Tribal Area Development and Housing while Mr Ahmed Bux Sindhi will be the Minister for Law, Justice, Elections, State Enterprises, Waqf and Linguistic Minorities. Mr Prabhakar and Mr Dularam had served in the Pahadia Ministry. At the Ministers of State level the most noticeable change has been in the portfolios of Mr N. S. Bhati, said to be a friend of Mr Rajiv Gandhi. He has been given the charge of Rehabilitation, Jails and Printing and Stationery while earlier he was holding the portfolios of Tourism, Rajasthan Canal and Art and Culture and Archaeology.

But the axe has also fallen on the portfolios of two Ministers of State said to be close to the Chief Minister. Mr Pradyuman Singh, who had the portfolio of Home among others, will now head independently Local Self-Government and Town Planning and also assist the Chief Minister and the Finance Minister in certain other departments.

Mr Shri Ram Gotewala who had attracted some controversy lately is in charge of Animal Husbandry, Dairies and Khadi. He loses the prestigious departments of Local Self-Government and Public Relations.

Mr Jai Kishan Sharma an old Minister of State retains Transport. The new Public Relations Minister is Mr Surendra Vyas who will also be in charge of College and University Education. Mr Dinesh Rai Danghi is the Ayurved Minister and Mr Ghasiram Yadav gets Food Civil Supplies and Civil Defence. Mr Chetram Meena retains his old portfolio of Public Works Department. Mr Govind Singh is the Minister for Forest and the new department Environment. Mr Sheesh Ram Ola is the Minister for Panchayat Raj, Community Development and Soldier Welfare. All these five Ministers of State are among the old colleagues of Mr Mathur.

Among the new Ministers of State Mr B. D. Kalla, who was a Deputy Minister hitherto, becomes the new Minister of State for Tourism, Art, Culture and Archeology. Mr Ram Kishen Verma gets Sheep and Wool, Fisheries and the new department of Sports.

Mr Devendra Singh is the new Agriculture Minister. The four Deputy Ministers with their portfolios are Mr Govind Amaila, Planning, Economics and Statistics and Tribal Area Development Mrs Kamala Bhil Flood and Famine Relief, Medical Health and State Motor Garage Mr Jagtar Singh Irrigation, Colonisation and Industries and Mr Choga Lal Bakolia, Energy, Social Welfare and Ground Water.

Mr Mathur said his new Ministry gave representation to almost all the districts and two members of the minority community, Muslim and a Sikh. He added that his Ministry was broadbased and members were allocated protfolios according to their ability and he hoped the Ministry would function smoothly.

PLANS FOR SAFEGUARDS TO ASSAMESE REPORTED

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 18 Oct 82 p 1

[Text]

NEW DELHI, Oct. 17.—The Centre has reportedly decided to amend the Constitution if the Assam movement leaders accept its offer of providing Assamese with constitutional safeguards in the form of political, educational and employment rights as granted to tribals in other parts of the country, reports PTI.

(According to UNI, the Union Home Minister, Mr P. C. Sethi, said in Bhopal today that there was every reason to be optimistic about solving the Assam problem as the differences between the Government and the agitation leaders had "considerably narrowed down". Mr Sethi told reporters that the only hitch was on the question of the cut-off date.)

The offer, made to the movement leaders by the Defence Minister, Mr R. Venkataraman, at the last tripartite conference on the foreigners issue, will mean the reservation of seats in the State Legislatures for the indigenous people of the State.

The Government feels that with the grant of such rights, the people of Assam will be able to protect their identity—the cause for which they had launched their present agitation about two years ago.

Mr Venkataraman had conducted the tripartite parleys with the movement leaders first when he, along with his Defence portfolio, was holding the charge of Home Ministry. He continued to conduct both the informal and formal talks with them even after he had left the Home portfolio.

However, when the offer was finally made to the Assam movement leaders, they had expressed certain reservations and had pointed out that such safeguards could only be part of a "package of measures" they were demanding for the solution of foreigners issue.

Although the Government wants to have a package deal to solve this problem, it stressed the need for a solution in a phased manner in view of the time consuming process involved in the detection and deportation of foreigners.

The movement leaders had, however, appreciated this approach and promised to give due consideration to Government's offer.

The Government had proposed March 24, 1971, as the date in relation to which to decide who should be included in the electoral rolls, adds UNI quoting the Union Home Minister. The agitators want 1961 as the cut-off year, he said.

However it was within the competence of the Chief Election Commission to decide who should be given the right of franchise, Mr Sethi added. The Home Minister said a tripartite meeting on the Assam foreign nationals problem had been convened in Delhi on November 7.

The next round of talks is going to be final as the Government faces a constitutional obligation to hold elections in Assam before the expiry of the President's rule in March.

The Government appears to have decided that it will have no alternative but to go ahead with the elections in the State even if the next round fails to produce any amicable settlement of the issue.

In Gauhati, the All-Assam Students Union today warned the people against the activities of some national political parties.

In a statement, the AASU president, Mr Prafulla Kumar Mahanta and its general secretary, Mr. Bhrigu Kumar Phukan, urged the people not to cooperate with such parties engaged in the campaign "ignoring the demand of the people of Assam" for a solution to the aliens' issue.

UN DELEGATE URGES SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 15 Oct 82 p 1

[Text]

UNITED NATIONS,
October 14 (PTI).

INDIA yesterday renewed its call for ending the political, economic, commercial and military support extended by some Western countries to South Africa.

Speaking at the third committee of the United Nations (UN) general assembly, the Indian delegate, Mrs. Pratibha Singh, said the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the South African regime was essential to root out the evil system of apartheid completely and it was long overdue.

Mrs. Singh said the alternative to a peaceful solution, as the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, had pointed out, was a prolonged armed struggle and greater suffering for the people of South Africa.

Mrs. Singh said the U.N. should note with "sorrow and shame" that the situation of human rights in South Africa had not improved. On the contrary, racism and colonialism still raged in South Africa today with little progress either in the elimination of apartheid or in the liberation of Namibia.

The Indian delegate said it was an irony that some affluent and industrialised nations, who proclaimed their support to the cause of human rights, equality and justice, continued to collaborate actively with the racist regime in Pretoria in various fields.

The irony was made sharper in that these were democratic societies, committed to multiracialism and to promote racial harmony within their respective countries. These were societies which cherished human values and zealously safeguarded the rights of their citizens. Were the human rights of the non-white population of southern African less sacrosanct, Mrs. Singh asked.

CYNICAL CHARADE

Mrs. Singh also spoke of the "cynical charade" aimed at placating the forces of illegal occupation of Namibia. Too often in the past, hopes had been raised only to be shattered soon after by the racist regime, she said.

Mrs. Singh also voiced India's strong support for the rights of the Palestinians and expressed the hope that those who were in a position to do so would make Israel see reason and help achieve a just and comprehensive settlement to ensure the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people for their homeland.

REPORT ON CZECHOSLOVAK ENGINEERING MINISTER'S VISIT

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 20 Oct 82 p 7

[Text]

Czechoslovak Minister for General Engineering Ing P Bahyl on Tuesday discussed with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi the issues connected with increasing collaboration between the two countries in the fields of industry and technology.

After his half an hour meeting with Mrs Gandhi, the Czech Minister said that his country was looking forward to have collaboration in new areas for mutual benefit.

Ways and means of continuing the collaboration in higher forms in the field of economy, industry and technology were discussed, he added.

Mr Bahyl said that his country would like to increase the trade turnover.

Earlier, he met Industry Minister N D Tiwari. Mr Tiwari stressed the need for diversifying trade exchanges so as to enlarge the component of industrial manufacture and engineering goods in India's exports to Czechoslovakia consistent with the high level of technical collaboration that has been established between the two countries.

Mr Bahyl fully appreciated the suggestion and said that appropriate proposals to give content to this suggestion would be worked out.

Mr Bahyl is visiting India in connection with the release of the 100,000th tractor manufactured in India with the Czech collaboration. A function on the occasion will be held on Wednesday at HMT Pinjore in Punjab.

The two Ministers expressed satisfaction at the collaboration between Gujarat Tractors Ltd and HMT on the Indian side with Motokov of Czechoslovakia in the manufacture of tractors.

It was agreed that a stage has been now reached for utilising the capacities created in India for the supply of tractor components and parts to similar Czech assisted projects in other countries as well as in Czechoslovakia itself. Manufacture of fuel injuction pumps in India was identified as an area where useful collaboration could be forged.

JOINT VENTURES BEING PLANNED WITH BANGLADESH

Calcutta THE STATESMAN in English 16 Oct 82 p 13

[Text] At least three joint venture projects, with Indian technical and financial assistance, will be set up in Bangladesh in the next few years. Official sources said in Calcutta on Friday that besides these three projects for production of cement, sponge iron and diesel engines for agricultural pumps, other schemes to build railway coaches and set up textile and sugar mills were also being examined at the official level of the two countries.

The setting up of joint ventures with Indian credit in Bangladesh had figured prominently in the communique issued at the end of the Indo-Bangladesh summit talks, held in Delhi early this month. Official sources said that when the Foreign Ministers of the two countries meet in Delhi next month for the first Joint Economic Commission talks, modalities for executing the three projects to be taken in hand would be discussed.

The sources said that India's participation in joint ventures in Bangladesh was intended to project its attainments in medium and high technology industries and also to demonstrate to Bangladeshis its desire to be a partner in their country's economic progress.

The sources said that Mrs Gandhi herself had taken initiative in the Indo-Bangladesh joint ventures. Appreciating that these projects may not get off the ground without Indian assistance, the Prime Minister, a few days before Lieutenant-General Ershad's visit to Delhi, had instructed Mr Pranab Mukherjee, Union Finance Minister, to make arrangements for extending credit to Bangladesh.

The Finance Minister, it is learnt, is working out a package of Government-to-Government and commercial credit which would be made available to Bangladesh. According to available indications, the total credit may amount to Rs 80 crores. The sponge iron project would absorb the bulk of the credit component--about Rs 40 crores.

Mecon, a Union Government consulting firm, has already made a preliminary study of the sponge iron project.

MINISTER DENIES PRC CAPTURED INDIAN SOLDIERS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 20 Oct 82 p 3

[Text]

THE Government on Tuesday denied in the Rajya Sabha a report that Chinese soldiers had captured and taken away three Indian border guards from the Chusul-Dem-Chowk area of the Indian territory recently report agencies.

Minister for Defence R Venkataraman said the report of China having hoisted its flag in Ladakh area was also not correct.

Deputy Minister for Defence K P Singh Deo said the Government had seen media reports that China had recently established a military camp in Misger and posted two companies of mountain warfare troops in Hunza area of the Gilgit agency in Pakistan occupied area of Jammu and Kashmir but had no confirmed information on the subject.

The Deputy Defence Minister also said that the Government had taken up with both Pakistan and China the issue of a protocol recently signed between the two countries, opening the Khunjerab pass to traffic on the Karakoram highway.

Mr Venkataraman said the Government had seen press reports that China was helping Pakistan in the development of nuclear capability, but it did not have confirmed information in this regard.

F-16 PLANES: The Government has seen reports that F-16 planes were very successfully tested by the US through Israeli pilots in Lebanon recently and that MiG-23 piloted by the Syrians were no match for them. The Government, however, has no positive information in this regard, Mr Venkataraman said. He also said that the Government was not considering any proposal to procure F-16 planes.

ARREARS: The amount in arrears with various companies which have received direct financial assistance from the Industrial Development Bank of India (IDBI) as on 30 June last was Rs 167.9 crore, said Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee.

He said that the amount comprised Rs 71.9 crore as principal and Rs 96 crore as interest.

GANDHI ANSWERS QUESTIONS ON BIHAR PRESS BILL

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 15 Oct 82 p 1

[Text]

PRIME Minister Indira Gandhi on Thursday refused to commit the Central Government on whether it was recommending to the President to give his assent to the controversial Bihar Press Bill or not.

To persistent opposition demands that she spell out if the Cabinet would consider the issue, Mrs Gandhi declared that Cabinet issues could not and would not, be discussed in the House.

Mrs Gandhi however stressed that she and her Government stood for the freedom of the press. Denying charges that she had already given her support to the Bihar Press Bill without reading it, the Prime Minister told Mr Piloo Modi, Mr L K Advani and others that she had "neither endorsed nor rejected the Bill". Her comments, she said, had been torn out of context.

But while she stood committed to press freedom, Mrs Gandhi said she felt that there ought to be control on certain things. The newspapers, she said, had aggravated the situation in Meerut and in other trouble-torn areas. "Certain things ought to be controlled though not exactly by the Government" she added.

The press, she said, had itself agreed that such things should not be permitted, and it was for it to make suggestions.

The Prime Minister intervened repeatedly through the stormy discussion on the question raised by Mr Advani. She however did not respond to a question if the Centre would come forward with a comprehensive bill on the subject. But she pointed out that there had been no protest to similar bills passed by Tamilnadu or Orissa.

WRITER DISCUSSES POLITICAL POSITION OF GANDHIS

Bombay THE TIMES OF INDIA in English 17 Oct 82 Supplement p 1

[Article by Girilal Jain]

[Text] Mrs. Gandhi will be only 65 on November 19. And she is in excellent health. Even so, in view of her status as the only national leader, the question: "After Indira, who and what" has justifiably come up. Indeed, this issue became particularly pertinent with the failure of the Janata experiment which showed that India could not manage its political affairs without the presence of a towering figure. But before an answer to this question could emerge, another--and this too as important--has arisen: Will India's political system survive even with Mrs. Gandhi around?

The feeling of despair is the result of the growth of both corruption and indiscipline on a massive scale in the Congress (I) and the popular awareness that if this organisation, however grave its failings, goes down, no other party will be able to take its place. Amidst this confusion has intruded the bizarre factor of Maneka, Sanjay Gandhi's young and ambitious widow.

IT speaks for the near total disarray in our political life that we should pay attention to Maneka Gandhi's "political" activities. In a less unstable environment, she would have had to content herself at best with a modest role even as Sanjay Gandhi's widow and Mrs. Indira Gandhi's headstrong and defiant daughter-in-law. Even now she may finally come a cropper. Indeed, it looks as if she has bitten off more than she can chew. But things being what they are, she is likely to continue to hit the headlines.

From the evidence of recent events, it would appear that Maneka continues to enjoy considerable sympathy because she is still seen as a victim of a powerful, capricious and vengeful mother-in-law who is determined to destroy her in order to promote her only surviving son as her successor.

In this psychological battle the odds have been tilted against Mrs. Indira Gandhi. It has not just been a question of the negative image of the mother-in-law, especially in relation to the widowed daughter-in-law, being firmly and deeply planted in the Indian psyche. Other factors have also been at work.

Since the first Congress split in 1969 when Mrs. Gandhi used some hitherto unfamiliar tactics to defeat her opponents, her detractors have managed to stick on her the image of a ruthless woman who will stop at nothing to gain her ends. Indeed, many of her supporters, too, have unwittingly bought this image of her. This has greatly reinforced the stereotype of the cruel mother-in-law.

Since June 1975, when Sanjay Gandhi suddenly emerged on the political scene and began to wield enormous power, the impression has spread that Mrs. Gandhi is trying to establish a ruling dynasty. Her decision to bring Rajiv Gandhi into politics has confirmed this impression. And that in turn has led to the view that if it is legitimate for Rajiv to try and step into his deceased brother's place, so it is for Sanjay's widow. In other words, Rajiv's entry into politics has made it difficult for Mrs. Gandhi and Rajiv's supporters to represent Maneka's political ambitions as illegitimate.

Rajiv is too gentle by temperament and too respectful of norms to have taken over Sanjay's roughnecks and dropouts. His entry into politics, would, if anything, have heightened their sense of insecurity, their feeling of being unwanted, and therefore increased their craving for a "true" successor to Sanjay, that is, someone seemingly cast in a similar mould — as ruthless, as indifferent to established norms and forms, and as unaware of the complexity of issues as Sanjay. Thus as Maneka's frustrations grew on account of Rajiv, so did theirs for the same reason. If she remembered with nostalgia the days when she was India's queen-in-waiting, they yearned for the days when they served as the praetorian guard of the monarch-to-be.

This point should have been clear to both Indira Gandhi and Rajiv and should have persuaded them to tackle it in the only way in which it can be effectively tackled. Rajiv should have sought to project a new style of leadership, very different from Sanjay's but no less dynamic, and Mrs. Gandhi should have encouraged him to do so. They did nothing of the kind. They sat on their hands, waiting to be hit.

The Sanjay brigade, it is true, presented a difficult problem. They could neither own it nor disown it. They could not own the freebooters in the brigade because they did not feel at home with them, the cultural gap being too wide. And they could not disown them because they were there well ensconced in Parliament and the state legislatures. Also neither, especially Mrs. Gandhi, was willing to say or do anything which would suggest that she or he or both had any misgivings about Sanjay's methods and choice of instruments. They would, if they could, close that chapter and move on. They were not prepared to discuss its contents.

What happened at Shanti Vana (the place of Mr. Nehru's cremation) last year was symbolic of their indecisiveness. One night the brick platform where Sanjay was cremated was removed on orders from "above", apparently with a view to ending the anomalous situation of a Sanjay mausoleum alongside the great Nehru's. But when the Sanjay brigade headed by Maneka raised a howl, it was quickly announced that a proper memorial to him was being designed and would soon be put up. And it was.

Fortunately for Rajiv, an opportunity arose last year which, if he had seized it boldly, woul helped him circumvent the Sanjay brigade and project himself as a potential leader. The opportunity was provided by concrete evidence that the then chief minister of Maharashtra, A. R. Antulay, a Sanjay appointee, had abused his office to collect vast sums of money. Rajiv should have at once demanded his resignation and, if necessary, campaigned in order to force his resignation. He took a long time to speak out; even when he did speak, he resorted to ambiguity; and he refused to press the issue when Mrs. Gandhi decided to leave the matter to the Bombay high court. Thus he let a great opportunity slip by.

Antulay is a unique phenomenon in Indian politics. No one has collected so much money in so blatant and unashamed a manner. And no politician has been so callous, in total disregard of any norms. But his methods and brazenness apart, he is a representative figure in today's Congress (I). This fact almost automatically defined Rajiv's political platform for him. He had to come out openly against corruption and other forms of skulduggery in the party and campaign vigorously on this issue. He failed to do so. This did not besmirch his own reputation as Mr. Clean. But his failure to act denied him in public esteem the place he needed to occupy in order to project himself as a possible successor to his mother and pre-empt the challenge which Maneka was bound to mount.

Maneka has played a victim's role with considerable skill. It is a measure of her success in the victim's role that she has been able to brush aside the image she had acquired during the emergency as Sanjay's power-hungry wife and thereafter as an editor who made reckless and sensational charges. So well has she acted the role of a helpless and harassed widow that hardly anyone has taken serious note of the publication of a stunning letter which she wrote to her mother, Mrs. Amteshwar Anand, when she was barely 18. In this letter, written in the context of a family dispute over land, she said: "Darling Ma, I hope Mina uncle (a reference to her maternal uncle) dies a sore death. I have run through all my schemes of kidnapping his children, poisoning his wife's food etc. and I now give up."

Maneka's success in winning sympathy and even support is also a measure of Mrs. Gandhi's failure to fulfil her promise to give the country "a government that works". Whether Mrs. Gandhi knows it or not, a stage has been reached when even her most committed supporters and once ardent admirers have come to despair of her capacity to restore a measure of prestige and coherence to her government and party and check either the loot or the drift.

To a large extent, Mrs. Gandhi is a victim of circumstances beyond her control. The first split in the Congress in 1969 was forced on her by the scheming members of the old guard on the one hand and her ambitious courtiers on the other. A similar story was repeated in the summer of 1975 when Jayaprakash Narayan with his utopian ideas and Justice Sinha with his narrowly legalistic approach drove her into a corner, leaving her a choice only between political harakiri and the overthrow of the constitution. And the story was repeated once again in 1978 when former cabinet ministers, anxious to disown all responsibility for the emergency, and an impatient and irrepressible son, anxious to dominate the country's political scene on the strength of his mother's popularity, compelled her to force another split in the Congress.

Mrs. Gandhi was able to live down the consequences of the first split because it had left the organisation in reasonably good shape. In fact it had helped revive popular support for it which had ebbed away in 1967. Of the other two episodes, it is difficult to say which one has been more debilitating. While the emergency has put in doubt Mrs. Gandhi's commitment to democracy — her decision to go in for elections in 1977 in the face of Sanjay's opposition has not helped remove wholly misgivings on this score— the second split destroyed the only instrument which was available to her to enforce certain norms of efficiency and morality. The Congress (I), as it emerged in 1978, was not the party she had known. Indeed, even the loyalty of many of its luminaries was divided between her and Sanjay.

She tried to mend matters on the eve of the election to the Lok Sabha in January 1980 by admitting a number of old colleagues into her fold and allotting them party tickets. But ironically enough her landslide victory weakened her position in that it enabled Sanjay to argue that since anyone with the Congress (I) ticket could get elected on the strength of the anti-Janata wave, the original faithfuls must have precedence for appointments as well as for party nominations in the poll to the state legislatures. It is widely believed that he selected over 40 per cent of the candidates. And he picked up most of the chief ministers, among them A. R. Antulay and Jagannath Pahadia. The result is there for everyone to see.

But on both occasions — in the election to the Lok Sabha in January, 1980, and to the state legislatures in May the same year — the people had given their vote to Mrs. Gandhi and certainly not to Sanjay and his cronies. So they expected her to redeem her promises. Moreover, the people regard her as a miracle worker. After all, she had floored her opponents united in a grand alliance in 1971; she had defied the U.S. and China, defeated Pakistan on the battlefield and helped the birth of a sovereign Bangladesh in the same year and she had risen phoenix-like out of the ashes of the emergency and the 1977 defeat in 1980.

It may sound strange that the intelligentsia, apparently highly critical of her, also shares this faith in her capacity. Their criticism is born out of frustrated expectations. They have convinced themselves that she can set things right only if she wants to and they cannot understand why she does not try. This incidentally might explain that while they criticise her, they are not able to actively support another party or individual. Maneka leaves them cold. And so do Atal Bihari Vajpayee, Charan Singh, Morarji Desai, George Fernandes and Raj Narain.

These expectations are, of course, exaggerated and Mrs. Gandhi cannot fulfil them. But she has to begin somewhere and she should be seen to be earnest if she is to check what looks like a drift into political incoherence and confusion. The challenge to her comes not from a Maneka but from the self-serving and incompetent men who have assembled around her. The people want to continue to believe in her but she has to justify their faith in her.

Maneka is still asking for sympathy on the plea that she is a helpless widow who is being pursued and harassed by those in power. But in announcing her decision to form a political party and to contest for the Lok Sabha from Amethi (first Sanjay's and now Rajiv's constituency), she has openly moved into a new political role in which one does not either ask for or extend sympathy.

From Mrs. Gandhi's point of view, this is a helpful development. Maneka could have been more inconvenient if she had maintained the pretence that she was not interested in politics or power and continued to set up more and more Sanjay Vichar Manch units. It looks as if for the first time since she decided to defy Mrs. Gandhi, Maneka has made a false move.

This is not the first time that the impression has spread that Mrs. Gandhi is beginning to lose control and slide down the hill. She has fought back in the past and she can fight back again. Only this time the enemy is within the gate--the corrupt and the dishonourable within the Congress (I)--and not without--in the opposition. This calls for a different battle plan. It remains to be seen whether the veteran warrior can devise such a plan and implement it.

GANDHI ADDRESSES PUBLIC MEETING IN NAGALAND

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Oct 82 p 4

[Text] Dimapur, Nagaland, Oct 21 (UNI)--Prime Minister Indira Gandhi today scoffed at the States following a policy of confrontation with the Centre and termed this tendency as a self-defeating way of political thinking.

Without dwelling on the agitation in Assam or Akali morcha in Punjab, Mrs Gandhi told a public meeting here that when people started "this sort of trouble," the Centre "did not suffer."

Those who suffered most in this "process of bargaining" were the people in general, she said.

The Prime Minister said the past and the modern history of India had negated the notion held by "some people" that confrontation with the Centre would make them stronger or help them serve better.

The Prime Minister said her Government's developmental programmes were designed to ensure a high standard of living for the Nagas and other tribal people for whom "I have a special affection and respect."

The Government endeavoured to broaden the opportunities for the development of their personality and culture, according to their own genius, she said.

Launching the Congress-I campaign for the 10 November elections to the Nagaland Assembly, Mrs Gandhi lauded what she called the courage and dynamism of the Naga people.

She said her Government's efforts were directed towards enabling the Nagas to keep pace with the modern world.

Justifying the larger funds allocation for Nagaland, Mrs Gandhi said it was necessitated by the need to boost the initial development of the backward areas. She asked the Naga people to join the mainstream of national life to enjoy the fruits of development.

Mrs Gandhi said the Centre initiated the 20-point programme aimed at developing the backward tribal areas. It had a special reference to Nagaland, she added.

Earlier, in his welcome address, Nagaland Pradesh Congress-I president S C Jamir said Mrs Gandhi had special affection for the Naga people and therefore she had come to Nagaland on a three-day visit to meet the people, despite her busy schedule both at home and abroad.

Former Chief Minister Hokishe Sema also addressed the meeting.

RAJIV SPEAKS AT CEREMONY FOR SOVIET VISITORS

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 22 Oct 82 p 7

[Text] Lok Sabha Member of Parliament Rajiv Gandhi on Thursday said the Soviet Union was the one country that stood by India at its critical hours.

Speaking at a public reception accorded to a visiting Soviet youth delegation, including folk dancers, by the Delhi Pradesh Youth Congress-I in the Capital, he said the two countries' views were identical on many issues.

The Prime Minister's recent visit to the Soviet Union was a significant contribution towards the strengthening of Indo-Soviet friendship, Mr Gandhi said.

He also pointed out that the Soviet Union had rendered great help to India in the setting up of heavy industries and meeting its defence requirements.

In time of adversity and war too, the Soviets had stood solidly behind the Indian people, Mr Gandhi added.

In his reciprocal address, the Soviet youth delegation leader comrade Anatolai said India as the world's largest democracy and the Soviet Union as the biggest socialist country were committed to respecting each others independence and soverelgnty.

The modern temples of India, the youth leader said, included heavy industrial units including those in Bhilai, Ranchi, Hardwar, Durgapur and Bokaro, built up with Soviet assistance.

The Soviet youth leader called for the need to declare the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, for the safety and welfare of the people of the region.

Peace, he said, was a result of a continuous process, and India and the Soviet Union would work unfailingly to attain it.

The public meeting, attended by a gathering of about 10,000 people according to the police, was followed by a programme of Soviet folk music and dances.

The Soviet Ambassador in India also attended the function.

The visitors were welcomed by Youth Congress-I president Tariq Anwar, Delhi Youth Congress-I president Jagdish Tytler and New Delhi District Youth Congress-I president Rajinder Malik.

GANDHI SPEECH AT NATIONAL INTEGRATION MEETING REPORTED

New Delhi PATRIOT in English 17 Oct 82 pp 1, 7

[Text]

JHANSI (UP), Oct 16 (UNI).

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi today warned that a few mischievous elements were trying to create disorder in the country

"I do not know whether they are being instigated from within or outside the country. But if their actions are allowed to continue unchecked, a dangerous situation may be created," she warned.

She was speaking at the concluding function of the Rani Jhansi Samaroh intended to promote national integration near the historic Jhansi Fort here.

Mrs Gandhi pointed out that India was one country in the world which had never committed aggression. Still, it had to be remembered, Mrs Gandhi said, that our main weakness had been mutual quarrels.

The Prime Minister said it was because of mutual bickerings among the then princely rulers that the country had to remain under foreign domination for long.

Mrs Gandhi said there was no problem which could not be solved peacefully.

She said India had been showing light to the world in the past, "But who will listen to us if there was no peace in the country itself".

She said when the dreadful spectre of a Third World War was looming large, people were still engaged in petty squabble.

Urging the people to sink their minor differences and work for building up a strong country, Mrs Gandhi said: "We should take inspiration from trees which derive their strength from the earth and yet rise towards the sky".

Recalling the valour and sacrifices of Rani Lakshmibai of Jhansi, the Prime Minister said if such functions were to have meaning, "we must create an India which the coming generation would be proud of".

Earlier, Mrs Gandhi laid the foundation stone of a Rs 1.38 crore new building of the Government Museum near the Fort. She also garlanded the statue of Rani Lakshmibai in the nearby garden.

Earlier, Chief Minister Sripati Mishra, while welcoming the Prime Minister, urged the people to boycott mischievous persons who tried to create disorder and disturb communal harmony.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, today ruled out the possibility of a mid-term parliamentary election next year and described all speculation in this regard as ridiculous.

Addressing a press conference here, she said there would be early organisational elections in her party. Asked if she would give up the presidentship of the party and appoint some one as her successor, Mrs. Gandhi replied that the Congress (I) president was not nominated but elected. "He will be elected at the time of organisational poll."

Asked if her son, Mr. Rajiv Gandhi, would be given any status in the organisation, she said she did not know.

Mrs. Gandhi, who arrived here yesterday evening to address the concluding function of the 125th anniversary celebrations of Rani Jhansi's martyrdom and her war of liberation against the British, left for New Delhi soon after the press conference.

When newsmen pointed out that Akali agitators were refusing to leave jails even after orders for their release, she said such agitations damaged national unity and led to mass violence.

To a question whether she would start negotiations with Assam agitators just as she had offered to talk to the Akali agitators, Mrs. Gandhi said she never refused to talk to Assam agitators. The doors for talks were always open.

She was of the view that there was no danger accruing from a legal ban on communal organisation. However, she reiterated that strict action would be taken against communal elements.

The Prime Minister repeated her charge against newspapers that they were being unhelpful in the matter of combating the communal virus. She said she knew at least one newspaper which had helped aggravate the communal riots in Meerut.

Mrs. Gandhi appealed to newspapermen to evolve a code of ethics to safeguard against such tendencies, particularly during the communal incidents.

While her government was not going to formulate any particular policy for the press, she wanted responsible journalism to grow.

GANDHI ADDRESSES INTERNATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION

Madras THE HINDU in English 18 Oct 82 p 9

[Text] New Delhi, Oct. 17.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, said today that the international community must generate moral and political strength to deal effectively with erring countries like Israel and South Africa.

Inaugurating the 19th biennial conference of the International Bar Association here the Prime Minister said "we have just seen, on a limited scale, how a nation (Israel) has given in to vindictiveness and blood-thirst by torturing and murdering innocent human beings trapped in wartorn areas under its occupation."

"Is there to be no law which focuses responsibility on a State in an armed conflict or in an occupied territory", the Prime Minister asked.

Mrs. Gandhi said violation of international norms by any State was of grave concern to the entire world community. No State should be allowed to deny equal rights to the majority of its own inhabitants on grounds of race or colour.

"Yet there is a regime (South Africa) which clings to apartheid and seeks to undermine the sovereign and legally constituted government in its neighbourhood."

There were also more positive aspects of promoting cooperation among States in, for instance, the peaceful uses of the sea, and the beneficial uses of outer space. "We sincerely hope that neither of these will be used for confrontation and conflict", she said.

Lawyers and judges of most countries confined their interest to matters within their nations. "In today's world, increasing thought should be given to the environment of relations between and amongst States and to the future of the human race as a whole."

The world community which does not have the same sort of established and respected laws and judicial institutions as were available within States, was facing a crisis.

Mrs. Gandhi said dispensation of justice must be quick and inexpensive even as it was fair.

The legal community must address itself to the "prodigiously diverse problems" of the country.

Not long ago, courts on the civil side dealt mainly with inheritance disputes which were complicated by a baffling plethora of religious injunctions and social customs. With the growth of modern industry and technology the problems of a traditional developing society were joined by those of advanced industrial societies.

More than 1,000 delegates from developed and developing countries are participating in the conference.
